Millions of men, women and children in every State in the Union are intensely eager to see Official War Pictures. That applies to your community, and your house. In Universal Animated Weekly and Current Events you get all the biggest and latest news pictures every week. THIS MEANS SPOT CASH MONEY TO YOU EVERY WEEK. How can you ignore that money? How can you fail to heed this tremendous demand for war news? Convincing evidence that Exhibitors everywhere are getting the money with U. Animated Weekly and Current Events proven by the growing list of bookings each week. GET IN LINE YOURSELF.

UNIVERSAL FILM MN'FG. CO., Largest Film Mn'fr. Co. in the Universe, CARL LAEMMLE, President, 1600 Broadway, New York.
A competitor's salesmen are telling exhibitors that hereafter the Universal Animated Weekly and the Universal Current events are not to have any official war films and that such war films are to be distributed "exclusively" through the medium of this competitor's exchanges.

This, of course, is a black lie. It should not be necessary to deny it. But unfortunately we have already learned that many exhibitors believe it. To settle the matter, we publish the following extract from a letter received by the Universal from Charles S. Hart, Director of the Division of Films, of the Committee on Public Information.

"Each week beginning the week of June 3rd we will place at your disposal OFFICIAL WAR FILMS that we consider valuable to the news weeklies. You will be charged one dollar per foot for each foot of the film used by you."

The arrangement outlined in Mr. Hart's letter, took effect the week of June 3rd, as stated by Mr. Hart, and so continues. In our news weeklies, we use as much of the war pictures as the exhibitors seem to want, carefully mixing in other interesting news events to avoid giving your public an overdose of "war stuff."

The Universal Animated Weekly and the Universal Current Events always have been and always will be the best in the business. We admit it. They are always first to show important events, whether concerning the war or other things.

We warn exhibitors, for their own good, not to be tricked by lies or half-truths. Our news reels are not seeking to profiteer by means of public interest in the war. We have an "exclusive" contract with the Committee on Public Information to produce and distribute single reel pictures pertaining to the war and "The wonders of our War Work," but at no time have we intended to use it as a club to grab your profits or to make you believe that we had the United States Government tied up in our vest pocket.

We suggest, in conclusion, that any company that lies to you is a dangerous company with which to transact ANY business whatever.

UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING CO.
CARL LAEMMLE, President 1600 Broadway, New York
The largest film manufacturing company in the universe
ONE YEAR ago Goldwyn, then a new company, brought a new vision into the production of motion pictures. We realized then, before our first release, that a change had come over the world.

A change in the minds and hearts of men.

We foresaw many of the things that were going to happen and we applied our foresight to the productions we were making; to the stories we were choosing for the screen.

We said then: "Conflict and circumstances are going to make this a sad world for a time. We must let none of this sadness creep into our pictures. We must make them happy, cheerful, clean. We must make them earnest, sincere—and never morbid."

"We must make our pictures appeal first to the millions of women and children who remain at home. Goldwyn Pictures must enable the home-staying millions to relax; to offset the tear with a smile."

Out of these decisions came, in quick succession, a "Polly of the Circus;" a "Baby Mine;" a "Nearly Married" and "The Danger Game." A "Dodge a Million," "The Cinderella Man;" an "All Woman," a "Thais," "The Venus Model," "The Service Star"—pictures welcomed and applauded throughout the world.

The professionals in motion picture production said: "Your pictures are too light. There isn't enough fire and action in them." A few exhibitors agreed with them at first.

Suddenly exhibitors everywhere realized what Goldwyn was doing and WHY we were doing it. They obtained their revelation through their box-Offices. They found that Goldwyn Pictures brought them new commercial, profit-making values. They saw new faces in their houses.

After years of light matinee-patronage, they discovered that their matinees were now returning a profit.

Goldwyn had not proceeded along the lines of least resistance. We had not made vampire pictures or sex pictures and trailed along in the current with other companies.

We had struck at the hardest problem of the nation's motion picture showmen—how to make the daytime performances pay their own way—and we have succeeded, if the word of 5,148 contract customers has any meaning whatever.

These showmen realized what we were doing. In forty odd States of the American Union mothers or women's organizations have indorsed and stimulated the patronage of Goldwyn Pictures because of their wholesomeness and cheerfulness.

Where we have led for a year others are now following.

Goldwyn is on the eve of its second year.
We are going to make in excess of fifty pictures where in our first year we made twenty-six.

In this second year we have the advantage and good fortune to offer, besides the great popular favorites of our first season, three more stars of tremendous national popularity and appeal.

With GERALDINE FARRAR and PAULINE FREDERICK we will be able to vary and still further strengthen the dramatic intensity of our productions, though we go on record that neither of these famous women will ever do a "vampire" story under the Goldwyn imprint.

Nor will MABEL NORMAND, MAE MARSH or MADGE KENNEDY.

REX BEACH, all of whose future productions Goldwyn will release, is an author whose name is a byword for virility and healthfulness. We will not cater at any time to unhealthy tastes with his good name.

TOM MOORE, our new star, enjoys popularity because of his cheerfulness.

On such foundations we have chosen to build both a present and a future.

Goldwyn is an organization of young men. We are not in a hurry to make profits through decadence or cheap appeals to cheap tastes. We are building well to make a permanent place for ourselves in motion pictures.

That we have treated our exhibitor-customers honorably and fairly is evidenced by the great number we serve and the support we have gained from them is, to use their own words, "because such a company as Goldwyn is building deserves to be sustained and encouraged."

In the coming year, on the basis of clean-cut service, we shall greatly increase the volume of our patronage.

While virtually every large exhibitor in every large city and town, plays Goldwyn Pictures, we also have won the friendship of the small theatre-owners of America. These small theatres are the backbone of the industry. We shall continue to keep them in the forefront of our minds, giving them at equitable and reasonable prices the biggest screen productions as quickly after the initial release dates as possible.

Goldwyn is being built on a ROCK-SOLID basis. Clear-thinking men combining their talents with the talents of great stars, able directors and imaginative technical artists, are by their work and efforts guaranteeing exhibitors a permanent and constantly increasing patronage.

Powerful, clean and cheerful pictures.

We are content to ride to success on such a basis as that.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH,
President.

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION

Here's a comedian who "has everything." He is the hit of the Spring and Summer season—the first new comedian in years who has lasting quality. He is popular from the start. The big houses all over America have booked him. He is wise enough to get real laughter-breeding stories, loads of pretty girls and plenty of variety. He provides speed, action and fun. We know that you do not make a star by keeping his pictures on the shelves of branch offices, so that is why is offered at prices that every exhibitor in America can afford to pay. Four of his comedies have been played and are playing throughout America: "Bill's Baby," "Billy's Predicament," "Birds of a Feather" and "Matching Billy." Eight of these comedies are in all Goldwyn offices for your examination. His next four releases are:

- July 1: "Widow's Might"
- July 29: "Up a Tree"
- July 15: "Dad's Knockout"
- August 12: "Billy's Fortune"

Announcement of the plans of
The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Season of 1918-1919
Beginning Sept. 1, 1918. Ending Aug. 31, 1919

"It is just as important to project the right sort of pictures 'Over Here' as to fire the right sort of cartridges 'Over There.' To the work of helping to keep up the morale of the Americans at home, we dedicate our Organization."

JESSE L. LASKY.
An Essential Wheel in Uncle

These are days when the only industries that can survive are those that have a staunch and definite part in the winning of the War. The producing of motion pictures is one of these. More than a year after the United States entered the War, America’s motion picture industry finds itself stronger, more favored, more necessary than ever before.

The motion picture is in the War to win the War. It has labored faithfully and efficiently for such patriotic movements as the Liberty Loans, the Red Cross, Food Conservation, and Ship Building.

President Wilson himself has publicly thanked the exhibitors for turning over their theatres to Four-Minute Men and for war propaganda. The greatest motion picture stars, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, have toured the nation in the Liberty Loan campaigns. The motion picture has willingly paid hundreds of thousands of dollars in taxes. The exhibitors have opened their doors for war work, but have only just begun their splendid share in the War.

The motion picture’s mightiest task is to keep up the morale of the folks at home. It is the national amusement, filling a national need.

Next Year’s Output—208 Features

Recognizing this national need, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will release in the year beginning September 1st, 1918, two hundred and eight feature pictures, booked on the Star Series plan, which has been such a success in the season just ending. Fifty-two of these features will be re-issues. The others will be new productions, each constructed to meet the demands of the public for war-time amusement. They will be productions to inspire and to entertain.

The 156 new productions will be booked in 23 Star Series groups, and one group of special productions. The 52 pictures of the Success Series (re-issues) will be booked in 9 Star Series groups and one group of specials.

The Success Series is made up of 52 of the finest productions of the last four years, re-edited. New prints and new lithographs will be furnished.

Besides these four weekly releases, all the Arraft Pictures and all the Paramount Pictures of the season of 1917-1918—the first Star Series productions (143 in all)—will be available for initial or rebooked showings.

That we are able to release such a wonderful list of productions from our own and allied studios is due to the genius of Mr. Jesse L. Lasky.

Exhibitor Can Plan For Year

As in the season of 1917-1918, the exhibitor of Paramount and Arraft Pictures will contract for certain stars, not for a program.

The productions of each star will be released at regular intervals so that the exhibitor can arrange his schedule for the entire year. For instance, when an exhibitor signs for the productions of a star who is to appear in eight pictures, the exhibitor will know that these will be released six weeks apart and can plan accordingly.

He can lay out his year’s program and apportion his entire budget at the time he signs his contracts, thus avoiding conflicts.
Sam's Great War Machine

New Paramount and Artcraft Stars

In the year to come, we shall introduce new stars to Paramount and Artcraft exhibitors—stars in whom we have great confidence. They are Fred Stone, John Barrymore, Ethel Clayton, Dorothy Gish, Lila Lee, Shirley Mason and Bryant Washburn. John Emerson and Anita Loos will write and direct a number of star features.

On behalf of the organization I wish to acknowledge the splendid cooperation extended us by Mr. Thomas H. Ince, who will continue to produce the sort of features that have made his name a guarantee of excellence to exhibitor and public.

The Finest Short Subjects

Not satisfied to furnish only the finest feature photoplays, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation leads in the distribution of short subjects—a very vital part of every motion picture entertainment.

The greatest comedies ever offered, greatest in variety as well as in quality, are ready for the Paramount and Artcraft exhibitors. Mack Sennett will make 26 of his remarkable comedies for release in the year to come. “Fatty” Arbuckle will produce 10 avalanches of laughter in 12 months. For the first time, for Paramount and Artcraft exhibitors, the new James Montgomery Flagg comedies—16 of them—will be available. These will give the exhibitors one two-reel comedy release each week.

The Paramount-Bray Pictographs will open up a new field of novelty entertainment in the theatres. The Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures will bring to America the battle-torn fields of France; Travel Pictures that Mr. Holmes is now taking in the War zone. These one-reel pictures are increasing each week in popularity and box office value.

The Greatest Year Of All

We have pledged ourselves to produce only motion pictures that will make Americans become better Americans, and we shall keep that promise. In the year to come the public will need more than ever the constructive stimulus that only fine motion pictures can give.

Our efforts to maintain a better merchandising service for the exhibitor have met with immediate success. Our National Advertising has built a clientele of new patrons for every exhibitor of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures. In the year to come we shall increase by many thousands the number of regular patrons of theatres that show Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

The quality of our pictures has grown even faster than the quantity. We all owe a great debt to the men and women who have toiled so faithfully to improve this quality—the stars, the directors, the writers. Without these artists, there could be no motion picture as it is today.

Our entire organization is dedicated to two purposes—to help keep up the spirit of America, and to perpetuate the art of motion pictures.

The motion picture has established itself. Ahead of us is the greatest year of all; great, not for what the country will do for the motion picture, but for what the motion picture will do for the country.

ARTCRAFT Pictures

SERIES OF 1918-1919— Eight New Artcraft Productions

THOMAS H. INCE plans another wonderful year for this remarkable star who has developed a world-wide following. There is something of the art of Remington in William S. Hart's pictures, something of the human interest of Bret Harte; but unmistakably there is the dominating bigness of William S. Hart himself.

The new William S. Hart pictures will be released at intervals of six weeks.

NOW BOOKING—William S. Hart's eight Star Series Artcraft Pictures of the season just ending:

"The Narrow Trail"  "The Tiger Man"
"The Silent Man"     "Selfish Yates"
"Wolves of the Rail" "Shark Monroe"
"Blue Blazes Rawden" "Riddle Gawne"
SERIES of 1918-1919.—Mary Pickford’s first two pictures for the new year have been completed. Each is of the quality that guarantees even greater popularity for this remarkable artist. Her first new release will be adapted from “Captain Kidd, Jr.,” a comedy which played an entire season on Broadway. This tale of adventure in search of treasure should be a howling success. The second new release will be Rupert Hughes’ “The Mobilization of Johann,” a play of laughs and tears.

NOW BOOKING—Mary Pickford’s eleven Star Series Artcraft Pictures for the season just ending:

“Less Than the Dust”
“Pride of the Clan”
“A Poor Little Rich Girl”
“A Romance of the Redwoods” “Amarilly of Clothesline Alley”
“How Could You, Jean?”

“The Little American”
“Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm”
“The Little Princess”
“Stella Maris” “M’liss”
Fred Stone Productions

ARTCRAFT Pictures

SERIES of 1918-1919 — Three Artcraft Pictures

Fred Stone’s debut in motion pictures unquestionably will be one of the most interesting events of the fall season. Mr. Stone is the pre-eminent star of musical comedy—a comedian of rare skill, an acrobatic genius who is known as “the man who can do any stunt better than it ever was done before.”

Mr. Stone’s latest success is “Jack o’ Lantern.” He has appeared in recent years in the team of Montgomery & Stone in “The Wizard of Oz,” “The Red Mill,” “The Old Town,” “The Lady of the Slipper” and “Chin Chin.” Each year Fred Stone’s musical comedy is the musical comedy of the year. A great pantomimic artist—all America remembers his “Scarecrow” in “The Wizard of Oz”—Mr. Stone will be a sensation in motion pictures.

His first picture, “Under the Top,” is a circus story by John Emerson and Anita Loos. Mr. Stone’s early life was spent as a circus performer and the part will be “made to order” for his comedy and his “stunts.”

The second Fred Stone picture will be “Johnny Get Your Gun,” a comedy which had a long run on Broadway and which toured the country, playing to big business.

Fred Stone’s Artcraft Pictures will be released at intervals of seventeen weeks.
Paramount and Artcraft Specials

Series of 1918-1919—Nine New Special Productions, Booked in a Single Group

THE Paramount and Artcraft Special productions for the next year will comprise a series of pictures of the type usually classified as "something unusually big."

Throughout the year the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will produce important features not classified in the Star Series. A big war picture, a production with a great star who is available for only one picture, a film adaptation of a super novel or of a play of enormous popularity—these are the types of pictures that will be exhibited as Paramount and Artcraft Specials. Each picture will be "special" in money power as well as in quality.

The first two specials will be "The Silver King" and "Private Peat."

"The Silver King" is a huge production of the famous drama by Henry Arthur Jones, first produced in London in 1883 and played all over the world by eminent stars.

"Private Peat" will be a war-story of Americans in battle in which "Private" Peat himself—the famous soldier, lecturer, and author, who was "two years in hell and came back with a smile"—will play the leading role.

The nine Paramount and Artcraft Specials will be released at intervals of six weeks.
John Barrymore Productions

SERIES OF 1918-1919—Four New Paramount Pictures

John Barrymore's return to Paramount Pictures will cause great rejoicing among exhibitors, for the work of this young actor on the stage in the last three years has established him as one of America's truly great actors and has made him a mighty drawing card wherever plays are seen or discussed. His characterizations in "The Fortune Hunter," "Justice," and "Peter Ibbetson" have been classed among those preserving the finest traditions of the American stage.

John Barrymore's first new Paramount Picture will be "On the Quiet," played on the stage with great success by William Collier.

The second John Barrymore picture will be "Something To Do," a detective comedy by Maximilian Foster.

The new John Barrymore pictures will be released at intervals of thirteen weeks.

SUCCESS SERIES—Four re-issues of John Barrymore's earlier Paramount Pictures:

"The Man from Mexico"  "The Dictator"
"Are You a Mason?"  "The Lost Bridegroom"
Enid Bennett Productions

SERIES of 1918-1919— Eight New Paramount Pictures

The popularity of this charming Thomas H. Ince star has grown tremendously with each of her releases. Her new productions will continue to present this appealing young actress in the same sort of novel comedy dramas that have made her such a drawing card.

Enid Bennett's new Paramount Pictures will be released at intervals of six weeks.

NOW BOOKING—Enid Bennett's six Star Series Paramount Pictures for the season just ending:

"Keys of the Righteous"  "A Desert Wooing"
"Naughty, Naughty"  "The Vamp"
"The Biggest Show on Earth"  "Coals of Fire"
Billie Burke Productions
By arrangement with F. Ziegfeld, Jr.

SERIES OF 1918-1919—Two New Paramount Pictures

The success of Billie Burke's recent release "Let's Get a Divorce," has proved that the photoplay-goers will crowd the theatre to see Billie Burke in farce-comedy. This type of vehicle will be provided for Miss Burke's new productions.

The first new Billie Burke picture will be a play by Edward Childs Carpenter, author of "The Cinderella Man" and "The Three Bears."

Billie Burke's new Paramount Pictures will be released at intervals of six months.

SERIES OF 1918-1919—Seven Paramount Pictures

EXHIBITORS who have seen D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" need only to be told that this famous D. W. Griffith artiste will bring into Paramount Pictures the same sort of a character she played in "Hearts of the World." That is sufficient guarantee of the money power of her new productions. Dorothy Gish, as the saucy little French street singer, scores the big hit of "Hearts of the World." She will be as great in her productions for Paramount Pictures as she is in Mr. Griffith's great war picture.

The new Dorothy Gish pictures will be released at intervals of seven weeks
Lila Lee Productions

SERIES OF 1918-1919 — Eight Paramount Pictures

For more than two years Jesse L. Lasky has believed that, given a young woman of unusual beauty, intelligence, and natural charm, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation’s extraordinary resources for photoplay production and exploitation could develop this natural talent and make her a star of unusual popularity.

He has found the young woman in Lila Lee, who was made a Paramount star after tests equal in thoroughness to those a star would experience in two five-reel productions.

Lila Lee is only 14 years old but has all the grace and endowments of a Miss of 18. She is dark, with beautiful black hair and eyes, and a lithe figure. She has had six years’ experience in vaudeville, being featured throughout the country as "Cuddles."

Her first picture will be Tom Gallon’s famous story “The Cruise of the Make-Believe.” Her second will be a pirate comedy-drama by James Oliver Curwood.

An immense publicity campaign will introduce Lila Lee to the motion picture patrons of America.

Lila Lee’s new Paramount Pictures will be released at intervals of six weeks
Vivian Martin Productions

SERIES OF 1918-1919—Eight New Paramount Pictures

VIVIAN MARTIN starts the new year securely established in the hearts of motion picture patrons as one of the most charming and delightful of the younger stars. Her plays for the new year will continue to be of the same high quality and appeal that made her such a drawing card in the year that is closing.

Her new Paramount Pictures will be released at intervals of six weeks.

NOW BOOKING—Vivian Martin's eight Star Series Paramount Pictures for the season just ending:

"Little Miss Optimist"
"The Sunset Trail"
"The Trouble Buster"
"Mollie Entangled"

"The Fair Barbarian"
"A Petticoat Pilot"
"Unclaimed Goods"
"Viviette"
Shirley Mason Productions

SERIES OF 1918-1919— Eight Paramount Pictures

SHIRLEY MASON'S youth and beauty and her excellent reputation as an actress, make her especially welcome to Paramount exhibitors. Miss Mason is only 17 years old but she has been on the stage since a child. In pictures, she has been starred in "The Seven Deadly Sins," "The Little Chevalier," "The Apple-tree Girl," "The Awakening of Ruth" and others.

John Emerson and Anita Loos will introduce Shirley Mason to Paramount exhibitors. She will appear in their first special production "Come On In," a patriotic comedy of the training camps.

Ernest Truex, known everywhere for his work as "Eddie" in "Very Good, Eddie" and "The Very Idea," will be the co-star in Miss Mason's first picture.

Shirley Mason's new Paramount Pictures will be released at intervals of six weeks.

Paramount Pictures

SERIES of 1918-1919—Eight New Paramount Pictures

THOMAS H. INCE'S wonderful young man will "keep on going" in the year to come. That is all that exhibitors want to know about this star, who is a year-round box office attraction of the nth power.

The new Charles Ray Paramount Pictures will be released at intervals of six weeks.

NOW BOOKING—Charles Ray's eight Star Series Paramount Pictures for the season just ending:

"The Son of His Father"  "His Own Home Town"
"His Mother's Boy"  "Playing the Game"
"The Hired Man"  "The Claws of the Hun"
"The Family Skeleton"  "A Nine O'Clock Town"
Wallace Reid Productions

SERIES OF 1918-1919—Eight New Paramount Pictures

Wallace Reid has a tight hold on the millions of motion picture fans who like to see a first rate young American in light, modern dramas. His plays for the coming year will be modern stories, just the sort that have made Wallace Reid’s name a business-getter. His first new production will be “The Source.”

Wallace Reid’s new Paramount Pictures will be released at intervals of six weeks.

NOW BOOKING—Wallace Reid’s seven Star Series Paramount Pictures for the season just ending:

“The Hostage”

“The Thing We Love”

“Nan of Music Mountain”

“The House of Silence”

“Rimrock Jones”

“Believe Me, Xantippe”

“Less Than Kin”
Bryant Washburn Productions

SERIES of 1918-1919—Eight Paramount Pictures

BRYANT WASHBURN brings to Paramount Pictures, youth, good looks, a genial disposition and a mastery of the art of light comedy. His following is great and will steadily increase with his appearance in Famous Players-Lasky Corporation productions. He will be given better stories than ever before, better direction and much more costly productions.

Bryant Washburn's Paramount Pictures will be box office triumphs.

His Paramount Pictures will be released at intervals of six weeks.
John Emerson-Anita Loos Productions

John Emerson and Anita Loos are more than directors and scenario writers. They are artists who have developed a new sort of motion picture comedy-drama—the motion picture that doesn’t take itself too darned seriously, the motion picture that speaks your language, that gives you a glow of good humor, that genially slaps you on the back, says “Look here! This is a bully story!” and proceeds to tell it to you.

John Emerson and Anita Loos are responsible for Douglas Fairbanks’ rollicking tales, “Down to Earth,” “Reaching for the Moon,” “The Man from Painted Post,” “Wild and Woolly,” and “In Again, Out Again.” They adapted “Hit-the-Trail Holliday” for George M. Cohan, and “Let’s Get a Divorce” for Billie Burke.

Their new productions will be made for several different stars. They will produce the first Shirley Mason pictures and have just completed the first Fred Stone story.

The names “John Emerson and Anita Loos” mean a great deal to exhibitor and to motion picture patron. Their new productions will be eagerly sought, for rare indeed is the exhibitor who hasn’t been asked “when will you show another of those John Emerson-Anita Loos pictures—the ones with the funny stunts and the gingery sub-titles?”

"A Reckless Romeo"  "A Country Hero"
"The Rough House"  "Out West"
"His Wedding Night"  "The Bell Boy"
"Oh, Doctor"  "Moonshine"

"Good Night Nurse!"
Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedies

SEASON OF 1918-1919—Twenty-six New Mack Sennett Comedies

MACK SENNETT will keep 'em coming. That’s all the exhibitor wants to know. This wonderful genius of the roaring laugh, the inspiration of a billion gaspy thrills, is at it with more pep than ever.

From the Mack Sennett studios will continue to come the comedies that have made him what he is today in the eyes of fifty million Americans who would rather laugh than cry. Pretty girls, burlesque, thrills, animal stunts—a joyous stew of gurgling glee.

The new Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedies will be released at intervals of two weeks, in the Paramount schedule of fifty-two comedies a year.

NOW BOOKING—the Mack Sennett comedies of the season of 1917-1918:

“A Bedroom Blunder”  “It Pays to Exercise”

“Those Athletic Girls”
James Montgomery Flagg Comedies

SEASON OF 1918-1919
Sixteen James Montgomery Flagg Comedies

James Montgomery Flagg, famous artist and writer, has brought a new kind of comedy into motion pictures. He has taken "people you know," pretty girls and their friends, and in a rollicking spirit has good humoredly made their little problems a laughing matter.

"Sweethearts and Wives" is the title of the new series of comedies which are produced by Jack Eaton and Eltinge F. Warner. "It's Greek to Us" is the first and the second is "Romance in Brass Tacks." Martin Justice, who directed the O. Henry Pictures, is directing these comedies.

They're going to bring a new kind of laugh into your theatre, giving just the kind of "something different" that the exhibitor needs in his comedy schedule.

The new James Montgomery Flagg comedies will be released at intervals of three weeks, in the Paramount schedule of fifty-two comedies a year.
Paramount-Bray Pictographs

SEASON OF 1918-1919—Fifty-two Bray Pictographs

PARAMOUNT-BRAY PICTOGRAPHS, the greatest of all novelty subjects, fill a genuine need in every moving picture theatre. These weekly one-reel releases—"The Magazine on the Screen"—show topics of national interest, cartoon comedies and news events, forming attractions that bring added business to every theatre that advertises them regularly.

In the new year the Bray Pictographs will devote a great deal of time to subjects dealing vitally with the War.

Paramount-Burton Holmes
Travel Pictures

SEASON OF 1918-1919
Fifty-two Burton Holmes Travel Pictures

BURTON HOLMES is known everywhere for his wonderful Travel Pictures. Into his subjects he always gets more than mere beauty; he takes his audiences into foreign lands and introduces them to the people, showing not only what they do, but how and why they do it.

Mr. Holmes is now taking pictures on the battlefields of France. His new releases will bring to America the pictorial story of just what terrible changes the War has made in France.

THIS EXHIBITOR USES DISCRETION
IN ADVERTISING

There is an exhibitor in the State of Illinois who knows how to advertise. He's made an enormous success of his theater through proper publicity. And yet, his advertising is not blatant, strident or boisterous. In fact he's caged the superlatives that other exhibitors have permitted to run wild through the jungles of exploitation. With simple sincerity, with telling force, with confidential earnestness, he brings the message of his pictures, his service and his ideals to the public. The public believes him. It has faith in him. It responds.

This man, although he is one of the cleverest writers and originators of publicity in the field, knows why his theater is so highly trusted by the public and so successful at the box office. He frankly states that all of his clever publicity would be a failure without pictures which are consistently pleasing; pictures that are clean, wholesome, original, well-acted and artistic. Triangle is very proud to be the organization which serves this gentleman. And he is well satisfied with the success he has achieved with Triangle pictures.

He is paying the modest prices for Triangle features which are so much more attractive than those asked for films of a grade often very much more inferior. His service is standardized on a healthy basis. He receives his shipments always on time, through the efficiency of the Triangle Traffic Department, and his advertising and promotion activities are admirably foreseen and ably assisted by the advertising bureau.

Thousands of exhibitors are steadily forging ahead in the estimation of picture patrons through the showing of Triangle pictures. Why not consider Triangle? Any of our exchanges can give you some very interesting information on service.

Important to Exhibitors who run
“PERSHING’S CRUSADERS”

In placing its first war film feature in the hands of the regular exhibitor instead of exhibiting it through other channels, the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, George Creel, Chairman, has paid the exhibitors of America a high compliment. In return for the confidence reposed in us we must exploit this memorable subject with the dignity and thoroughness to which it is entitled.

We have permission to use the Government’s name as producer in our advertising and publicity. We must see that this privilege is not abused by misleading statements—either direct or indirect—which will give the impression that the Government is responsible, or in any way connected with the actual exhibition of the picture.

The Division of Films has issued or approved complete advertising and publicity campaign copy which will cover all requirements. It will be available at First National Exchanges. For any other matter issued in connection with the exploitation of the film each exhibitor will have to accept full responsibility.

The Committee on Public Information has thousands of eyes which will be on the lookout for cases where ill-advised or misleading publicity is used. Should we exhibitors prove unworthy the trust reposed in us we may expect future Government features to reach the public in halls, churches or other publicly controlled meeting places.

As American Citizens
we have been entrusted with an important public work.

Haworth Pictures

Corporation announces the eminent Japanese actor, Sessue Hayakawa, in a series of eight five and six part motion picture productions of imposing splendor.

The Haworth organization has been formed for the special purpose of presenting to the motion picture theatre a highly developed and specialized product aimed to meet the strenuously competitive conditions of the day and to enable the theatre to anticipate the strides of the rapidly improving public taste in photoplay art.

Haworth Pictures Corporation, with ample resources and a single definite purpose, is pledged to the achievement of a product of the highest box office value.

Available at All Mutual Film Exchanges

is a star of stars, as conceded by every critic of standing and authority. His mastery of his art is complete, finished, refined to a degree, which sets him apart among those of the upper rank of screen value.

Every aid and every precaution has been given and provided to bring all of this remarkable value to the screen in the terms of box office value in the production of the Haworth Pictures Corporation.

Two directors will give their undivided time to the making of these eight productions. William Worthington and James Young will alternate on the pictures, insuring the time and latitude necessary for absolute perfection of story and picture.
The first two productions on the Haworth Pictures Corporation schedule of Hayakawa specials are:

"HIS BIRTHRIGHT"

"THE TEMPLE OF DUSK"

Both are productions chosen after months of careful consideration of dramatic material and the conditions which the motion picture theatre faces to-day. Increasingly high value must be delivered to the public. The Hayakawa pictures contain that value.

These productions, eight in all, will be available beginning September 1, for pre-release and at intervals of six or eight weeks.

Special arrangements for pre-release runs will be made with first run theatres in larger centers.

Terms outlined on application. Ask the Haworth representative or the Mutual Film Corporation's exchange manager.
They Mean Something—

these annual CONVENTION NUMBERS of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD

NOT merely for the purpose of influencing additional advertising expenditures—not merely for the purpose of reflecting more glory upon itself, but with the sole and studied idea of reviewing in detail and with real interest some particular phase of the development of the moving picture industry, the MOVING PICTURE WORLD once a year publishes a Special Edition.

For the benefit of its readers it exerts its very best efforts along this one particular line. Its legion of friends, from all corners of the world and representing every branch of the industry, cooperate in the preparation of an attractive budget of invaluable information calculated to mark another milestone in the progress of the moving picture business.

Picture people everywhere wait for this issue. It is not thumbed over casually, but every line in it is read—and read by the representative people in the trade who carefully consider every detail—both in text and advertising copy—which is brought to their attention.

In Answering Advertisements, Please Mention THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD!...
Facts and Comments

Welcome to Mr. Black. We do not know just what his official status with relation to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is, but he is the first to come out of that camp with a flag of truce in the matter of amalgamation of the two exhibitor organizations. Mr. Black's letter, which is an answer to previous letters printed by Frank Rembusch, appears on another page. Our readers will form their own conclusions regarding it. Our opinion is that while it shows that a unified organization is uppermost in Mr. Black's mind, it does not show that he has a proper grasp of the situation. We take it that Mr. Black knows what was the cause of the split at Chicago. He must also know that he cannot expect the men who left the National League at that time as a protest against certain abuses to return to the old organization until it has purged itself of the evils complained of. When that has been accomplished then an appeal such as Mr. Black makes will be in order.

Unique in the records of the doings of War Trade Boards comes the report, the authenticity of which we cannot vouch for, that the British Board of Trade has passed its restrictions upon shipments of films upon the belief that a reel of film was equal in dimensions to the picture shown upon the screen, approximately 12 feet by 18 feet, and consequently would take up much cargo space. Ultimately, it is said, when the board learned that a reel of film was little larger than a spool of cotton the restriction was materially modified.

Owing to a change of the date of publication of one of our contemporaries the Moving Picture World now enjoys the advantage of being the first paper in the trade to reach its readers each week. Mail on Wednesday of every week gives each copy sufficient time to reach all subscribers living east of the Mississippi river by Saturday, provided the dispatch of mail matter is not delayed in transmission. Papers published later in the week cannot reach their subscribers much before Monday of the following week in the same territory. Manufacturers who desire to get their announcements out at the earliest possible moment will recognize the advantage of using the pages of the Moving Picture World for that purpose. Likewise exhibitors who want the earliest possible information will be quick to see the advantage which the World affords. The Moving Picture World is first out. Buy it.

While the action of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in refusing to take part in the motion picture exposition at Boston may put something in the nature of a damper on that enterprise, the event is not to be abandoned. New England is fruitful territory and worth cultivating by picture men, and even though the N. A. M. P. I. may not officially take part in the Boston show there is nothing in that action to prevent any manufacturer or accessory dealer from exploiting his wares in any way he may see fit. New England exhibitors will be out in force. Go over and make their acquaintance. The Moving Picture World will be there.

Anyone acquainted with the rudiments of taxation knows that any effort to tax the working capital of an industry in such a manner that the tax cannot be passed on to the consumer must fail. This is a fact that was recognized long ago so that no one nowadays even imagines that anyone other than the ultimate consumer will pay the tax. Therefore, it makes little difference how the Congressional Ways and Means Committee, of which Representative Kitchin is chairman, shall levy the new war tax against the motion picture industry, it will be paid by increased admissions to picture theaters. The point to be considered is how it can be assessed so that it may be collected surely, effectively and with the greatest ease. It is up to the leaders of the industry who have constituted themselves its spokesmen to show the members of the Ways and Means Committee the easiest way to lay the tax equitably. If the report of the session some picturmen had with that committee at Washington is accurate it is evident that nothing definite along that line has yet been accomplished.
On Having Some Obvious Design

By LOUIS REEVES HARRISON.

PEOPLE think what they please and believe what they like. The question of suitability is largely one of understanding human nature. Most of them are busy doing the best they can with what comes their way. They may turn aside from looking out for number one when some great cause calls them, but behind the inner sentiment and below it is the idea of doing something to get along in the world, some pet scheme nearly always working, a struggle on hand which has some end in view.

Of such material the moving-picture audience is made.

People feel the necessity of definite purpose.

It is not required that we should reason with them about it.

That feeling keeps them going in spite of difficulties and set-backs of every kind. It stiffens the will to carry out plans in the face of bitter discouragement. It is often the mother of hope, one of the human traits so common as to be almost universal.

Size up human nature, and you will know what the audience likes.

In this latitude growth starts with springtime. Rains come and nourish it with dampened earth. The sun creeps north until it warms all sides of that growth, stimulating and encouraging it during its infancy. People may growl about the weather, but they know the planets will keep serenely along in their spheres, and nature will bring forth the food we enjoy. We silently recognize that there is design in it all, all that growth is destined to serve some purpose.

On that subject, at least, there is united opinion.

The audience mind is made up in advance on that subject.

Any entertainment intended for that audience should take into consideration and provide for its mental enjoyment. People are not made comfortable and happy either by what jars common sense, or by what starts out promisingly for some destination of live interest, dribbles along through four or five reels, and lands at nowhere in particular. Such is the quality of screen product which moves on wheels and is known by its uses as a "vehicle."

A writer of vehicles recently made an astounding discovery. He saw the name of the author of "Damaged Goods" and found out that Brieux was not a certain kind of imperial cheese, as he had long suspected.

He also thinks that Ibsen’s plays are timely.

Oh, shades of “Uncle Tom’s Cabin” and “East Lynne”!

Ibsen carried forward the drama of definite purpose by facing the facts of his time. He wrote of what he knew in his age and place. He took the materials at hand, diverse, or only partly related, and organized them in story form to some forceful end, suited to what his people were thinking about, in accord with their mood. Life is at this moment violently in process of change, and it is for our dramatists to face our facts, rearrange them, as Ibsen did, in story form entertaining to the mentality of our audiences because of some obvious design.

There are many forces concentrated on a feature film.

Throughout the entire range of its pictorial development there are many and varied instruments brought into play for a definite purpose, that of giving the drama all the energy and beauty they can contribute. What a vain effort, if the drama itself is purposeless! In this may be found the secret of so many failures, and the man who pretends there are none has stuck his head in the sand.

No folly is committed when he cannot see it.

We have the future to think about as well as the present.

Very rapidly there is coming about a closer touch with certain European nations, a better understanding of them, an elimination of social boundary lines, the finest ideals of our democracy looming up in world importance. Besides this intermingling of thought and feeling, bound to affect our drama and the market for what we produce, we are confronted with a nationalization of industries and a centralizing of control almost bewildering in its effect. There is obvious design in it all, and so there must be in the entertainment people will think about and talk about, the new drama of the screen.

A Test of Service

By EDWARD WEITZEL.

On March 31 one of the leading producing companies released a screen version of a poetic play written by one of the greatest living poets. The reviews in the trade papers and in the New York daily press were all highly commended. A publication which runs a department devoted to exhibitors’ box office reports clasped the picture editorially as “a splendid, complete and finished product, the art of the motion picture,” and closed with the prediction that it “will now delight the eyes and elevate the hearts of the whole world’s millions.”

In its issue of June 15 this same publication published twelve exhibitors’ comments on the picture. Five of these comments were from a financial point of view, favorable; seven were decidedly unfavorable. The following issue, dated June 22, printed three exhibitors’ comments on the same picture and all were financially unfavorable. The box office report credited the picture with doing average business.

On April 1 the same producing company released a feature picture starring one of the most prominent actors of the screen. The exhibitors’ comments on this picture printed in the June 15 issue of the publication in question numbered eleven, three being artistically favorable and eight artistically unfavorable. The box office report credited the picture with doing big business. The June 22 issue of the same publication contained six exhibitors’ comments, two artistically favorable and four artistically unfavorable, and the picture was still credited with doing big business.

Rather a small percentage of opinions to use as an intelligent estimate of the picture’s artistic merits. It is evident that very few exhibitors have any interest in, or place any reliance on, this sort of service.

Inquiry at the office of the company which releases the two pictures discloses the pleasant information that the first picture has proved a financial as well as an artistic success and is attracting not only the regular screen patrons but an element that commonly does not attend the moving picture theater.

Applying the Test.

There’s something wrong here: the three viewpoints do not agree.

The exhibitors’ box office reports and comments are proclaimed by their publisher as an invaluable service to all managers of moving picture houses. How to give this proof is a bit puzzling. To begin with, something over two hundred exhibitors have shown these pictures since they were first released. It is difficult to understand how the opinions of a dozen or so of this number can truthfully reflect the opinions and the amount of business done by the remaining two hundred and odd.

If the exhibitor is guided by the editorial opinion of the publication referred to he has been given an opportunity to treat his patrons to one of the finest achievements of the screen, one that is in direct line to the expansion and refinement of this community. If the experience of the producing company will assist the exhibitor he may learn that the larger portion of the managers who have shown the picture have reaped large financial and artistic benefit and consider this photoplay a piece of constructive booking of the greatest value. If the comments and the reports of twelve managers out of two hundred are a safe guide the exhibitor has a fifty-fifty choice between "Wonderful picture. Big Business" and "Average person didn't care for this."

Time spent in trying to figure out the advisability of running a picture by the aid of such a system is time wasted. With all the returns in, it would still be up to the showmanship of the exhibitor to decide this matter. Knowing the class of picture, the taste of his patrons and the nature of the campaign such a picture demands the real exhibitor need trouble himself very little about what any one else did with it. If he understands showmanship he'll make up his mind for himself; if he doesn't the reports of other exhibitors, ranging from favorable to most unfavorable, will not help him in the least to determine what the picture will be worth to him.

There is no easy road to success in the amusement world. No reviewer or exhibitor's report can tell the manager of a theatre how to run his business. Hard work, hard common sense and a thorough grasp of his individual problems constitute the kind of service his business requires.

Views of Two Storymakers

A RECENT article by George Middleton in the Dramatic Mirror, "The Dramatist and the Motion Picture," is a calm and thoughtful expression of opinion from a playwright whose achievement for the spoken stage gives weight to his words. Most of the article deals with the compensation question. One sentence points out an artistic defect in construction that the dramatist is continually finding in moving pictures: "Most pictures tire because the narrative is employed at the expense of the suspense—which is inevitably the first aim of the playwright." This is merely another way of saying that where such treatment of the picture occurs the author and the continuity writer have turned out a screen novel and not a photodrama. The sooner general recognition is given to these two distinct forms of story telling the better for the moving picture. Some plots, from the very nature of their material and the chance for scenic display, demand the novel method of treatment; others require the vital, objective method of reproducing life that is the soul of real drama. Applying the word photoplay to all screen fiction is a mistake that needs rectifying. Here is a fine opportunity to utilize a little of the broad vision of which we hear so much.

Rex Beach defines the making of motion pictures as "a publishing business in a new form with a dash of showmanship thrown in to make it harder." Considerably more than a dash is necessary, neighbor Beach. Showmanship must direct every move in the growth of a picture from its inception until it reaches the screen—if it is to prove a financial success. Both George Middle-

\[ \text{ton and Rex Beach are of one mind as to the importance of the skilled dramatist to the film producer, and the author of "Polly with a Past" is positive that the author of a screen story should be consulted before the scenario editor and the continuity writer makes changes in his script. Quite right—if the author has mastered the art of showmanship! Nine times out of ten he hasn't; but if he has it will be apparent in his work, and no sane producer who knows his business is going to permit a valuable piece of property to be altered at the expense of its money making qualities. That would be bad showmanship and showmanship is founded on good business principles.} \]

\[ \textbf{Why Some Comedies Fail} \]

\textbf{By Robert C. McElravy.}

It is a valuable thing to know why certain comedies prove successful, but even more valuable in a way to know just what it is that causes others to miss fire. Practically the same amount of time and energy, to say nothing of money, is spent on the failures as is spent on the successes, but the box office receipts are, of course, a decidedly different matter.

Studying successes will teach producers and performers a great deal, but it is just as valuable to study the failures. Successful humor is the most evasive thing in the world; it is so subtle that it might almost be said to "sneak up" on you. It sets you to laughing almost before you are aware of it. And when you plan to produce something equally funny you find that the methods employed have escaped you.

One cannot always put his finger on the intangible beginnings of successful humor, but he can generally locate the beginnings of failure. For, in the presence of an expectant audience, it may safely be said that any clean-cut, swiftly-moving comedy is a success until something happens that throws it "off the key." In other words, the audience is with you, heart and soul, until you begin to offend it. When you do this, you have placed an obstacle in your path. The comedy may yet be saved, but once the laughter has died down, it is hard to bring it back again.

Comedies have failed over and over again on the screen for practically the same reasons. Some directors see to it that the reasons are not repeated in their next attempts, but others seem unable to profit by first mistakes and keep on repeating them.

The average comedy that fails of its purpose, which is to bring laughter, is apt to show a careless disregard for past experience, or to give evidence that the scenes had been literally slammed together on a mere chance that they might turn out well. Unfortunately enough, an occasional picture produced in this way does bring the desired laughter, and directors and performers no doubt get an idea that the making of comedies is all a gamble. There is an undoubted element of chance, but we do not believe it is so great as this course would indicate.

What kills comedies?

We saw one the other day in which a tiny baby appeared. The hero, a young man in a hurry, juggled the baby on his knee until it cried. The action was unnecessary on the hero's part, and people stopped laughing to sympathize with the baby. This might have passed without notice, but in every scene the baby appeared in thereafter it was rough-handled and cried! There was deliberate misuse of good material—one or two smiles from a baby will often bring success to a comedy, but a constantly crying baby immediately excites pity and so spoils the humor. This is an old offense.

A too obvious attempt to get a humorous effect is also a common fault. When a performer comes out in a self-conscious way and his every move says, "I am going to be funny or kill myself in the attempt," he nearly always fails. We saw a case not long since where a well-known performer, who has won repeated success on the stage, did this very thing. He went through two reels of perspiring acrobatics, running, jumping, falling down and doing everything he could think of to be funny, and all without perceptible effect on the audience. He was apparently oblivious to the fact that there is a certain technique in even this knockabout style of comedy that is not to be picked up in a day. Chaplin does all these things, but never in a meaningless, unthinking way.

Many comedies fail because they are based on an idea that is not essentially humorous, and cannot possibly be made so. This is perhaps the saddest mistake of all, for it means an utterly useless expenditure of energy.

Humor is a shy thing and does not mingle with the grosser emotions, except in the hands of a master. It alternates well with simple pathos, but it will not blend easily with heavy drama, or tragedy, or pronounced sex interest. The latter most often intrudes upon the field of comedy, for some producers have the idea that there is something innately funny about sex appeal. As a matter of fact it will slow up a comedy almost every time, even without descending to absolute vulgarity.

A successful comedy does not demand a big idea, but it does demand plenty of natural, unforced action and a freedom from the unpleasant, the sordid, the tragic or anything else that sets the deeper emotions into play.

Organization Needed More Than Ever

By SAM SPEDON.

WHATEVER the reason, there seems to be a lack of co-operation in organizations of the motion picture industry just at this time, when it is needed most. Never has organization accomplished so much as it has during the past year and it is a pity that it should in any way diminish now. You would think that the battle won would inspire all those who have benefited by them to stand by their leaders and rally round the standard that means ultimate victory and success. On the contrary, it seems to encourage the rank and file to become indifferent or feel secure in the assurance that those who have borne the brunt of the battle are able to continue it without their assistance, while they stay comfortably at home and enjoy the fruits of victory, regardless of the sacrifices that are being made. They console themselves by saying “if it didn’t benefit them they wouldn’t do it and they can afford to make a sacrifice better than I.” A poor excuse is better than none, and this is none. It is a cheap way to avoid responsibility.

Organization has made an impression with legislators all over the country and the power of organization has made itself felt. It would be worse than suicidal to neglect or depreciate it in any way just now. We need national organization, we need state and we need local organization more than ever. If we don’t support it we will have increased legislative troubles to encounter this coming fall. If it is impossible for all members to attend their conventions and meetings, they can at least contribute their dues towards defraying expenses and assisting those who are gaining benefits for them.

Famous Players Holds Western Convention

Pacific Coast and Rocky Mountains Districts Send Officers for Conference in San Francisco.

THE first convention of the executives, assistants and salesmen of the eighth and ninth districts comprising the Pacific Coast and Rocky Mountain territories of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was held at the San Francisco offices of this organization commencing June 2nd. The convention was held in the city for three days, and was followed by a talk from Herman Wobber, of the Pacific Coast division, who welcomed the men from the mountain territory and expressed a desire that this should be the beginning of a close relationship between the two districts.

Following this talk both he and Louis Marcus, district manager of the Rocky Mountain territory, with headquarters at Salt Lake City, told of the convention recently held at the home offices. Mr. Wobber, who has been in the organization a number of years, says that the past year had been a big success and that steps had been taken to overcome any minor weakness in the plan that had been followed during this period. Interesting announcements in regard to new stars were made and telegrams from the studio were read, assuring those present of high quality productions.

The following picture theaters in the several districts, in several cases film exchanges have lost valuable prints, and this has set exchange men to thinking and investigating causes. In some cases it has been learned that fires were due to inexperienced operators. In some cases, a fireman, with no knowledge of the job, has in the heat of the moment, filled a machine with kerosene, thrown a match on it, and a fire has resulted. This has been a matter of much regret, and has resulted in a considerable loss.

A number of men who hold key positions in the exchanges have been sent to the training school at Garden Home, the university of this industry, to become thoroughly acquainted with every phase of the business, and to become experienced in the handling of the various machines used in the exchanges.

URGENT NEED FOR TRAINING OPERATOR

Inexperienced Men Can Not Be Trusted in Booths—Time to Provide for Future Is Now.

DURING the past few weeks a number of fires have been reported in the operating booths of Louisville theaters, and while many of these fires have been the result of carelessness, investigation has shown that in many cases the fire was started through the carelessness of inexperienced men in the exchanges. Many of these operators are in the best of health and are physically able to do the work, but have never taken the training given to the young men during the training school, and have not been able to handle the machinery properly.

It is now apparent that there is a large number of exchange men who are inexperienced, and who are unable to do the work properly. It is now necessary to have the exchange men thoroughly acquainted with every phase of the business, and to become experienced in the handling of the various machines used in the exchanges.

Many of these exchange men are inexperience, and are unable to do the work properly. It is now necessary to have the exchange men thoroughly acquainted with every phase of the business, and to become experienced in the handling of the various machines used in the exchanges.

DAUGHTER OF ANNA HELD IN FOX PRODUCTION.

To take her mind off the illness of her mother, Anna Held, who is fighting cancer厉害ly with doctors, her daughter, Virginia Pearson, has gone into motion pictures, and is now supporting Virginia Pearson in a Fox production, which is in work at the Blackston studio in Brooklyn.
Aeroplane Crash Between Creel and Universal

Right here, as will later be seen, a divergence commences. Mr. Hart said that Captain Burkhard looked at the picture, directed that certain eliminations should be made and never afterward saw the pictures; nor did any person in governmental authority see the picture thereafter until Saturday last, the day before the picture was advertised to open at the Broadway. Then Messrs. Hart, Sisson and Byoir saw the film and declined to sanction its exhibition, placing the responsibility on the Dayton-Wright people; submitting that there was no law to enforce a mandate against the showing of the film, but pointing out the fact that Creel had expressed the entire voluntary, both with newspapers and motion pictures.

Mr. Hart asserted that he had the picture, with "cuts" required by Captain Burkhard, been submitted to that official Captain Burkhard's mode of procedure would have been to turn it over to the Creel committee (if it was finally satisfactory to Captain Burkhard); that the committee would have viewed the films through its authorized representatives and then would have passed it along to the division for publication. Mr. Hart stated that Mr. Creel had taken the "short cut" to an attempt to show the picture, and that the Creel committee and its division of films could not sanction this procedure in justice to the film concerns, or to the requirements in force and would, of course, be expected to continue operating under the regulations properly established.

Cochrane Explains Purpose of Film.

The World man left the Times Building under the impression that Mr. Cochrane, on behalf of the Universal, would make an interesting speech and then make in view of what Mr. Hart had said, supplemented by the remarks of Carl Byoir, who also spoke for the division of films to the trade press representatives, as Mr. Cochrane, as "load" was in the cause of his company, and proceeded to refute most of the statements Messrs. Hart and Byoir had made.

Mr. Cochrane said that Mr. Atkins, of the Dayton-Wright Company, had contracted for the production of an industrial film, to be made for the purpose of inspiring skilled mechanics to join the aeroplane manufacturing forces; to send the film abroad to show General Pershing and his crusaders how the Government was helping the work of making good with aeroplanes, and to show Congress in a like spirit what was being done with the appropriate appropriations.

Mr. Cochrane said Mr. Atkins declared that all permission had been arranged for, and, as a matter of fact, the Signal Corps entered so skilfully and enthusiastically into producing the pictures that there seemed no question of governmental sanction. Mr. Cochrane stated that the film was such an inspiring product and so well proportioned, that it would awaken patriotic enthusiasm that proposals were made to the Dayton-Wright people when the film was assembled that Universal produce it as an attraction for the general public to view. Mr. Cochrane declared that Captain Burkhard, of the Signal Corps, having passed upon the film initially, tactfully released the films as exposing no secrets that Germany did not already know.

The film had not been shown to Captain Burkhard a second time, Mr. Cochrane declared, for the reason that they were not able to get a list of the "cuts" the Signal Corps official desired should be made; that representatives of the Universal sat with Captain Burkhard while the film ran for his inspection, solicited suggestions and cut the film from memory. This action, Mr. Cochrane declared, was made necessary because the Creel committee had never issued to them the printed list entitled "Captains" and said his "cuts" would be given to Universal in authoritative form by the Creel committee.

Mr. Cochrane voiced his thorough conviction that the Creel committee and its division of films was in such a manner antagonistic to Universal's interest, not alone in "The Yanks Are Coming," but in other matters concerning Government film production. Mr. Cochrane said that Mr. Hart had at all times, in the matter of the aeroplane pictures, dealt with and addressed himself to Mr. Atkins, of Dayton-Wright, and not to Universal representatives, either in conferences or written or telephoned communication.

When the interest of Dayton-Wright were finally at issue, corps in the Middle States, Mr. Cochrane declared Uni

From a news release. General Creel has been composing and working on the film "The Yanks Are Coming". Mr. Cochrane stated that Universal representatives were negotiating the use of camera crews for the picture. Creel was in the spirit of cooperation that made the Universal feel that, because of discrimination, they were inclined to ignore the authority of the Creel committee in any matter or whatever

George Creel contradicted late Monday afternoon, in an authorized statement, the representatives of the division of film who gave to the united press a statement that he, Creel, representing the department of labor, was in the act of

"The Yanks Are Coming." Mr. Cochrane stated that Universal representatives were negotiating for Washington Monday evening for the avowed purpose of showing the film to government officials, members of Congress and, if possible, to President Wilson.

Tuesday morning, June 25, there were indications that Major Nicholas Biddle, Chief of the Army Intelligence Service for the district of New York, had been able to effect a compromise between the parties to the dispute over "The Yanks Are Coming." Major Biddle had been constituted a mediator, and Monday afternoon representatives of both the Universal committee and government committee consulted him. It was agreed by all concerned that no immediate announcement should be made relating to the final decision.

Brunet Denies Statements of Universal

Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in an interview Monday, categorically denied the statements attributed to P. A. Powers, general manager of Universal Film Company concerning his partnership alleged to exist between William Randolph Hearst and his company and Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Mr. Brunet first pointed out that there is no such corporation, partnership or association known as Hearst-Pathe Weekly, Hearst Pathe Company or Hearst News Weekly or Hearst-Pathe Film Company.

Mr. Brunet stated that Pathe Exchange, Inc., which controls the Pathe motion picture interests in America, is a corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, with the following directors: Charles Pathe, Leonidas Smith, Paul Gutet, Ferdinand Edmund C. Lynch, Paul Bayne, Paul Fuller, Jr., and Ramirez Torres, the last six being residents of the United States, and that it's only connection with William Randolph Hearst, is to release the films photographed by International Film Service, a Hearst subsidiary, under a contract entered into over a year before the release of the Official War Review was ever contemplated.

"It seems to me," said Mr. Brunet, "that the only reason that I can assign for this statement is that the Universal Film Company is disappointed at being unsuccessful in securing the release of the Allies' Official War Review and is seeking publicity for its own interests.

"I want to emphasize the fact," Mr. Brunet added, "that the statements attributed to Mr Powers and Mr. Cochrane of the Universal, as printed in the morning papers, to the effect that the Committee on Public Information is composed largely of former Hearst-Pathe employees are false. J. A. Berst was formerly vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and, to my knowledge, has never been connected with the committee, nor indirectly with any Hearst organization. The same is true of H. C. Hoagland, who was formerly head of the scenario department of Pathe Exchange, Inc. The same is also true of William Arsdale, who was also connected with the scenario department of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Lew Simons was formerly employed by Pathe Exchange, Inc., as a cameraman.

"A. Smith was formerly serial publicity manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and is now in Camp Sevier, Greenville, S. C. Mr. Hubbell has never been employed by Pathe Exchange, Inc, in any capacity. Mr. Donohue was employed as a Bee File at Pathe Exchange, Inc., but left us about fifteen months ago.

"Another thing I want to emphasize is that there is no partnership of any kind or character between Pathe Exchange, Inc., and any of the Hearst interests, and that neither Mr. Hearst nor any of his organization own or control directly or indirectly one single share of stock of Pathe Exchange, Inc."

Marines Get Thrilling Air Pictures

With Motion Camera Many Stunts Are Photographed for Screen Showing Throughout Country.

A new epoch in aviation photography has been reached by Marine Corps movie men in the taking of sensational pictures from a plane at Miami, Fla. A few weeks ago a party of six official Marine Corps movie men sailed from New York for Miamia with two motion picture machines, three still cameras and enough equipment to take nearly 15,000 feet of film and hundreds of "still" pictures.

Second Lieutenant S. S. Rothaniel, who headed the party, composed of Sergeants L. M. and Owens, Corporal For sythe, and Private Dennan, says that while shooting the movies from the clouds may not be particularly new or that for some persons there are thrills aplenty for the beginner.

Although the trip was made to get pictures at several of the Marine Corps training camps, the main object was to get something new for aviation photography at the Marine Corps aviation school at Miami.

For a time the photographers were content with placing one machine on the top of a lower and another on the ground, the aviators taking turns in the cockpit of the machine so that a part of the plane would always remain within focus, he started for the clouds. The first day he took eight "hops," a "hop" being an aviation term for any trick on the aviator's calendar was performed for the benefit of L. M. and his camera. Some of the tricks which were filmed both from the ground and the plane itself included loops, so called "bird of paradise," tail-spins, loop-the-loop, Dutch rolls, falling-leaves and zooms.

These films have been developed and projected on the screen with the result that it has been decided to show them in moving picture theaters throughout the country.

Rocks Break Up Young Luncheon

Clara Kimball Young and Her Father Slightly Hurt When Avalanche Distributes Shower.

Clara Kimball Young and her father, Edward M. Kimball, were the unhappy recipients of an off scene "thrill" June 21 not recorded by the cameraman, while playing scenes for the "Waxy Woman" now in course of production at the Lasky studio, Hollywood.

Miss Young, and her entire company, had been busy all morning taking exteriors along the cliffs. They had just finished a scene that included the most important scenes, staged at the foot of a high cliff. As the players were preparing to enjoy their picnic lunch, tablecloths having been distributed for the catsales, a shower of stones, caused by an avalanche on the overhanging cliff fell upon them.

Pandemonium reigned, as everyone scrambled to safety. A large stone struck Miss Young, causing her to fall to the ground. When nearby members of her company reached her it was found that the stone had struck her on the forehead. In the meantime, her father, Mr. Kimball, was discovered crumpled in a heap on the ground. In trying to escape the avalanche, he had tripped and fallen, hurting his ankle. He was placed in an automobile and rushed home with all possible speed, where the doctor who had been summoned pronounced the injury a bad sprain. The remaining members of the company escaped without injury, and Miss Young, after a few hours to pull herself together, recovered sufficiently to take the remaining scene during the afternoon.

Lucille Lee Stewart in Metro Pictures

Lucille Lee Stewart has been engaged by Metro for the important role of Vera, the "chorus-lady," with Ethel Barrymore, in the screen version of "Our Mrs. McChesney," adapted by Luther A. vate life Mrs. Ralph W. Inc.. Mr. Inc is the director of "Our Mrs. McChesney," having been specially engaged by arrangement with Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin.
Congressmen Hear Film Tax Protest

Committee on Ways and Means Listens to Arguments Presented by the Messrs. Brady, Powers, Friend and Goodman

A general protest against increasing the tax on admissions to motion pictures theaters was laid before the House Ways and Means Committee on June 18 by William A. Brady. The president of the National Association told the committee that the previous day in New York City at which it was thought that all of the theatrical interests in the United States should present their case at this time and for that reason he was present to talk on the admission tax, while F. A. Powers would discuss the footage tax and Maurice Good- man, representing the Vaudeville Managers Protective Association, would speak on the excess profits tax. Arthur S. Friend also spoke on the tax question.

Mr. Brady told of the activities in the motion picture field during the past year which show President Wilson had a right to be represented by the motion picture industry characterized the screen as the greatest medium in the world for conveying public information to the masses; how President Wilson called upon the motion picture industry to bring its influence into Italy, France, Russia, Scandinavia, and the Oriental countries "something that he could not do through the newspapers. I can quote him," declared Mr. Brady, "as saying that the screen speaks the universal language."

He called attention to the use of the screen by the Four Minute Men of America, to their aid in floating the several Liberty Loans and the service rendered the Red Cross.

"We do not stand here expecting to be exempted from any tax," declared Mr. Brady. "We don't want to do our bit—we want to do our chunk, but we want just a square deal."

"Are we taxing you too much in your opinion?" inquired Congressman Rainey, chairman of the committee, "Do you want to know what you think about it. You have told us about the importance of the screen; we agree with you on that proposition. You have not told us why it should not be raised."

"We want to be taxed," replied Mr. Brady, and later, after another interruption by Congressman Rainey, he said, "We ask that the admission tax should not be raised."

Took Theaters Four Months to Recover from Tax

Mr. Brady then explained how the tax works out. "We are willing that you should tax the five-cent theater," he said, "to make it even. But as to the 10 per cent tax it took us four months to turn out profits from that tax in the larger cities. In the smaller cities, and in some of the semi-large cities they have not recovered from that. We figure that the business was hurt 25 per cent, save in exceptional cases. Of course, if you go to New York and take the larger motion picture theaters it is true that they have not been hurt so much. But those theaters and others like them constitute a very small part of the motion picture business."

Chairman Claude Kitchin, of the Ways and Means Committee, pointed out to Mr. Brady that in May the attendance at the motion picture theaters was a great deal larger than in May, 1917—"there has been a large increase and the Government will show it!" He gave as a reason for the smaller attendance last winter the fact that it was one of the coldest and most rigorous we have ever had. In Washington the bad weather lasted from January 1 to April 1. Mr. Brady declared that this was not true of all cities—the west did not suffer as much as the east, and Congress- man Treadway suggested that another cause for the small attendance last winter was the fact that the Fueel Administr- ator closed all the theaters on certain days.

Mr. Brady told Chairman Kitchin that he thought the industry has recovered from the effects of the imposition of the 10 per cent tax, but added: "We do believe you are going to get us in, and that you are going to reduce by an enormous amount the admission fee that you are getting now in taxes if that tax is increased."

Only a Few Houses Increased Admissions

In reply to an inquiry from Chairman Kitchin, Mr. Brady declared only a very small percentage of theaters increased their admission fee from 10 to 15 cents after the present tax went into effect. "We very much resented that," he declared, "and we would be very much interested to know the extent of that being done. We believe that nobody should be permitted in this country to put on a price which includes the tax. We think the tax should be plus the price, so that the theater may be no 10 per cent tax business. We believe that the man is taking advantage of the legislation in order to beat his neighbor, who has lived up to the letter of the law, and to get an extra three cents."

Some surprising testimony followed. Congressman J. Magoffin Moore, of Pennsylvania, stated that the Treasury Department estimates that the receipts from admission taxes for 1918, based on collections already made, will be $28,825,000, and it figures there should be collected during 1919 $4,800,000. That would double the tax on admissions, he said. Mr. Brady declared that the Government would not get one-half of that amount, for most of the theaters would be put out of business. He estimated that 40 per cent of the theaters would be put out of business.

Congressman Admits Houses Have Been Closed

Loew's Columbia Theater, in Washington, was referred to in the course of the discussion, Mr. Moore stating that this house charges 25 cents admission and 3 cents additional for the tax. "There isn't any doubt about it," he said, "that that place has been doing an extraordinary business."

"I know Mr. Brady," Mr. Moore continued, "and I think it makes an unusual case and then, continuing, observed: "On the other hand I will admit that if you take a car here, when you can get a seat, in Washington, and will go to out- side theaters, you will find that the doors of the theaters and the windows are barred and they have moved away because of no business. Now, I say, that there are two cases in point, one which sustains your contention. We do not want put any business out to state that this and contend that some places were put out of business by this law because of the tax, but, on the other hand, some of the other places are doing more business."

Mr. Moore suggested that the Columbia Theater makes $75,000 a year and that it will pay a large tax under the excess profits provisions of the law. He wanted all the taxes based on earnings. He was told this same thing is advocated by all who are hit by other taxes.

The witness admitted on questioning that Congress is justlyified in levying the greatest tax that can be got out of any industry. In closing, he asked that provision be made in the forthcoming soldiers and sailors in uniform from the payment of the tax.

P. A. Powers, of the Universal, was the next witness. He protested against the footage tax, explaining to the members of the committee how much more does that tax mean. "Is it not only a question of losing $5,000 a year, but also that we pay a tax on film that has already been taxed by the Government?" he asked.

"In getting down to the financial end of the problem, Mr. Powers said the Universal company produces and publishes weekly a great number of news articles, news reels, magazine reels, educational film, etc., from which there is very small return. Educational films do not bring in anything. The way of profit on news reels bring in a very small return. In fact, he said, since the war started the returns on the news reels has been wiped out, and since this tax was put on the company has made no profit on the news reels. The life of a news reel is practically 25 days."

Government Under No Expense on Propaganda Films

Mr. Powers told of the work being done by the film manufacturers in the production of patriotic films—without expense to the Government. "There is no expense of any propaganda pictures which the industry releases. We spend nine-tenths of a cent a foot on every foot of film that is released. In addition to this we have been paying films to the Underwood & Underwood, to the Navy, and to the various war departments, base hospitals, with practically no cost except shipping and handling."

Mr. Powers got in a discussion with Chairman Kitchin concerning the British business, on which there is a great deal heavier tax. He said that the British taxes had so hurt the business there that fully 75 per cent of the productions used in Great Britain are made in this country. The British tax is five pence on negatives. This led to the following significant statement:

"I am glad for your information, Mr. Brady," continued Chairman Kitchin, "that the industry could stand more tax; not only that industry but other industries. I am certain that if the committee were convinced that it would destroy any industry it would not impose more tax. And we asked you gently about this, and you answered very pertinently."

Friend Explains Method of Issuing War Films.

Mr. Powers was followed by Arthur S. Friend, treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. "Mr. Chairman," said Mr. Friend, "I should like to say for the record that tax matters, and we would like to say, word about the Creel matter that Mr. Powers went into and tell you some things that Mr. Powers did not know, which I think justifies the monopolistic method of distribution which Mr. Creel has been trying to adopt. I understand that the British and Italian war pictures are privately controlled and distributed in the United States. The man who controls them and distributes them wanted and insisted on a deal with the American distributing companies, and if the purveyor that distributed that picture didn't give him the largest possible profit. The French war pictures are absolutely uncontrollable, and are open now to anybody who pays, I believe, $1 a foot, and that goes to a French man, and for this purpose the British and Italian pictures, and to-day these French pictures are not handled by any one distributor. As to the American pictures, Mr. Creel's idea was that they should be distributed by any dealer who was willing to give back his royalty.

But his thought was, I believe, that as the British pictures and the Italian pictures were monopolized, the dealer should also have the privilege of adding to them the American pictures. And he could use the French pictures, the British and Italian pictures, because, obviously, the American pictures would be in very great demand. Therefore Mr. Creel had the choice of getting back nothing or of joining up with the purveyor that distributed the picture, inhibiting the pictures to the highest bidder, and so believe that was his idea. Mr. Creel is doing what the men in the motion picture business did not want to see him do, but it seems to have brought about the result that he should come back to Congress and get still more money.

"I want to say a word about the footage tax. As Mr. Powers has made clear to you, this is like taxing our container, it is like taxing the wrapping paper in which the packages are wrapped which you buy and take from the store. We are subject to a double tax, and we are the only industry that is subject to a double tax, because there is no complication involved in it. If the film is run or printed, and it will go down to A, B, C, and D, until there is no longer any demand for that picture; each exhibitor pays a certain rental price; that rental price is fixed according to the value of the size of the picture, the age of the picture. Obviously, we do not get as much for an old picture as we do for a new and popular one; you do not pay as much for a loaf of stale bread as you do for a loaf of fresh bread. The only person who is akin to the consumer is the man who pays when he goes in to see the picture, but in addition he also pays this footage tax, because it was conceived to be a tax that could be passed on to the consumer."

Congressman Moore.—That is the reason I do not quite understand the argument. We are taxing only business, and you are taxing the public.

Mr. Friend.—The ultimate consumer, assuming that he goes in to see the picture, that is, the man who goes in to look at the picture, he is the ultimate consumer as nearly as we can.

Congressman Moore.—Is it the exhibitor, the tax on the tax along, and he pays it?

Mr. Friend.—Yes; he pays the tax. He pays the admission tax and also the tax on the reel. It comes out that the exhibitor pays $1.05 a day for the producer, and nobody has been hurt, but he can't pass that $1.05 on.

Congressman Moore.—In order to be fair—I am very much interested in this argument—but might you not, with equal propriety, argue that an automobile manufacturer is taxed twice or three times; on the steel he uses, on the labor which he uses, on the paint, on the oz., and so on along the same line?

Mr. Friend.—You may say that; yes, Mr. Moore, except that in each instance he pays the tax that the producer of the commodity which he uses in his product first pays; that is, he passes it on to him. Consequently, it all comes back in the increased price of the car.

Mr. Friend.—Exactly: it comes out of the ultimate consumer, and is paid by the people who buy the product.

A Third of the Theaters Have Absorbed Tax.

Mr. Friend observed that the reason for the closing up of a number of theaters "is the fact that people want better entertainment in better places, and the better theaters are surviving and the poorer theaters are going out of business. At the same time the tax had some effect. We must realize that out of 14,000 motion picture theaters in the United States a few are unimportant; there are some that could not house, for instance, 'The Hearts of the World.' Many of these outlying theaters—neighboring theaters, we call them—have been unable to compel their patrons to pay the tax. And they have been compelled to absorb the tax themselves, and many of them could not do that because their profit was not 20 per cent of the gross receipts, and it had to be 20 per cent of the gross receipts. Therefore you and your gentlemen to know that fact when you come to consider amendments to this bill. The admissions tax as it exists today, I think, will result in a steadily increasing increase, and the Government will find that the theaters surviving will get a better patronage, and the business will net more in dollars and cents."

Mr. Friend thought the scheme would be excellent except on prices between 20 cents and $1.

Goodman Talks of Excess Profits Law.

Maurice Goodman took up the provision of the excess profits law in regard to nominal capital and invested capital. Speaking for all classes of theaters, he said:

"It seems to me, in the case of the Treasury Department, that they should not be compelled to pay excess profits on their business, and that they have not been in doing so. The Treasury Department has been in a position to explain the reason why they have not had the business, it was explained in detail that the vaudeville managers operate their theaters with an important principle in view. They are the people around which on their theaters stand in a great majority of cases, the theaters were held only on lease. Therefore, so far as the place to which the sum was equal to the value of the property, it was an important thing in a vaudeville theater was a bookkeeping and an arrangement that the property was placed for the purpose of the privilege of the show business? The vaudeville managers do not produce anything; they stand in a position with showing, and manage to make their voices or whose performances are an attraction. The only necessity for a cash deposit or capital invested is for a small fund to pay for licenses and other small expenses incidental to the operation of the theater. The main or primary thing from which proceeds are derived in these theaters, so far as the manager and operator of the theater is concerned, is the service or personality and good will of the manager and his leadship, and his ability to use what he gets on his booking contract. Nominal capital means nothing in arriving at profit, eliminate capital and fix a definite tax, whatever that tax may be, but fix it upon the amount that we and our neighbor in the same business will have, and place in it, to which is equal so far as I can see, the disinterested, that the Treasury Department will place in it, to put the detail of money as a board or a commission, and let them decide the value. But there is a great objection to that, and that is this objection: It is so difficult to determine the amount of the Secretary of the Treasury, and to consider that the Secretary of the Treasury shall, in certain cases, fix the value of property for taxing purposes."

Now, in the show business you cannot take one business as the standard for another, and the law provides that in the excess, these values the Treasury Department shall take standard representative values. There are so many conditions that enter into what may be the value of a show business, as I have said before, the personality of the manager and then again the location of the house and the size of the house, and all those things must be taken into consideration and the nature of the show he puts on and all these things. My second objection deals with this That it would be well for the government to establish any standard for comparison, and I think the first suggestion I made will work out to the interest of the Government and will result in great good to the entire business, because we are not here to avoid any taxes or to get any exceptions or to dodge any other expenses. We are not going to allow that other industries get, but we are placed in a class with other industries when we cannot do business on any such basis as the other industries are doing.

CHILDS TO GET TESTIMONIAL FROM FRIENDS.

John E. Childs, formerly a salesman for World Pictures working out of the Buffalo branch office, will never have any cause to complain about the people at home not remembering him with perquisites. John E. Childs, who is the great favorite in the circle of friends and well-wishers from New York friends and well-wishers are added, and the initial volume, it is expected, will be followed by others. The testimonial is undoubtedly one of the most unique tokens of esteem ever accorded a film salesman.

Mr. Childs is a sergeant in Company E 308th Regiment, American Expeditionary Force, and is in France.
Black Appeals to Rembusch
Speaking for the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League He Urges the A. E. A. to Meet at Boston and Settle Differences.

A
ANSWERING the recent letter from Frank J. Rembusch, secretary of the American Exhibitors’ Association, on the subject of amalgamation, A. S. Black, of Rockland, Me., has written to Mr. Rembusch, urging that the members of the A. E. A. hold their convention at Boston during the coming convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League and that an effort be made to square the differences existing between the two organizations be then made. Mr. Black’s letter follows:

Mr. Frank J. Rembusch, 324 Longacre Building, New York City,

My Dear Rembusch: I just wired you this letter to New York, wherein I stated that I had not received a copy sent by the League, to be opened and read at the meeting in New York. In the telegram I have appealed to the Americanism of every member of your organization, and to the patriotism and love of the Americanism of every member of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League of America in making this appeal. In doing this I shall ignore to a large extent the vicious attacks you have recently made in the trade papers in referring to things of the past, simply stating that I do not agree with the method of believing in majority rule and that the issue, of which I admit there are some in our league, should be cured within and not by splits without. It is, at least, a two-sided proposition when, under existing national conditions, should be entirely forgotten and laid one side as a patriotic duty if nothing more.

The writer knew there would be an article on amalgamation in the June 15 issue of the Exhibitors’ Trade Review, but had no idea of what that article would say, and that you would go on in the following manner of the article as being a party theorety. As stated to you recently in New York the writer never suggested any resolutions, or other matters in connection with the amalgamation committee, and other members of the amalgamation committee in New York during the past few months have maintained that everyone who met with you did not receive my letter of May 21 enclosing copy of letter written Mr. Pettijohn upon this subject. It is also regrettable that the resolution passed by the amalgamation committee at its meeting at the Hotel Astor last month that was addressed to King Perry, secretary of the Michigan branch of the A. E. A., and which was to be presented to their meeting, and which, at the request of your members, was withheld from them. The Detroit committee, in their meeting agreed (said resolution being signed by Messrs. Joseph Hopp, of Chicago; Louise Benomishal, of New Jersey; C. C. Pettijohn, of Indiana, on behalf of L. M. Mosher, of Buffalo, and himself, and agreed to by Lewis Frank, of Chicago, who was to present same at said meeting, and in accord with the wishes of all the officers of the Affiliated Producers and Distributors proposition, no time being lost in the amended resolution on amalgamation. I claimed to you in New York, and claim now, that selfish motives in various bookkeeping propositions and otherwise have had much to do with preventing the amalgamation of the two associations. Much good has come from the other committees that were suggested by the resolutions committee that met in my room in Washington last December, and the fact that we have worked harmoniously on national legislation is conclusive proof, to me at least, that by fair play and honest treatment of all associations of complete amalgamation can be obtained and obtained now at the time of all those who most needed our country.

While I have very high respect for Mr. Pettijohn, I do somewhat blame him for not keeping you closely informed as to what took place in the amalgamation committee affairs as was understood, and I am sure that you do not understand you would not have made the erroneous statements that appeared in your published articles in the Motion Picture News of June 6 and the Motion Picture World of June 15. The way you suggest that Mr. Frank was writing so as to show good faith is neither practical nor feasible to the writer. There is only one practical way of showing that good faith and appointment, appoint committee of fair-minded men from both associations that have only the best interests of the country and the exhibitors at large, and with the amalgamation committee work out a plan that is fair to all. Forget the past entirely and show the United States that its motion picture industry is an international organization and the great organizations are to become the most important factor in existence toward winning this war. We cannot afford delays and meeting after meeting. Let’s get together next month and settle things as they should be settled, and have the best interests of this country at heart as I believe you have and as I believe the members of our league have likewise for the reason that this is success. Adieu, I appeal to your Americanism and nothing else. Will you answer “Yes”? Sincerely yours.

A. S. BLACK.

Black’s Telegram to Rembusch

Frank J. Rembusch, Secretary American Exhibitors Association, 324 Longacre Building, New York City:

Your letter June 15 received. I consider method suggested of reducing facts to writing by committees and your question of good faith under existing national conditions have been discussed for unnecessary delay in getting both associations amalgamated. As member of national amalgamation committee and also member of executive committee of Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League, I now appeal to the Americanism of yourself and every member of the A. E. A. to call convention of your body in Boston on July 13, where committees from both organizations can be appointed to meet with the duly appointed national amalgamation committee, or one united committee of both organizations in support of the President of the United States. Fair play is absolutely guaranteed. Let us forget past mistakes by both factions and disregard absolutely selfish motives of co-operative booking companies and other interests and meet with one thought in mind and that of our country in its hour of need. Am writing open letter today embodying this telegram.

ALFRED S. BLACK.

Michigan Association Elects Officers

At Annual Meeting June 13 Chooses Col. Butterfield President and King Perry Secretary.

T
THE annual meeting of the American Exhibitors Association, Michigan branch, was held at the Hotel Fuller, June 13, with the attendance just fair. It was a quality crowd—but not quantity. The meeting was interesting and lively, many subjects of current importance being discussed. The new officers elected were as follows:

Col. W. S. Butterfield, Battle Creek, president; J. S. Ritter, Detroit, first vice-president; John Cutler, Detroit, second vice-president; King Perry, Detroit, secretary; John Ballman, Detroit, treasurer.

In addition an executive board was elected, which comprises the officers and W. F. Phillips, of the Majestic-Colonial theater, Jackson, and Mr. Beecher, of the Beecher chain of houses in Grand Rapids.

It was decided to continue the weekly meetings, especially during the summer months. All the real business of the organization will take place on the executive board. The association will meet the first Thursday in June and December, making two meetings each year. Col. W. S. Butterfield, the new president, operates the chain of Butterfield theaters in eight towns in Michigan. He has an office in the City Bank building, Battle Creek, and he takes this means of notifying exhibitors that he will be pleased to have them forward to him direct all complaints, suggestions or criticisms.

Shechan, Paul Gulick, George Irving, Joseph F. Lee, Thomas G. Wiley, Fred J. Beecroft, William A. Sande, and Frederick H. Elliott. Other present were J. D. Williams, First National Exhibitors' Circuit; David P. Howells, Howard Wright of Kalem, Frank J. Marion, president of Kalem; James Clark and Attorney Goldsmith.

The meeting had been called for the purpose of receiving a report from the Motion Picture Exposition Company as to the advisability of holding the Motion Picture Exposition scheduled for Boston, July 13.

It was announced that the executive committee, at a meeting held the preceding week, had decided to hold the convention of the members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry at the Roosevelt Plaza hotel in Boston on Friday, July 19, at 11 A. M. The board endorsed the action of the executive committee with the understanding that the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America would be held in Boston at that time.

Frank J. Marion, who was recommended by the National Association as the representative in France, Spain and Italy for the Committee on Finance, addressed the members of the board in regard to his activities and related many interesting experiences during the past few months in these countries. Mr. Marion also gave suggestions to the producers and distributors in regard to the showing of their pictures abroad, and he was given a rising vote of thanks for his instructive and interesting address.

Decline to Co-operate with Other Amusement Interests.

A memorandum of a conference held at the office of Adolph Zukor on June 17 was submitted suggesting ways and means for cooperation between the theatrical, burlesque and motion picture lines, and after full discussion was unanimously voted that it was not deemed advisable at this time to cooperate with the other interests referred to upon legislative matters. The report was thereupon rejected.

The balance was presented by Theodore Mitchell, secretary of the Censorship Committee, requesting support for the candidacy of Congressman Harrison of Mississippi, who is in the field as a candidate for Senator from Mississippi, was approved and instructions were to have the congressmen Insure through their exchanges cooperate in every way possible. Notice to be given to President E. M. Clarke of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Mississippi asking him to present the matter to his organization with a request to support Representative Harrison's campaign for the United States Senatorship.

Supply and Equipment Division Nominates.

At the meeting of the Supply and Equipment Division, held on the preceding day, presided over by Chairman J. E. Brulatour, the following nominations were made for representa­tion on the National Association Board: J. E. Brulatour, Donald J. Bell, J. B. Halberg, Walter J. Moore, W. C. Smith, E. M. Portman, and F. H. Elliott.

The new board of seven to represent this division in the National Board is the same with the exception of E. M. Porter of the Precision Machine Company, who takes the place of C. C. Cooper of the National Carbon Company, Cleveland, who has found it impossible to attend the meetings.

Two other divisions of the National Association are to hold their annual meeting in connection with the Producers' Division on a call to be issued by Chairman Adolph Zukor and the General Division, of which John C. Flinn is chairman.

Distributors Nominate Directors in N. A. M. P. I.

At the meeting of the Distributors' Division, held on Thursday afternoon, presided over by Chairman Walter W. Irwin, the following nominations were made for representation on the Board of Directors of the National Association: W. W. Irwin, P. A. Powers, R. A. Rowland, P. A. Powers, Richard Gradwell and Paul Brunet.

This board of seven directors comprises the same names as the present board, with the exception of Paul Brunet, who succeeds J. A. Berst.

Boston Exposition Will Be Held
Exhibitors' League Will Disregard Action of National Association and Will Go Ahead on Original Plans.

REGARDLESS of the action of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exposition Company in withdrawing from actual participation in the trade exposition to be held at Boston, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has decided to go ahead on its own hook. Therefore the exposition will be held as scheduled. The management declares that it has already secured sufficient encouragement to improve the trade display and that it expects to close enough contracts within the next two weeks to insure success.

There is nothing in the action of the N. A. M. P. I. that binds any member company, and, besides, the trade is so large, so far distributed and the trade so interested, so anxious to buy new pictures, that it is more than likely a great number will be there in some form of representation. New England exhibitors will attend almost to a man. They are all good fellows and worth while meeting. The Moving Picture World has taken space and will be among those present.

Advertising Men Postpone Dinner
New Date Is Set for July 22 and Plans Are Maturing to Enlarge Scope of Affair.

A meeting held Friday afternoon, June 21, at the Hotel Astor conducted by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, it was agreed to postpone the annual dinner of the latter scheduled for Wednesday, Wednesday, June 26, in consideration of the former.

This decision came about as a result of the desire of the National Association to co-operate with the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in making this an occasion of great national importance. Nearly all advertisers, including various members of the Administration at Washington have already accepted an invitation to be present, and, with the additional time allowed, the project, together with the hearty cooperation of the national motion picture body, the affair easily should prove the greatest event of the motion picture industry since its inception, particularly in view of the fact that it comes at a most psychological time.

The management of the Science Museum, which was concealed by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, will be in the hands of a representative committee of all branches of the industry.

Although further details than the date of the dinner are not available as yet, it is promised that this will mark the most important gathering the film enterprise has yet seen.

Among the guests will be former Ambassador James W. Gerard and Edward Bok, of the Committee of Fifty, with Hamilton Lewis, George Creel, Frank Wilson, C. F. Foster, Morgan Shuster and others. In addition several persons of the Administration not heretofore announced will be on hand.

At the meeting Friday afternoon the following persons were present: J. E. Brulatour, Arthur S. Friend, L. Z. Levine, Lee A. Ochs, Paul Cromell, William Sherrill, J. A. Berst, Gabriel Hess, P. A. Powers, Louis Blumenthal and F. H. Elliott, of the National Association, and Arthur James, John C. Flinn, P. A. Parsons, Paul Gulick and C. W. Barrett, of the Associated Advertisers.
Affiliated Directors Hold Sessions

For Three Days Distributors’ Corporation Considers Problems of New Organization—E lect Cohen Chairman.

AFTER three days of the most productive business sessions the national board of directors of the Affiliated Distributors’ Corporation, which convened at the offices of that organization in New York on Wednesday, June 19, adjourned, Friday, having put in motion the machinery for a new order in the film industry which the Affiliated members declare will prove revolutionary.

That the co-operative booking plan of the Affiliated has attracted the support of not only a large body of exhibitors, but of representative exhibitors in each section of the country, was clearly evidenced by the standing of the national directors sent by the various exhibitors’ booking associations connected with the Affiliated to the meeting.

The directors present at the meeting were R. D. Craver and H. B. Varner, representing Maryland, District of Columbia, Delaware, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Eastern Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia and Florida; Morris Spiers, representing Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey; Fred J. Herrington, representing Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Sydney S. Cohen and John Manheimer, representing Greater New York; Alfred Hyman, representing Upper and Western New York; Sam J. Bullock, representing Northern Ohio; John W. Weinig, representing Southern Ohio and Eastern Kentucky; Frank J. Rembusch, representing Indiana and Western Kentucky; Charles H. Seaman, representing Michigan; Louis Frank and Joseph Hopp, representing Illinois; Byron Parks and Glenn Harper, representing Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Arizona, Utah, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado and New Mexico.

In addition to the foregoing, Henry J. Lustig, of Cleveland, president of the Exhibitors’ Booking Association of Northern Ohio; Henry A. Brink and William J. Clark, of Grand Rapids, attended the meeting.

In the earnestness with which the directors got down to business at the opening session, which was presided over by Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Affiliated, on Wednesday morning it was apparent that the meeting would set a new precedent in exhibitor gatherings. Despite the most arduous analysis of contracts and agreements which occupied the first two days the earnest and deliberative character of the sessions was maintained at equally high efficiency throughout the three days.

Equally noteworthy and significant of the determination upon the part of the exhibitors present to perfect an exhibitors’ business body which would be lasting and constructive in the relief it offered exhibitors for existing evils was the spirit of co-operation manifested throughout the meeting.

Both the terms of the contracts existing between the Affiliated Distributors’ Corporation and the booking units associated with it, as well as the trust agreements whereby the sums of the exhibitors are protected under the control of each exhibitor unit in their own territory, were worked out with thoroughness and a desire on the part of every one to see to it that the interests of all were fully preserved. This “give-and-take” attitude was also manifested to a remarkable degree in the fixing of the percentages of each of the territories. This important matter, which has been the source of so much dissension at other gatherings of exhibitors and distributors, was disposed of with dispatch and complete satisfaction on all sides.

Following the unanimous acceptance of the various agreements between the Affiliated and the units comprising it permanent officers of the National Board of Directors were chosen. All the officers were elected unanimously.

Those chosen are as follows: Chairman, Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League of New York State and of the Exhibitors’ Booking Association of Greater New York; first vice-chairman, Sam Bullock, of Cleveland; second vice-chairman, Glenn Harper, of Los Angeles, secretary of the Theater Owners’ Association of California; secretary, Frank Rembusch, of Indianapolis, national secretary of the American Exhibitors’ Association.

Friday’s session of the meeting was devoted to the consideration of proposals from prominent producers of New York and Los Angeles to produce pictures for distribution under the Affiliated plan. From the statements of these producers and reports of Mr. Cohen and Mr. Harper it was established that the stars are following the co-operative booking movement as established by the Affiliated, and that the organization, once going at full force, will have a strong claim on the interest of players.

A number of pictures were viewed by the directors in the evenings during the meeting, and several productions are under consideration as initial releases. That by September 1 the Affiliated will be operating on a regular schedule of releases seems probable by the number of producers’ applications filed with it.

The final afternoon’s session of the directors’ meeting was devoted to informal talks by Chairman Cohen, Mr. Pettijohn and William J. Clark, treasurer of the Affiliated Distributors’ Corporation.

Abe Warner to “Okeh” Crusader Contracts
Volunteers Services to Committee on Public Information, and Will Aid in Unraveling Tangles.

AMONG the film men of wide experience and high standing in the industry who have volunteered their services to the Committee on Public Information is Abe Warner, of Warner Brothers, who has agreed to supervise and endorse all contracts in connection with the distribution of “Pershing’s Crusaders.”

Mr. Warner, who is acting in co-operation with J. A. Berst, manager of distribution for the Committee on Public Information, will continue to run his headquarters with the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit, 6 West Forty-eighth street. His services in this connection were solicited because of his signal success in handling the bookings for Ambassador Gerard’s “My Four Years in Germany.”

Mr. Warner is personally known to hundreds of the leading men in the United States and has an accurate knowledge of present conditions in all territory that remains unsold. His judgment will be followed in deciding upon prices and the adjustment of the problems that arise in places where “Pershing’s Crusaders” is to be shown under the auspices of the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit.

As a member of the firm of Warner Brothers Abe Warner has an interest in the Gerard picture, and his various friends in the production and distribution field wish him well in his new work.

Charges Filed Against Funkhouser

Including Forty-one Specific Counts, of Which Two Only Refer to Moving-Picture—Trial Set for June 24.

A CTING Chief of Police Alcock filed nine charges, embodying forty-one specific counts, with the Civil Service Commission against Second Police Deputy Funkhouser, Saturday, June 15. Acting Chief Alcock requested that the trial be set for Monday, June 24, to give Major Funkhouser time to prepare his defense, instead of five days from the time of filing which the ordinance specifies. Following are the charges filed against the second deputy:

Conduct unbecoming a police officer or employe of the police department; neglect of duty; indifference to duty; incapacity or inefficiency in office; disobedience of orders; insubordination or disrespect toward superior officer; making a false official report; neglect to report any member known to be guilty of violation of any rule, regulation or order issued for the guidance of the department, and violation of any order or rule of superior authority, written or verbal.

Of the forty-one counts against the major, only thirty-six and thirty-seven refer to moving pictures, and conditioned they read as follows:

"In that the second deputy failed and neglected to have kept an accurate record of complaints and violations of the ordinances relating to the regulation of moving pictures, or the number of suits filed in such violations and disposition of same, and failed to take proper and prompt steps to bring proceedings against violators of provisions of ordinances regarding moving pictures."

After filing the charges Chief of Police Alcock said: "I will prove every one of them by documentary evidence or by witnesses or by both. I am ready to prosecute the charges. They speak for themselves."

That Major Funkhouser had men of his office shadow Chief of Police Herman F. Schuettler and prominent people of Chicago, including a number of prominent women, some of nature which have absolute proof. A large appropriation of money was spent by his office and there was not even a report of its use made, let alone a showing of results of his expenditures. Some of the men in his office said that they never saw such a rotten system as that upon which the office affairs were conducted.

Second Deputy Funkhouser has denied generally all the charges made against him, more specifically that concerning the shadowing of Chief Schuettler and citizens of good moral standing.

"I will file an answer to the charges just as soon as I have had an opportunity to digest them and will prepare a reply through my attorney, John S. Miller," the second deputy has given out. "I will be ready for trial in a short time and will meet this attack with a powerful defense."

The second deputy has also stated that he will ask for a continuance of a work of ten oars, when the case is called June 24, for the purpose of obtaining evidence for his defense. In the absence of his attorney, who is at present out of the city, Major Funkhouser is abstaining from any controversy with Acting Chief Alcock.

The Passing of John Hardin

His Numerous Friends Will Regretfully Learn of His Death at Charleston, S. C., in March Last.

ABOUT six weeks ago a rumor made the rounds that John Hardin, the well-known and popular exchange manager, had died. Numerous attempts failed to reveal any reliable information, until Douglas Bergh, personal traveling representative for George Kleine, who is on the road most of the time, came into the city after one of his business trips. He informed me that he had heard the news, but could give no definite particulars. He referred me to John T. Ezell, manager of the Atlanta office of Foursquare pictures, and it is due to the courtesy of this gentleman that I am able to give details of the death of my old friend "Jack."

Mr. Ezell wrote J. J. Miller, of the Dixieland theater, Charleston, S. C., concerning the matter and forwarded to me Mr. Miller's reply, which bears the date of June 10. The letterhead of the Dixieland theater shows that Miller & Hardin were proprietors of that house, and Mr. Miller's letter, which follows, gives an account of Jack's death:

"In reply to your letter of June 8 regarding the death of my friend and partner (for he was both), Jack Hardin, I am sorry to say that he died March 26. He was first taken sick with tonsillitis, and was sitting off and on for more than a month. In fact, he lay up for five weeks and never thoroughly recovered.

"Then he came and his legs went back on him, and he was forced to walk with a stick. He fought his illness bravely. He had a relapse after about three weeks and was taken home in an automobile one night from the show. He said then he thought he would never come out again. He died eight or ten days after.

"He was conscious up to five minutes of his death, and died very happy. He smiled and held out his hand to the writer while propped up in bed."

"While I only knew Mr. Hardin a year and a half, I want to say I have never been associated with a better fellow in my life. The real cause of his death was due to poison from his throat, which infected his entire system."

Mr. Hardin was manager of the Chicago office of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., from 1909 to 1913. He held a similar position with Pathé Electric for about a year, in 1914. He was afterward branch manager in Dallas, and then in Kansas City, Mo., for George Kleine, holding these positions for over a year.

His health being somewhat impaired at this time, he spent about a year with his family on his pecan grove in Mississippi, near Biloxi. Again desirous of getting back into his old business, he became connected with Mutual's Atlanta office, where he remained for some time, and shortly afterward associated with Mr. Miller in the Dixieland.

Among his Chicago friends and associates Jack Hardin was one of the most likable of men—loyal and steadfast. Of a sunny disposition and gifted with a droll sense of humor, he was ever a most welcome companion to all who knew him. As a raconteur he had few equals, and no festive occasion was complete without him.

Who among those present can forget Jack in the role of referee at the famous "badger fight," given by Colonel William N. Selig in his old city offices at 20 East Randolph street, and who among the guests will fail to recall his gifts as a mirth-raiser at the famous stag dinner given by George Kleine at his home on Hampden Court?"

"Ah me! The past so far as Jack is concerned is filled with the joy of life, though it is sorely dimmed now by sadness at his death."

And how resignedly and bravely did he meet death! Mr. Miller writes that "he smiled and held out his hand," just before unconsciousness seized him. Even Death could not dim the sunshine of his soul.

Hats off all in memory of Jack!"

Select Pictures Corporation in Convention

Branch Managers of Middle West, Pacific Coast and South Confer with Officials on Plans for Coming Year.

A CONVENTION of the officials of Select Pictures Corporation and the branch managers of the Middle West, Pacific Coast and South was held in the West Room, Hotel Sherman, June 19 and 20. Lewis J. Selzick, president; A. S. Kane, general manager; J. J. Rotchford, assistant general manager, and J. S. Woody, field manager, were present to greet the visiting branch managers.

During an interview with General Manager Kane, it developed that the convention was a real get-together meeting for officials and the exchange men present, at which views and opinions were exchanged and considered in ap-promising and stimulating manner.

President Selznick delivered the opening address on Wednesday. He expressed great gratification over the work accomplished during the year, and highly complimented the sales staff for their intelligent and forceful handling of their business.

He announced that Anna Case, soprano of the Metropo-tol Opera in New York, had been given the honor of performing in a coming special feature, the work on which would begin in a few days. He also discussed plans for adding the number of stars in the Select forces and invited suggestions concerning the improvement of the Sales directors, with the result that valuable opinions from the branch managers present were considered and accepted regarding the desirability of securing certain artists.

The work of the convention was in charge of General Manager Kane, who was ably assisted by Assistant General Manager Rotchford and Field Manager Woody. The keyote of Mr. Kane’s remarks and work was to establish closer relations between the home office in New York and the branch managers throughout the entire country.
He advocated the adoption of new ideas in order to increase the efficiency of the sales methods already in vogue, and he decided that continued trouble with old ideas could not fail to increase Select sales. Free discussion of all suggestions concerning the improvement of existing methods was invited during the convention and practiced by all present.

On Thursday announcement was made of the names of the stars retained for the year beginning September 1 and/or those released, by Kimball, Norma and Constance Talmadge and Alice Brady will appear in photoplays adapted from fine modern stories by prominent authors, during the coming year. Marion Davies, a beautiful young ingenue, is one of the new stars, whose first picture, “Cecelia of the Pink Roses,” is now scoring a success in New York and Chicago.

It was shown that the selling plan of Select pictures for the coming year is so carefully systematized and stabilized that a certain number of releases can be positively offered at stated intervals, thus according exhibitors the advantage of an exact and definite control over their programs far in advance.

A pleasant feature of Thursday’s proceedings was the arrival at the White Room of Miss Constance Talmadge, who had timed her stopover on a trip from Los Angeles to New York, so as to appear before the convention. She made a ripping little speech, which was enthusiastically received by the boys.

But the convention was by no means all work. President
Selznick entertained the visitors at dinner, in the College Inn, Wednesday evening, and “Friendly Enemies” at the Woods theater was viewed afterward. The latter treat was made possible by the efforts of San Bernard, a co-star of the play where the show was to be performed, as well as a movie producer for Fox, although the house had been sold out in advance.

Nate Ascher, of the Ascher Brothers, was one of the theater parties. They took two boxes at lunch at the Terrace Garden, Hotel Morrison, on Wednesday, Aaron J. Jones being a guest. On Thursday afternoon the visitors formed theater parties and were entertained in other ways.

The branch managers present were: Sam E. Morris, Cleveland; A. M. Muller, Pittsburgh; James O. Kent, Detroit; Fred C. Aiken and assistant, Ben W. Bedell, Chicago; J. C. Kragland, St. Louis; C. W. Taylor, Omaha; A. H. Mc-Laurin, St. Louis; John Hopp, Minneapolis; J. A. Ezell, Dallas; H. L. Knappen, Denver; B. E. Loper, Los geles; H. H. Hicks, San Francisco, and H. B. Dobbs, Seattle.

President Selznick and General Manager Kane remained in the Garment’s showing on Thursday when they returned to New York by the Twentieth Century.

Old Swindling Lottery Game Revived.

The American Investing Company, a concern with an office in the Boyce Building, this city, recently revived a swindling lottery game that was practiced in Chicago several years ago. The plan was the distribution of cards, a certain sum for each, which was supposed to be the property of addresses of patrons. Any patron whose name and address had been thus secured was called on later, at his or her home, by a representative of the concern. In each case the person on was paid, he being the winner of a valuable lot in some adjacent State, the said lot having been raffled off at the theater on the night which this or that person had attended.

The lucky individual in each case was assured by the wily agent of the bunco game that all he or she had to do was to pay a certain sum for the transfer of the deed and an abstract of title to the lot in question.

It is believed that only about 100 of the victims were in this manner. Some of them squealed, with the result that the grand jury ordered detectives from the state attorney’s office to raid the offices of the concern, seize its books and papers, and arrest the officials. The whole thing was done and an inspection of the documents seized will be made by the grand jury. It is expected that indictments will follow.

Mutual’s Publicity Department Goes to New York.

The publicity department of the Mutual Film Corporation and also the Screen Telegram department of that organization have moved headquarters in New York henceforth. Terry Ramsey, chief of publicity for the department, under the command of the members with his Chicago staff, are already in New York, the temporary headquarters being in Mutual’s office at 231 West Broadway. Mr. Ramsey and his staff will most likely occupy permanent quarters on another floor of the same building.

This partial transfer of Mutual’s forces from Chicago to New York was the forerunner of the removal to that city of the general executive and the entire office forces now in Chicago.

Action on Maypole Ordinance Deferred.

No action was taken by the judiciary committee on the Maypole ordinance at the meeting held Tuesday, June 18. Action was deferred until the meeting which will be held June 25.

Charles F. A. Young at Camp Grant.

Charles F. A. Young, who wrote many interesting articles on projection several years ago for the Moving Picture World and who, since that time, has been operator in several Chicago theaters, was drafted for service about five weeks ago and left for Camp Grant at Rockford, Ill. He had a letter from him the other day which afforded very pleasantly reading. With other interesting news was the statement that he wasstenographer and clerk of his company
(the 39th Illinois Depot Brigade), and that he had been appointed corporal June 9. He is very humble in speaking of this honor, and his heart and mind are set on making good.
Mr. Young is thoroughly in accord with his work and is strong for the officers in the camp. About them he writes:
“I just have to admire them for the work they can do. They work all day, drilling men, attending to details of their commands, etc., and then most of the night on reports and other ‘paper work,’ when occasion arises, or else studying in the officers’ school. I am ready at any time to call account any one who has an ill word for any United States Army officers.” Good for Charley!

Edgar Hopp Goes to Washington.

Edgar Hopp, first class yeoman of the United States Navy, Great Lakes Training Station, Illinois, after eleven months service there, has left for the near future to work as cameraman and still photographer for the Bureau of Public Information. Edgar is the son of Joseph Hopp, president of Chicago Local, M. P. E. of A.

“Cleopatra” Closes at Colonial.

“Cleopatra” closed its engagement at the Colonial Sunday, June 23, after a satisfactory run of four weeks. The final week showed a marked daily increase in the attendance, as photoplay goers realized that the last engagement was to be the Colonial at the end of the engagement, the total receipts for the four weeks having

H. Tipion Steck with Universal.

H. Tipion Steck, for many years the efficient editor of Essanay, has joined the Universal forces in Los Angeles. He hascharge in Universal City of what is known as the reconstruction bureau, where poorly
plays.

National Directors of Affiliated Meet.

Joseph Hopp and Louis H. Frank, national directors of the
for New York Tuesday, June 18, to attend the first meeting of the national directors of that organization, which was held Wednesday, June 19, in the Longacre Building.

"Firefly of France" Big Chicago Success.

Wallace Reid in "The Firefly of France" broke the receipts' record of Paramount-Artcraft pictures at Orchestra Hall in Chicago on Tuesday. The National Motion Picture Manager, Mr. H. F. Kellogg, informed me that these Orchestra Hall programs, which are now being arranged and directed solely by the management of the house, are proving very popular. The opening number on this week's program, was a Paramount-Bray Holme travelogue, then a Paramount-Bray pictograph, a musical prelude to the feature picture by the fine orchestra immediately followed by "The Firefly of France," and this in turn by "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," Sunday, June 16, to extraordinary business. Five presentations were given during the day till full capacity, although the heat was oppressive. The receipts from 15 cents tickets have been good. Mr. Szama informed me that he ran "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," on Sunday, June 16, to extraordinary business. Mr. Szama informed me that he ran "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," on Sunday, June 16, to extraordinary business. Five presentations were given during the day till full capacity, although the heat was oppressive. The receipts from 15 cents tickets have been good.

The feature of next week's program will be "A Desert Wooing," a love story featuring Enid Bennett.

A Thrifty Picture Theater Owner.

Vincent Szama, proprietor and manager of the Cornell Square theater, 1923 West Fifty-first street, this city, made a call at the Chicago office last week. The Cornell Square seats three hundred persons and offers programs which include Paramount, Mutual and Universal makes, seven or eight reels to each program. A daily charge is made and Mr. Szama informed me that he ran "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," Sunday, June 16, to extraordinary business. Five presentations were given during the day till full capacity, although the heat was oppressive. The receipts from 15 cents tickets have been good. Mr. Szama purchased this theater in September, 1917, and has raised the business from almost nothing to a good-paying proposition. He has been a regular exhibitor three years. At one time he accumulated sufficient capital, together with other savings, to purchase the house. He is very much pleased with his bargain.

Film Exporters of America Hold Meeting

Plan to Present Brief to Kitchen Committee Showing Handicap Created Through Present Import Tax—Elect Permanent Officers Next Meeting.

The third meeting of the Film Exporters of America was held at the Hotel Astor on Thursday, June 20, with practically all members present. With Temporary Chairman, Mr. Davis, the meeting was to consider the membership charter, drafted by a committee composed of W. E. Shallenberger, temporary treasurer; Louis R. Thomas and Harry G. Kosch. This same committee was thereupon appointed to draw up a set of by-laws to be ready for the next meeting—at the Hotel Astor, Thursday, June 27, at 12:30 p.m.—at which time the permanent officers of the association will be elected.

The appointed meeting with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry with regard to effecting an affiliation with that body reported that a joint meeting had not yet been held with the committee representing exporters and importers. The joint committee has been unable to get together solely because of the many vital issues now confronting the association. Those on the committee for the F. E. of A. are David P. Howell, L. R. Thomas, Sidney Garretta, Joseph R. Miles and S. S. Krellberg. The N. A. M. P. I. committee consists of P. A. Powers, Gabriel Hess and Walter W. Irwin.

In the general discussion it was stated that at the present time approximately ten million dollars in foreign money and therefore new money was being brought into the country through exportation of film. Many interesting facts and points of view were brought out regarding the present difficulties experienced by American exporters of film, especially as affected by the federal tax. It seems that the Ways and Means Committee at Washington does not clearly understand just what effect the footage tax will have on our foreign trade. They are laboring under the wrong impression that England, after whose tax our own has been patterned, has imposed a foot- age tax of a similar nature. Congressman Kichin, chairman of the committee, expressed himself as willing to suggest revisions, either in the present tax or in the proposed new measure, providing that his body be shown any injustice incurred by the levy. The cost of shipment has always been higher in the United States than in other manufacturing countries, and it has long served as a handicap to the complete success of our export business. Even though American motion pictures possess acknowledged superiority the cheaper market price of foreign films will more than overbalance this virtue. Wise consideration of the matter at this time, the F. E. of A. rightly contends, will serve to bind the foreign buyer to the United States. Then, too, no other country, either now or at any other time, has levied just such a tax as this on footages.

Exporters Will Appeal to Congress Committee.

It was decided that the Film Exporters of America would either collaborate with the N. A. M. P. I. in drafting a brief to be sent to the Ways and Means Committee so as to give the points of view, now being forced to plan the new tax measure, or in case the brief of the N. A. M. P. I. has already been drafted it would present the exporters' case in a separate brief.

Office recognition was given by the meeting of the un- selish work of Paul H. Cromelin and his associates, who recently journeyed to Washington and secured several notable modifications of what would have been stringent rulings affecting the film exporting activities. The book, a form in a resolution of thanks that Mr. Kosch was instructed to send to the head of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

There were several complaints by members of delays in cable dispatches to many parts of the world, especially to the Far East. Some cases of absolute failure to deliver the message were reported. A committee was appointed to present these difficulties to the Federal Reserve Board, with sincere hope that a solution on the cable and telegraph organizations at this time.

The writer has witnessed the growth and development of many trade protective organizations. He feels safe in saying however, that no one of these has added more thorough virility or more sincerity of purpose. It will unquestionably be to the interest of every film exporter, managers of export department of producing or accessory houses and foreign buyers now in New York to attend the next meeting at the Hotel Astor on Thursday, June 27, at 12:30 p.m., on the eighth floor, as formerly. Luncheon will be served during the course of the meeting.

Davis Will Not Attend Convention

Triangle Man Starts on Vacation, Following Which He Will Return to Los Angeles Studios.

The Moving Picture World has it on the best of authority that the expected appearance of H. O. Davis, of the Triangle Film Corporation, at the Boston convention for a talk to exhibitors on "where the money goes" will not mature. Mr. Davis is now in New York City, but the call of a vacation which has been denied to him for six years is coming from the California mountains. After he has had his rest he will announce future plans, if any agreement, to give the Triangle studios the benefit of his knowledge as a production chief.

The World spoke to a representative of Mr. Davis at the Hotel Huntington. Mr. Davis told the World that he is looking for a grip for the hike back west. "Now the fact of the matter," said the Davis spokesman, "is that it won't be a case of telling troubles, for there aren't any more in the majority of the studios." "There is no great wastage and no ruinous economy. The Davis idea—if you care to so call it—has finally obtained in the average producing department.

"The wrong sort of saving, it is now recognized, is as bad as wasting. The well-spent producing dollar is the one that shows one hundred cents large on the screen.

"Mr. Davis believes in studio efficiency only to that extent. He feels when such a case is called for one of economy is false—injurious even. I do not believe that he will be able to participate at Boston, but if he went there his talk would be confined to the following points: "1. Spend whatever is necessary to produce it properly. 2. Spend whatever is necessary to get perfect photography. 3. Spend whatever is necessary to show dollar for dollar on the screen!"

Pennsylvania League Elects Officers.

At the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania League Thurs- day, June 13, the officers for the ensuing year, much business of an organization nature was transacted, and reports were read showing that the membership was growing. The following officers were elected: President, George Schwitzer; vice-president, Sidney J. Shallenberger; treasurer, L. C. Schmidt. The board of directors consists of J. Mason, H. P. Kestor, R. Soltz, L. Goldberg, George Schwitzer, Oliver McKee, Henry Pfoke, L. Oppenheimer.

Thomas H. Ince to Return to Culver City
Negotiations Closed for New Studio Site—$200,000 to Be Spent on Structures.

As a result of negotiations that have been in progress for several months it was announced on June 11, that a site comprising eleven acres at Culver City has been purchased by Thomas H. Ince, and that a group of buildings to cost about $200,000 will be erected there. Mr. Ince has already begun work of clearing the land and the new studio will be ready for occupation as soon as the new buildings are completed.

The land acquired by Mr. Ince fronts on Washington boulevard and is about half a mile nearer to Los Angeles than the previous site. The new studio is intended to double his present capacity at the new location. The selection of the site was made after investigations of several other locations that had been offered.

Planes are expected to be ready for the erection of some eighteen buildings, which will be grouped in the form of a quadrangle. The glass inclosed stages, laboratories, projection rooms and other equipment will be of the latest complete and improved kind. Architecturally it is intended that the new studio will be especially attractive.

More Comforts for Triangle Players.

Following close on the construction of the gymnasium, plunge and tennis courts for Triangle employees, O. L. Sellers, in charge of the big Culver City studios, is making another improvement which should add materially to the comfort of the employees. Two reading and lounge rooms, one for men and the other for the women, are being decorated and furnished. All the current papers, magazines and motion picture trade papers will be kept on hand in these reading rooms, where Triangle players can while away their leisure.

Dustin Farnum Entertained by Sanitary Train.

Dustin Farnum has been officially adopted by the 115th Sanitary Train of the army division stationed at Camp Kearny, California. Mr. Farnum visited his brothers for the first time on Wednesday, June 12. Upon his arrival at camp, the entire Sanitary Train passed in review before Mr. Farnum and Lieut.-Col. Jolley. The men were then brought up to a stand by the Major John Sharp, on behalf of the entire organization, presented Mr. Farnum with a Gruen watch, upon which were inscribed the words, "To our big brother, Dustin Farnum, from the 115th Sanitary Train, U.S. Army." Mr. Farnum was taken off his horse by the honor.

After the review the men of the Sanitary Train put on several athletic events. Following this, Mr. Farnum was conducted to an elaborate luncheon in the officers' mess hall. For his entertainment the members of the train put on eight acts of vaudeville.

After luncheon Mr. Farnum and the officers and men of the train witnessed a ball game between the 115th Sanitary Train and the 159th Infantry. Naturally, the 115th Sanitary Train were victorious over their opponents, the 159th, who incidentally, are the proteges of Bill Hart.

After the game a series of little plays were staged by Mr. Farnum and the other stars, while foot races were run by the members of the Sanitary Train. Following this an open-air barbecue was attended by Mr. Farnum and the entire personnel of the train.

Stage Women's War Relief Gets Entertainment.

The Stage Women's War Relief gave an entertainment June 11 for the men at the lower reservation at Fort MacArthur. The program included an address by Mrs. Lillian Brockwell and others participating were Helen Rayburn, reader; Jeanetta Crawford, vocalist; H. B. Crouch, sleight-of-hand; Harry McCoy, comedy and music; Hank Mann and Larry Seaman, wrestling match; Polly Moran, in comedy character work, and Mrs. Harmony Ryus as accompanist.

Mrs. Tyrone Power is the head of the entertainment committe and the programs already given under her direction in the camps at San Diego and San Pedro have been most enthusiastically received by the boys.

Selig Veterans Join Universal Forces.

Colin Campbell, veteran of many years with Selig and who is remembered as the producer of "The Spoilers," "The Crisis," "The Garden of Allah," "The Ne'er Do Well," and other large feature productions, has been engaged by Universal and has started rehearsing on a Bluebird feature for this company.

Fritzi Brunette, also well known Selig star, has joined the Universal and is being featured in "Should a Woman Tell?", a melodrama directed by Douglas Gerrard, from a script adaptation by F. McGrew Willis of Sidney Toler's drama "Playthings." Miss Brunette is supported by Mary Anderson, Lew Cody, Phil Dunham, Fred Turner, Myrtle Reynolds and others.

Tom Nash, another veteran of the Selig forces and for many years production manager at the Selig Western studios, goes to Universal as assistant to Henry McKae, director general of the big "U." Western studio. Mr. Nash is one of the pioneers in the motion picture industry and was one of the first motion picture directors to reach the Pacific Coast.

Ernest Shipman in Town.

Ernest Shipman, the well known New York film man, is in Los Angeles and paid the World office a visit on Wednesday, June 12. Mr. Shipman stated that he has thirty-two pictures a year on contract and that he expects within a short time to have at least fifty-two.

Mr. Shipman is handling a multi-million dollar series and Francis Ford's first release, "Berlin Via America," also the Josh Binney comedies. He has a contract with the First National Exhibitors and a new Japanese secret service story, starring Walker Whiteside, and will arrange for the production of his picture while here. Mr. Shipman has also contracted to handle the Lloyd Carleton production and a number of other feature film subjects.

The film man said after locating an exchange in Los Angeles he would return to New York and re-establish exchanges in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Denver, Omaha, Minneapolis and other centres.

Al Jennings Leads Largest Star Stunt Ever Made in Western.

The old Essanay studios at Culver City have been leased by Al Jennings, who is now heading his own producing company. W. S. Van Dyke is directing the first picture, which is called "The Lady of the Dug-Out." The story is taken from actual experiences in the lives of the "Jennings Boys," Al and Frank, and both are the principal characters in the story. The production will be in five reels.

The preliminary scenes of this production were taken in Arizona.

UNCLE SAM'S MEN WELCOME AT FOX STUDIOS.

It is announced from the William Fox offices that through the permission of Mr. Fox and Sol Wurtzel, Pacific Coast manager of the William Fox studios, an invitation has been extended to all of the men of the army and navy to pay a visit to the Fox studios at Hollywood any Saturday afternoon that might suit their pleasure.

The studios are on Western avenue, between Santa Monica Boulevard and Hollywood Boulevard.

BURLINGTON HOLMES ARRIVES IN LONDON.

A cable dispatch from Burton Holmes, lecturer and photographer, has been received at his New York office, stating that he and his staff have arrived safely in London, after a fourteen days' voyage. Mr. Holmes will remain in London for three weeks prior to going to France.
Famous Players’ Executives Outline Plans

Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Walter E. Greene and Al. Lichtman Tell What Will Be Done by Their Company in the Coming Year to Provide Entertainment for the Great Public—New Players and Old Favorites on the Roster

A Year’s Budget

By Adolph Zukor,
President of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

It is possible in the realm of art, as well as in the realm of business, to establish for one’s self a definite aim. In business such an aim comes under the term of annual budget, and its value is too well known to need exposition, but there is in art the same value attached to a goal toward which every effort is to be bent, and this goal, too, may be expressed in the form of an annual budget. There is a great deal to be said in favor of establishing this definite course to be run. It has in its elements of definite inspiration and a definite understanding of just how far ambition may go.

It has been the custom in the motion picture industry to set forth each year the plans and aspirations of the work of the coming year. This is true of all branches of the amusement industry, but, unfortunately, in many cases the performance has not equaled the promise, because of the very evident desire on the part of the amusement manager to make his future appear rosy, and because the many elements of uncertainty have not been cut into the business of the amusement world. But today it is possible to establish a budget for the work of the moving picture business based on authoritative knowledge and prearranged plans, which can be made as definite and as exacting as the most stable businesses in the world. This is what the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has envisioned to do for the year beninging September 1, 1918, and ending August 31, 1919, to establish a mark to shoot at which is worthy of the highest aim, a goal set after the most careful consideration, the most thorough preparation, and, we believe, the most complete understanding of what shall be, for the public, of the “greatest entertaining” value, and, for the exhibitor the means for making his business a genuine, real,
through success.

Such an understanding can come not from guesswork or from the chance estimate of any one man or any two or three men, no matter how well versed in moving picture philosophy they may be. It must come from an experience based on years of hard work, years of constant endeavor for betterment, years of study and practice and revision, made by the largest number of intelligent motion picture experts obtainable, whose estimates are based on searching investigation and definite, helpful experience in every phase of the motion picture industry.

Such an understanding, we honestly believe, is the one powerful asset of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.
There is much to prove that this is so. The very history of this organization speaks this truth. Its growth from the ideals of six years ago; its acceptance of public judgment; its constant endeavor to be of ever-increasing help to the real and to the means of many producers. Paramount, the great motion picture public; its enormous national advertising, exploitation, and, finally, the faith of exhibitors who may be termed true stars, all have helped to put Famous Players-Lasky in a position to judge and judge correctly what shall make for the success of the motion picture business this next year of its splendid history.

So it is with a feeling of confidence based on adequate experience and sound business judgment that this company has set its goal for the next year of its existence. Back of that confidence is the truth. Both the confidence and the pride have a reason for being.

Company Has Added Many Stars.

First, there is the known value of the stars who will appear in Paramount and Arclight pictures. To the already formidable list of luminaries whose popularity in pictures is acknowledged by all we have added new stars in absolute certainty. There is no need to bolster up confidence in the hope that such men as Fred Stone, George M. Cohan, David Griffith, Cecil B. DeMille, Douglas Fairbanks, William.S.
Hart, John Emerson, Charles Ray, John Barrymore, Bryant Washburn and Wallace Reid will interest the moving picture public. That hope is a dead certainty.

And so with such stars as Marguerite Clark, Linda Cavalleri, Ethel Clayton, Shirley Mason, Billie Burke, Lila Lee, Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett, Vivian Martin, Mary Pickford, Elsie Ferguson, and Dorothy Gish their work adversity and no gaunt, gloomy power when they are provided with the stories, the directors, the settings and the artistic intelligence that we aim to put back of every

The resources back of the production department of Famous Players-Lasky is not a mere matter of luck. It is the result of a definite aim and the ability to attract and interest persons of proved worth in the production of motion pictures.

Confidence in the success of our year’s “budget” is based also on the known loyalty and service of our distributing agencies and the selling plan for the year. Two hundred and eight productions in twelve months makes four features a week. With the stars at its command and the proved value of the “Success Series” pictures, each one of these productions will be a real “feature” worthy of the highest exposition and, properly presented, of definite value to the exhibitor that shows them. It therefore becomes possible for this company to present to the public through the exhibitors of America the finest attractions at the most reasonably prices at which such productions of this calibre can be produced and distributed.

With such a plan it is possible for every exhibitor to make an unqualified financial success of his business during the coming year. There is no reason why any exhibitor anywhere in the country cannot place his theater on a high plane by showing Paramount and Arclight pictures. After reading the roster of stars who are to appear in Paramount and Arclight pictures during the coming season it seems needless to state that the company is employing the greatest talent ever engaged in the making of motion pictures. The progress of the producing department has been artistically consistent until now we are firm in the conviction that there are no other pictures made which can compare in artistic value and drawing power with those of this company. And for these pictures we have but one desire: the greatest circulation possible at a price within the reach of all exhibitors.

Another reason for our confidence in the success of our year is—the marked good-will and good reputation we have built up with public and exhibitor. That reputation and good will does not come overnight and does not come by luck. It is the result of hard work, backed by a constant ideal and the ability to show the superiority of our aims to the public through our national exploitation work.

Give the public a chance and in the long run it is sure to bear good results. Six or seven years ago a silent photodrama was a "jitty" show the public's sense of discrimination was not so keen. It was in direct ratio with the amount of real art and merit to be found in pictures of that day. But since that time rising prosperity and the excellent workmanship of the last three years have, aided in no small part by the establishment of the feature picture.

Exhibitor Knows the Public Does Discriminate.

The public is letting the exhibitor know that it does discriminate. No housewife will go to the grocery store nowadays to buy "a good scouring soap." She discriminates when she comes to pay her five cents and asks for a particular brand that she knows is good because her mother found it good before her, because it has always lived up to its advertisements and because she has found it good herself.

No man will go to the drug store and ask for "a good safety razor." He knows a particular brand by its advertisements and by the exercise of due discrimination whether the price be a nickel for a cigar of $2.00 for an automobile.

So we say to our exhibitors, Mr. and Mrs. Public: Set the public ask for you. Give them a show to look to a coming picture show they are learning to know that there is a brand on the goods they are about to purchase, a brand that is the trade mark of a big producing firm striving hard to make their products the best in art, in direction, in photography, in scenic equipment, in entertainment value and in everything that enters into the production of the very best in moving pictures.

The reason for the good-will will back with Paramount and Artcraft pictures, and that, too, is the reason for our confidence in what we intend to do in this new season.

And finally we have confidence in our new pictures for one very good reason. The people have been thoroughly acquainted with the kind of stories that are to be told in Paramount and Artcraft pictures. Wholesome dramas, uplifting in character; clean comedies, comedy dramas and plays dealing with the more cheerful aspects of life will be exclusively chosen for production.

Such material as "Johnny Get Your Gun" and "The Big Top" for Fred Stone; "On the Quiet" and "Something to do for John Baskin" for "The Cruise of the Make Believe" for Lila Lee; "Out of a Clear Sky" for Marguerite Clark; "Come On In" for Shirley Mason; "The Pursuit of Polly" for Billy Burke; "Captain Kidd, Jr." and "The Mobilization of Johanna" for Mary Pickford are examples of the kind of places of prosperity by broadsides of prosperity.

The reason for our decision to eliminate photodramas of a morbid, depressing or tragic character as well as those concerned with religious problems, fairy tales and costume plays must be obvious to others as it is to us. Our conviction is the result of a thorough canvass of the situation, an interrogation covering the whole country, and our knowledge, which everyone shares, as to the effect of the war on the moving pictures.

Theater in War Time More Than Ever a Necessity.

In times of peace, the maxim of "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" is well recognized, and the film industry was brought to its present proportions because the American public bought pictures. In times of war with the added mental burdens, the motion picture theater is more than ever a public necessity and its value is in the inspiration it can give, in the entertainment it can bring to help the people to be cheerful and courageous throughout the stress of such times.

Advertising is now essential to the exhibitor, for he should drive home the fact that his is the playhouse of comfort, amusement and entertainment, in which are presented the famous stars of the stage and screen.

Many theaters will take advantage of the conditions which have arisen because of the war and will capture increased patronage and prosperity, appealing to this necessity for relaxation that is in everyone of us.

It should not be forgotten that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has demonstrated its faith in the present conditions and the anticipation of the future by its great national advertising work to acquaint the public with the photoplays it produces and that it is backing up this publicity with the best pictures that brains and money can produce. The prosperity of the picture then is a necessary, promising prosperity, and we are desirous of building on solid ground.

So this is the message we wish to bring to the exhibitors and the great public behind them: Famous Players enters into its new picture year with a certain, sure success, and it is our wish to be in the front rank with those responsible for such success. Hence we are confident that these productions in our new year are to be the best that can be made today. And if we do our duty by ourselves, by the exhibitor and by the public, they will be the best pictures tomorrow and through all the glorious future that is still to come for the motion picture industry.

A Large Motion Picture Undertaking

Outline of What the Producing Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Will Do for the Season of 1918-19.

By Jesse L. Lasky,

Vice-President, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in Charge of Productions.

The preparation of one hundred and fifty-six Paramount and Artcraft pictures, each of five or more reels, and aside from the short subjects, presenting a general standard of quality and drawing power that can be equalled, even the product of our own studios in the past, is a task of truly gigantic proportions. That the most tremendous motion picture undertaking ever attempted by any organization in the history of the screen has been allowed to the producers of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the fulfillment of this schedule is readily evident.

With the best efforts of the greatest galaxy of players, directors, writers and technical experts in the industry at our command, it is only natural to expect notable achievements from the producers of Paramount and Artcraft pictures during the next twelve months commensurate with those of the past years, and more so, for our organization has been augmented with new genius and facilities. It is further natural to expect that the motion picture industry on the whole will be made a far greater enterprise than ever before as a result of the increased possibilities of our producing department.

Appearing in Paramount and Artcraft pictures produced in the East and West, will be the following stars: Marguerite Clark, Lina Cavalieri, Billie Burke, Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex, Ethel Clayton, Francis de Mille, Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett, Pauline Frederick, Viola Dana, Pat Lay, Barrymore, Lila Lee, Dorothy Gish and Bryant Washburn. In Artcraft pictures there will be Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, George M. Cohan, Elsie Ferguson, William S. Hart and Fred Stone. D. W. Griffith and Cecil De Mille also will produce Artcraft pictures of super-quality and drawing power. In addition, there will be staged a number of special productions under both the Paramount and Arclight tradenames.

Mary Pickford's first two Arclight pictures are "Captain Kidd, Jr.," a comedy which played one whole season on Broadway, and was produced by Cohan & Harris, and "The Moon's Anniversary," which was produced by Hughes. Others, "Our Mary" will continue to show ever-increasing artistry which with each successive picture further enhances her popularity.

Following such sensational successes as his Arclight releases of the past year have evidenced, Douglas Fairbanks, in his own language, will, to a greater extent than ever, hit them in the eye, knock them over, roll them down hill and leave them out of breath. Others, "Our Mary" has already lined up a program that it would seem will make it easy for him to fulfill his expectations.

Elise Fitzgerald's record of the past year is evidence sufficient of her great hold on the American public as a film favorite, justifying every promise which the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation made for her when she was yet untired on the run on Broadway. Others, "Our Mary" will not only fulfilled all that was claimed for her, but has gradually risen to a pinnacle obtained by only a few who seek the public's favor. Her new Arclight pictures, during the coming year, will be produced with the same care and limitless resource as has marked all her previous subjects.

Bill Hart, the Beloved "Bad Man."

William S. Hart, the most beloved "bad man" in the world, will also produce a new series of photoplays for Arclight releasing some of his previous productions, something of the humanity of Burt Harte; but there is unmistakably something of the tenacity of William S. Hart in each production, which has been responsible for the hold this man has upon his American public. Others, "Our Mary" for the coming year present a most fitting contribution to followers of Arclight pictures.

Hit-the-Trail Holiday" can bear witness to the fact that George M. Cohan in the right picture is the type of film favorite the American audience wants to see. His pictures for the coming year, based on famous stage productions written by himself, will go far to reaffirm the judgment of those who have seen his previous successes.

D. W. Griffith and Cecil B. De Mille, the two famous masters of screen production, will stage for Arclight release further copho-making cinemas such as have placed them foremost in their profession in the past. Productions that will exceed in merit even "The Great Love," "Hearts of the World," "Joan the Woman" and "Old Wives for New" are promised.

Marguerite Clark, in a series of productions under the direction of Marshall Neilan, of which the first, "Out of a Clear Sky," will be completed early in autumn, is another important card in our production plans. The combination of Miss Clark and Miss Neilan was an unusual producing team. For years these two have been co-workers at our studios, Neilan having appeared as leading man in some of Miss Clark's productions. He now returns as director, with Miss Clark as his lady in waiting, fully-speeded, as disclosed by his work in recent Mary Pickford pictures, and Miss Clark and he have entered upon their association with an enthusiasm that guarantees extraordinary Paramount pictures.

The debut of Fred Stone in motion pictures as an Arclight star will unquestionably be one of the most interesting events in the autumn and will be regarded by millions of photoplay fans, to whom his name is a household word, as an announcement of a new trend in comedy production on the screen. Pictures will follow and many surprises will be screened as a result of the marked originality and individuality of this famous player.

Shirley Mason will be given vehicles which are particular adaptable to her beauty and charm. Her initial subject is entitled "Come On In," in which Ernest Truex, the young-est comedy star on the American stage, will appear in her support. This is a piece of particular characterization by Miss Mason and is directed by Mr. Emerson. It is a comedy of the training camps and should strike a responsive chord in the breast of every photoplay fan in America.

Paul Clayton is among the few motion picture artists who have held their places through the years that the cinema has emerged to its present great vogue. Miss Clayton will be starred in Paramount Pictures offering the type of drama for which there is constantly growing demand. Her first production will be an adaptation of the famous drama, "Leah Kleeschma."

John Barrymore, Too, Is Coming Back.

The return of John Barrymore to Paramount Pictures marks the reemergence on the screen of a man whose moving rank is as a leading American actor. Among his first pictures to be produced are "On the Quiet," the famous farcical comedy by Augustus Thomas, which has made millions laugh, and Maximilian Foster's popular story, "Something to Do."

Dorothy Gish will make her debut as a full-figured Para-mount star during the coming year. As a result of her extraordinary work in the leading comedy role of W. Griffith's, "Hearts of the World," she is becoming one of the much-discussed women artists in America. Announcement of the titles of her pictures is without description of the effect of this being given to her early productions which will be made at our West Coast studios, the first of which is "The Cruise of the Make-Believe," by Tom Galton, and the experiment of a further copho-making cinema which will be watched with close attention by our producing force.

Wallace Reid in the coming year will be consistently starred in Paramount comedy dramas, which give him an opportunity to make the most of his talent. His additional films will be chosen with the same thoroughness that has been given to his previous successes.

D. W. Griffith and Cecil B. De Mille, the two famous masters of screen production, will stage for Arclight release further copho-making cinemas such as have placed them foremost in their profession in the past. Productions that will exceed in merit even "The Great Love," "Hearts of the World," "Joan the Woman" and "Old Wives for New" are promised.

Lina Cavalieri, the famous star of the opera as well as screen, will be given subjects befitting her regal bearing and great dramatic capabilities. Lucien Muratore will also be seen in one of her Paramount pictures, "The Rose of Granada."

Three Ince Stars Will Continue for the Year.

The Thomas H. Ince stars, Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton and Enid Bennett, have been wellestablished Paramount artists. The promise from this noted film producer that these three favorites will continue next season in the type of story which experience has proved them best suited for should be充分理由 to believe in the continued success of these talents in modern photoplay production, will continue to supervise the work of these three young stars whose wide popularity is the reward of exceptional talents properly developed under the care of a master.

The unanimous verdict of exhibitors and public following the release of Miss Burke's "Let's Get a Divorce" has proved unmistakably that photoplaygoers desire to see her in the type of story which it has been proved Miss Burke can produce. The promise that they will continue next season in the type of story which has brought them their present popularity is reflected in their choice of a star of the first rank in a new production of the most important factors in modern photoplay production, will continue to supervise the work of these three young stars whose wide popularity is the reward of exceptional talents properly developed under the care of a master.

expected from the staff of directors and authors staging Paramount and Artcraft pictures and presenting the most notable plays of the stage to screen. With such a program of pretentious work before us there is little wonder that we should take pride in our activities for the coming year and expect to achieve not only the greatest production record in the history of the photoplay, but to place on a new level the photoplay art in general.

Paramount-Artcraft's Success Series

Mary Pickford in Eight Revivals Heads List of Popular Stars in Attractive Reissues.

The inauguration of the Success Series comes into existence with the announcement by the new organization of the release dates of all the pictures which have been produced for them throughout the country. It is announced that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which will distribute, commencing September 1, one reissue a week under this title. The pictures which have been selected for the Success Series were subjects in which stars made their reputation and they will be new to present theatergoers. The canvass of exhibitors, it is said, has indicated that they have practically a new audience today and that a great army of people have been converted to motion pictures in the last few years. Practically all of the old-time regulars, it is pointed out, will likewise be interested in seeing them again.

Many exhibitors have already attempted to secure bookings on these pictures because of the fact that the distributors preferred to shelve them rather than allow worn out prints to be shipped. The Success Series, therefore, provides an organized outlet for such bookings and is rebookings sufficient to warrant the making of new prints with modern technical improvements.

The list of Success Series, with a few explanatory lines concerning each picture for the information of the exhibitor, has been especially prepared by the Moving Picture World as follows: There will be eight pictures starring Mary Pickford.

Mary Pickford Heads the List.

"The Eagle's Mate" shows Mary in the role of a gently reared girl of the hills who is thrown into a moonshiner, but finally wins the man of her choice. James Kirkwood is the villain.

"Caprice," the play in which Minnie Maddern Fiske starred, the part of a Dutch girl playing opposite another character. Owen Moore plays opposite. A country girl is brought suddenly into a society environment, finds herself out of place and returns home to educate herself.

"Hulda From Holland," by Edith Delano, directed by John B. O'Brien. Friendless Dutch girl lately arrived in America finds herself at home, but happiness and a sweetheart.

"Hearts Adrift," an old-time favorite, directed by Farnum. Spanish girl cast away on a South Sea island, becomes the common-law wife of another castaway and is happy until fate throws the love of her life in her path.

Behind the Scenes of the Panama Canal, directed by James Kirkwood. Contrasts the drama of life with the glamour of the footlights. Miss Pickford is seen in one of the best characterizations of her early career.

"The Dawn of a Tomorrow," by Frances Hodgson Burnett. An ignored slum girl is enabled by a mysterious power which she but vaguely comprehends, to save her sweetheart from the gallows.

"Rags," by Edith B. Delano. A girl rises from the lowest strata of life to a position of social importance and finds it possible to marry the man she loves.

"The Godless," by James Kirkwood; story by Frances Hodgson Burnett. Based upon the separation of Esmeralda from her sweetheart by the unexpected finding of a fortune on the farm suddenly developing social ambitions of her mother.

Miss Clark Stars in Six.

Six of the Success Series will be Marguerite Clark features. "Wildflower," directed by Allan Dwan, story by Mary Germaine, is the production in which Miss Clark was introduced to the screen. She portrays the character of a child of nature who knows nothing of the meaning of love until she meets the man in all the world for her.

"The Crucible," from Mark Lee Luther's story of a girl who has been unjustly condemned to a reformatory because of a simple girlish prank; how she triumphs and in the end is rewarded.

"The Goose Girl," William C. De Mille’s scenario of Harold MacGrath’s novel; directed by Frederick Thompson. A princess is stolen by gypsies and subsequently adopted by peasants. She falls in love with the king of a neighboring country and shares his throne.

"Gretina Green," by Grace Livingston Furniss. Romantic comedy of the picturesque period of the early nineteenth century, the ambitions of Gretina Green add a dash of excitement to life.

"The Great George Washington," by Lewis Allen; directed by J. Searle Dawley. Story of a girl who told a fib—and then many more of them.

Miss Frederick’s Half Dozen.

Pauline Frederick also will be seen in six features of the series. "Gold," tells of a girl who demonstrates the value of a young man for another and is misjudged. Hugh Ford directed.

"Zaza," from the story and play by Berton and Simon. Directed by Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford. Scene interpretation and the life of a young girl presented on the stage by Rejane, Bernhardt and Mrs. Leslie Carter.

"Bella Donna," from Robert Hichens’ novel of the treachery and punishment of a woman swayed by uncontrollable passion.

"The Eternal City," by Hall Caine. Directed by Edwin S. Porter and Hugh Ford. Production photographed in Rome, Italy, where the scenes of the story are laid.

"The Woman in the Case," from the play by Clyde Fitch. A story of a wife who never loses faith in her husband, though he is accused of the murder of a friend.

"Sapho," from the pen of Alphonse Daudet. Directed by Hugh Story. The story of a girl who forges fame and notoriety for the love of a young student.

Dustin Farnum Has Four.

Dustin Farnum will again be seen in four of his best known pictures. "The Virginian," by Owen Wister; scenario and direction by Cecil B. De Mille. A monument to the "West that was."

"Captain Courtesy," a stirring story of the early days in California when the Mexicans were in authority there. Directed by William D. Taylor. Scenario by an artist who forges fame and notoriety for the love of a young student.

"Victor Moore’s "Chimmy Fadden."

"Chimmy Fadden," dramatized for the stage by Augustus Thomas from E. W. Townsend’s book. This was one of Mr. Moore’s greatest successes on the stage as well as on the screen. The scenario was by Cecil B. De Mille, who also directed.

"Sons," by George Bronson Howard, was directed by Oscar Apfel and is the laughable story of a milkman who suddenly inherits a title.

Farrar, Farmun and Barrymore.

Geraldine Farrar will again be seen in "Carmen." The scenario is by William C. De Mille, and Cecil B. De Mille directed. The operatic star will also be seen under Mr. De Mille’s direction in "Temptation," a story of a milkman directed by Frank Lloyd; and in William C. De Mille’s screen version of "María Rosa," Angel Guimera’s tragedy of a Spanish peasant girl.

William Farnum will be seen in "The Redemption of David Clove," Charles Frederick Goss noted story of a man’s regeneration; and in "The Sign of the Cross," Wilson Barrett’s great play of the struggle of Christianity against Paganism.

John Barrymore makes his reappearance in four of his greatest comedies. "Are You a Mason?" by Leo Ditrichstein, is the story of a married man who pretends to join a lodge in order to start a temperance movement in Mexico; by H. A. Du Souchet and directed by Thomas Heffron, is a tale based upon a trip to Mexico which the leading character took only in his imagination. "The Dictator" is a comedy-drama by Richard Harding Davis, which chronicles the adventures of a young American who becomes dictator of a small republic in South America. "The Lost Bridegroom," though funny, is still thrilling, showing Barrymore in the role of the anti-hero. Willard Mack wrote it and James Kirkwood directed.

Jack Pickford Features Five.

Five features starring Jack Pickford are included in the series. They are "Seventeen," Booth Tarkington’s humorous story of a "puppy love," which Robert Vignola directed; "Great Expectations," adapted from Charles Dickens’ novel and directed by Robert Vignola; "Freekles," Gene Stratton Porter's story of a runaway orphan, directed by Robert Marshall Neilan; "What Money Can't Buy," the famous Griffith production, and "Bertie," the sequel to a rich young American for the love of a princess, directed by Karl Kolberg, and "The Dummy," from the play by Harvey J. Higgins and Harriet Ford, based upon the kidnapping of a child and their war against a villain.

Eleven With Various Stars.
In addition to these there will be eleven special productions as follows: "The House of the Lost Court," mystery story by Mrs. C. N. Williamson, in which Viola Dana is starred in the Penny Marshall's first screen play from the drama by Charles L. Young; "The Country Cousin," by Edgar Selwyn, directed by Frederick Thompson and starring Marshall Neilan, a story of the downfall and regeneration of a youth; "The Range," by D. W. Griffith; "The Traveling Salesman," written by James Forbes and directed by Joseph Kaufman; "Fannie and Sid," the story of a woman's struggle to preserve her honor, by Hector Turnbull and directed by Cecil B. De Mille; an all-star cast in David Belasco's great play, "The Girl of the Golden West," which was directed by Cecil B. De Mille; an all-star cast in "The Old Homestead," DeMille's stage classic of American country life, directed by James Kirkwood; William H. Crane, in "David Harum," the delightfully quaint story of rural life by Edward Noyes Westcott; "Pollyanna," directed by William V. McIntyre; "Paddy Wilson," a Twain story of law, love and finger prints, the late Frank Mayo presented on the stage; Bessie Barriscale in "The Rose of the Rancho," the dramatic tale of ranching by David Butts; "Washburn," which was produced under Cecil B. De Mille's direction; and Blanche Sweet in "The Warrens of Virginia," David Belasco's Civil War drama which with William C. De Mille scenarioized and Cecil B. De Mille directed.

"It will be noted," said a Famous Players-Lasky Corporation official, "that every one of these pictures carries the best artistry these stars have displayed. In reissuing them, the prints will be all from the latest, most technical and photographic art, which will make them even more attractive than when first released. These reissues will be handled in the laboratories in the same manner as a new production, from which they are distinguished in every respect, especially as we are only using such pictures as can appropriately be handled in such manner."

Seven Players New to Artcraft-Paramount

Jesse Lasky Outlines Past Performances of His Company's Recent Acquisitions.

SEVEN new stars who will be seen in Paramount and Artcraft Pictures during the coming year starting September 1, in addition to the many former stars of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation who will again appear in their company as they have been signed to it is announced. Six of these stars will appear under the Paramount banner. They are Ethel Clayton, Jack Barrymore, Lila Lee, Dorothy Gish, Bryant Washburn and Shirley Mason, Fred Stone, who has just arrived at the Hollywood studio in California, will appear in Artcraft Pictures.

The production of these players will come under the supervision of Jesse L. Lasky. "These additional stars," said Mr. Lasky in outlining their work for the coming year, "are the brightest lights of the stage and screen, whom we desire to have eminently fitted for stellar roles under the Paramount and Artcraft names. Of the players now appearing in our productions, the greatest ensemble of public favorites in the history of American films, either on the speaking stage or the screen, is presented. "Fred Stone is unquestionably the most famous comedian on the speaking stage today, possessing not only dramatic ability, but a marked individuality. He is renowned for his eccentric and farcical antics, which have made him a popular favorite from the time he appeared with a circus some years ago. It is a significant fact that Fred Stone plays have been sold out for a run of similar attraction ever launched, some of them being presented successfully two and three years without interruption. We anticipate that Fred Stone's Artcraft pictures will be booked for long runs in both moving picture houses, for without doubt, if Fred Stone can pack a house for a year, his photoplays will be worthy of a long run in cinema houses. In "Jack O' Lantern," Mr. Stone during the past season drew record business on Broadway.

"Ethel Clayton is already too well known as a motion picture star to require comment, but I can predict that this star will shine even more brightly in the elaborate Paramount vehicle in which she will appear. "Jack Barrymore returns to the Paramount fold with a record which makes his individuality as a comedian notable. Several years ago he appeared in pictures produced at our studios and established a name which is of assistance not help but take immediate hold upon the patrons of the photoplays. Since his last appearance as a Paramount star he has won added laurels on the speaking stage.

"Lila Lee is a new name to the photoplays world. It is a name, however, that will before long become a household word, to use the old phrase, of the great motion picture public. Under the care of masters of the cinema art the talent and beauty of this young lady of fourteen years is already evidenced on the stage, will be brought out effectively. For several years we have been looking for just such a person as Lila Lee.

"Dorothy Gish is another Paramount star who will bring new patrons to the theatre in addition to the established picture patrons, for her prominence in big D. W. Griffith productions has made her popular with theatergoers as well as the regular followers of film plays. Her wonderful characterization of the grissette in 'Hearts of the World' has given her new prominence in the eyes of the entertaining going public.

"Bryant Washburn is the latest addition to the Paramount roster. He has been a screen favorite of particular prominence for the past few years and his exceptional wealth in recent photoplays has made him, in our first Paramount picture, and Anita Loos-John Emerson production, will be Ernest Truesdell.

"It will be noted that these stars are well established as leading men in their respective branches of the profession and are well fitted to enter a '100 per cent. organization.' They will prove valuable assets to all first class houses catering to intelligent people, for they have repeatedly proven their talents for entertaining the public. These young players and their names are well known in every community where newspapers are read.

"Our recent announcement regarding a change in policy whereby we will present subjects of cheerful theme followed careful investigations extending back for many months and as soon as we were assured of our ground we began to take steps to secure the services of the most talented people along these lines, who would bring with them not only the dramatic qualities desired, but a personal following which would insure box office success."

Fifty-Two Comedies for Year

Twenty-six Subjects from Sennett Studios, Ten Arbuckle Films and Sixteen Flagg Pictures.

FOR the coming season, commencing September 1, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will increase its dis-btribution of Paramount comedies to fifty-two releases, one-two reeler every week. These comedies will come from the studios of Mack Sennett, Roscoe 'Fatty' Arbuckle and James Montgomery Flagg, it is announced, presenting the best efforts of these three famous producers of popular motion picture fun.

In announcing the releasing plans in connection with these comedies, Walter E. Hannon, vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution, said, "Mack Sennett will produce twenty-six comedies for the year, one being released every other week. The success of these pictures in the past has made the exhibitors well know their their-producing qualities. Mr. Sennett's career in the motion picture world as a producer of comedies goes back to the inception of the industry. His wonderful ability of turning out fast moving comedies with many new bits brought about by his great technical genius as well as his rare sense of motion picture humor has been established for some time past. His company will celebrate its ninetieth of the past year, he is a popular personality and his programs will be eagerly awaited, and bigger and better laughs may be enjoyed in these pictures, through a thing is possible, during the coming year.

"The Roscoe 'Fatty' Arbuckle organization will stage ten Paramount Arbuckle comedies, each of two-reel length. 'Fatty' Arbuckle has become a national institution and his comedies have consistently maintained a popular demand. The policy of production has been a most liberal one and no effort or expense has been spared to insure laughs. In limiting himself to but ten pictures a year, in which he will personally star. Mr. Arbuckle, also, is a director, and brings to the exhibit assurance that this brand of comedies will continue as a most desirable adjunct to any program.

"The famous James Montgomery Flagg comedies will be produced and work on the first two reeler, has already been started under the supervision of Jack Eaton, directed by Martin Justice, whose O. Henry pictures are well remembered. These comedies have been established by patrons of the motion picture theater, and under the new arrangement whereby they are to be released under the Paramount trademark they are a tremendous reinforcement to the series of successes. The finest and best of the theaters in America have been showing the James Montgomery Flagg pictures with remarkable success in the past, and the new series for Paramount will be the most pretentious attempts yet made by Mr. Flagg and his associates, who have laid out some very ambitious plans for the coming year.

"This combination solves for the Paramount exhibitor the perplexing problem covering the comic situation in a most satisfactory manner."

To Issue 104 Educational in Year
That Is the Schedule Arranged by Famous Players-Lasky—One Holmes and Pictograph a Week.

In preparing the short subject release schedule for the coming year, starting September 1, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is arranging for the presentation of 104 educational subjects, which offers the release each week of one Paramount Burton Holmes Travel picture and one Paramount Bray Pictograph. The distribution of these films is to be largely increased throughout the country, and various plans in connection with their production indicates that their scope will be considerably enlarged.

Speaking of the plans for the short subjects, Walter E. Greene said: "Paramount-Bray Pictograph have made a niche for themselves as 'the magazine on the screen,' and have presented some remarkable scenes during the past year. They will continue strong releases each week. These new releases will be of great added interest and present a wider variety of subjects treated than before, one of which involves a new treatment of fashions, never before disclosed on the screen. The animated drawings idea, giving clear explanations of man scientific subjects in a way never before possible and which have created wide comment, will be extended considerably."

"The Paramount Holmes Travel Pictures have a greatly increased demand and are much more in vogue among the better theaters catering to intelligent audiences. The prestige of Burton Holmes is not to be underestimated in making these educational releases. A globe trotter is particularly a favorite among those who seek knowledge of foreign things as well as those who admire beauty of nature. One of these films will be released each week during the coming year."

"The wonders of the world have been brought to the screens of American motion picture theaters by Mr. Holmes. The world war has burst the shell of nations and has excited curiosity in the minds of the public in distant countries. Cities and countries that heretofore have been merely names of passing interest have now become imbued with modern historical significance as they become associated with the great drama of life and death that is now being enacted and this has brought into interest the peoples of the entire globe. Thus the Burton Holmes subjects for the coming year will be of greater interest than ever, particular in that they will involve an intimate presentation of scenes and conditions resulting from the war 'over there,' Mr. Holmes having left America recently to take pictures in England, France and other countries of the Allies."

Square Dealing Aim of Sales Force
So Says Al Lichtman, General Manager of Distribution for Famous Players.

The principles which govern the relations between the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and its field force engaged in the selling of Paramount and Artcraft pictures have been set forth for the benefit of exhibitors by Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution.

"The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation laid its foundations upon the principles of square dealing, justice and honesty and the ideal of creating and doing something better than anyone else," said Mr. Lichtman. "These principles and ideals are being constantly instilled in the minds of salesmen at the periodical meetings of the district branch managers, held at the home office; through the medium of letters, office and inter-office memoranda, personal interviews and in every way which presents itself."

"To the end that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation demands of every member of its field force that he shall know; first, what he is selling; second, why he is selling it; and third, why it is worth selling. These are the Three Rs of salesmanship, yet it would astonish the industry, if a check could be made of the thousands engaged in selling films, to find out how many have learned them. They make sales, good-will, more sales.

"There, in the last analysis, is the root of the whole selling proposition. No business succeeds unless it is continually going forward. No business can go forward without understanding its sale. Many salesmen have failed without the good-will of customers. That is a cardinal principle of all business, and every salesman of Paramount and Artcraft pictures is required to apply it. It is in meeting his customers he must have enthusiasm and transfer it to them, but in the shortest time possible, for the exhibitor—the only kind of exhibitor he should be doing business with—is a busy man."

"We teach our salesmen that the man brimful of belief in himself and his goods and bubbling over with enthusiasm and vitality is bound to affect the other fellow. He is going to affect him in direct proportion to his enthusiasm. A man's success with a proposition is only limited by his faith in it, and once a salesman has that faith and puts it across to his customers he need not fear that there will be any request for reductions on one score or another."

"This entire proposition is one of service, and it is my opinion that when the exhibitor has become acquainted with what we are doing along these lines the word 'service,' when coupled with the name of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will take on a new significance."

WORLD BRANCH MANAGERS IN TOWN.

Three World branch managers dropped in at the World home office last week and looked over the new World pictures, which are scheduled for release within the next few months. These were Fred Salinger, Pittsburgh; R. B. Smeltzer, Washington, and C. A. Thompson, Cleveland. All declare the outlook for business during the summer and fall is exceedingly gratifying. They also report that a number of legitimate houses are going to show pictures because of their inability to secure road attractions on account of the increased railroad fares.

FAMOUS PLAYERS SIGNS WANDA HAWLEY.

The acting of Wanda Hawley in "Old Wives for New" and "We Can't Have Everything," both Cecil B. De Mille special Artcraft productions, has brought her a long term contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Miss Hawley has been in picture work only about a year but her rise has been rapid.

TEMPERAMENT

MY BOY,

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

WHAT a splendid picture "Joan of Plattsburg" is! With Griffith offering the lead, Gulfern offering herself to fans everywhere. The picture is sane all through and very timely, to say nothing of the scenes "inside the lines" at Plattsburg. Good comedy here when Joan is talking it up with her cronies in their "over the top" drills. It now has the indorsement of the "First Lady of the Land," cabinet officers and millions of fans. Robert Elliott, always dependable, plays the lead perfectly, and with Aricraft, a fat part, into which he fitted physically. A well balanced company, but Master Butterworth as Hotfoot got the laughs, for he was decidedly clever all through.

"A Weaver of Dreams," with little Dana doing her customary emotional work, went well. But why do they not give her a leading man nearer her own age? Clifford Beem, who looks after her in "Six Ages," and elsewhere, but opposite dainty Viola is a misfit—so the fans think, as they did in recent pictures. What got us strong in the "Weaver" was the novel introduction of the middle-aged romance. The scenes seen in "Last Man of the Century," with her beautiful eyes and stateliness, and Russell Simpson made a picture long to be remembered. Some rebelled at the flashback picturing the hideous wreck, as the director went a bit far here; but it may be necessary to "rub it in" and leave little to our intelligence or imagination. Nothing finer in outdoor photography has been seen in a long time, the principals standing out like paintings; some of the scenes seemingly tinted in sepia. A long thing back of me said, "That feller don't know a good thing when he has it"—referring to the lover's caddishness and bad taste in choosing the doll-like girl to Judith, the heroine. But by and by, when we finally got to nosing around the girl, my companion said she was well rid of the man anyhow. We were spared the customary ending and two-lip stunt.

In "Masks and Faces" (done in England) Forbes Robertson certainly made good. What a cast! Maybe the support of his own people over there had something to do with the success of this. In it we have a Terry, a Bourneville, a Du Maurier, the only George Bernard Shaw; Sir Beer-both Trust, with Missed Patience, a typical Barré, and an urchin Van-brugh, who plays " Peg" deliciously; Lilah McCarthy, much liked here, and others with international names. It was distinctly English, and an excellent screen interpretation. No wonder this picture is indorsed by the National Council of Women and strongly commended.

After seeing "The Guilt of Silence" we went over to the Pacific and saw "The Man," a big picture put out by the Vitagraphs for Earl Williams, Grace Darrell and others, well directed by Tom Mills, whose work on the O. Henry pictures has been superfine. Here we get a story with an old married couple, the devoted wife and her young girl—making an interesting triangle. It had many new ideas, especially on the kid end, with four-year-old Pat Moore to handle. We liked the professional side of the story and the entire consistency, also the proper ending, with the skies cleared. Clean picture; good for reissue at any time, as most of the Vitagraphs are.

Another good play for the screen, "Her Decision," with an excellent cast. I went twice to see this just for the work of J. Barney Sherry, who has a decidedly "high-water mark" part and holds true to the character. While the picture is not entirely original, it is so well worked out in such capable hands as to give it new angles forthwith. Here we get the employer and his stenographer, whom his wife, knowing well the girl thinks she loves another (who is a ne'er-do-well), gives his list to. The part of Martin Rankin could not be in better hands, and Gloria Swanson develops the character perfectly. This is a fine Triangle picture and to be commended to the limit.

"Lend Me Your Name," was seen twice, as I hoped to find something to enthusiasm this year, liking young Lockwood. Here he undertook to double, but was quite the same, forgetting, as the masquerader, to cut out the facial twists of the dyspeptic, and these were not natural. Best thing in the picture is the scenery and the fine support of the valet and the impossible one, who were commended the leading women excellent. Lockwood's fall in the brook was the cause of much merriment, even among the staid patrons of the Exeter.

A corking circus picture, good for all classes, is "The Biggest Show on Earth," with its Barnum-like title and so cleverly directed by the only lacke for Enid Bennett and Sibly Jackson.48 We particularly commend the work of the Madame, who makes a typical circus owner with his loud watch face and all else that shouts. Then when daughter goes to a swell school, she, too, lives up to the circus "mold of fashion" and wears clothes that are usually valet's. What we wondered at was her stunt with the lions, for it looked perilous; but Enid never turned a hair. Bets were made as to how it was managed. There were good camera shots of this, and what a trick it showed. Then there was Colonel Trent, the arisocrat (rather the hubby of one), a real show. A corking picture, and the owner's daughter, a Sibley Royden, the lover, stood pat in spite of mother on the circus question. Good twist on dairy part of it, no giving away the source of their income from said circus.

Score another for the Japanese actor, Hayakawa, whose latest seen here is "The White Man's Law," directed by James Young most creditably. Pretty daring theme in making the white man the villain and an eastern Hindu a hero! Jack Holt has a part in keeping with his former ones, and I never could see why he should be cast as a goody-goody, for his features forbid it. My neighbor could not quite see why he should commit such a bad act to save a good cause to kill him when opportunity was there; but this is of the unexplainable. Anyhow it gives a novelty to customary killing off of the bad 'un. Joe Swickard does a good piece of character work, but his part seems to say, "To a man (don't like that name), Kelso look well as first lady?"

Rubes, somewhat overdone, form the comic element in "Mile-a-Minute Kendall," a good vehicle for Jack Pickford and sister Lottie, who does the naughty stunt very well. It jarred a bit to know that brother and sister played together in such parts. Louise Huff is at all times good, and her introduction through a soapy window was clever. With the same lady in the same sister, Mary, in "Miss," but somehow it fell short of her recent pictures. Not yet has she duplicated her most remarkable work in "Stella Maris," by all odds her very best.

What a pity Benjamin Chapin has gone out of our lives! But what a memory he has left in his wonderful portrayals of the great Lincoln on platform, stage and screen! I feel glad that he lived long enough to give us pictures of such great value in many ways. We feel a bit proud of him. Hadley, in his turn, wrote a great symphony, he completed the first symphony written for motion pictures. Mr. Hadley has been seriously thought of as a successor to Karl Muck, former leader of our symphony orchestra, and now an interned alien in Georgia, given up has organized an orchestra for other Germans—United States prisoners.

We are glad that Frank Mayo has made good and now with the World Film; of the fact that Vernon Steele is to play opposite Mme. Petrova, and that Walthall has gone back to his first love—Griffith, who made him famous as the Little Colonel in "The Birth of a Nation."
British Notes

By J. B. Sutcliffe.

The case of the long film, pro and con, is the all-absorbing topic of the moment in those rare intervals when film men can find time to discuss other matters than war, its ramifications and restrictions upon the industry. It is now some months since a prominent exhibitor laid a definite complaint of padding features at the door of the modern, multi-reel producer. The question was taken up by the exhibitors’ association, and the metropolitan branch of that body filed a resolution of protest to the joint Cinematograph Trade Council, the objection being to the padding of films more than to the measured length, although a shorter standard was generally recommended. Frank Goodwin pointed out at the time that the exhibitor had often no alternative but to show the long film. It was usually of doubtful advertising value, was woven around a star and had a famous title. If Mr. Goodwin’s statement was correct, many other exhibitors’ views—which, by the way, it is not—the resolution becomes a candid admission of shortsightedness on the part of the exhibitors. Less than a year ago the London agent of a newly established American boutiques has been returned fifteen negatives as useless for the English market. They were all two and three reel features; first-class subjects at that, if the samples I saw were any criterion. The agent in question since returned the States, but four of his films have been returned “in extenso” as four and five reels and have been sold off territorially at satisfactory prices; an experience which to an extent justifies Will Barker’s innuendo that the exhibitor often shuts his eyes to the increased length of a film so long as it is delivered to him as so many reels.

At another city in the north has the Famous Players’ version of “Sapho” gone “under the hammer,” as they say in the army. A moralist of the standing of T. P. O’Connor sanctions the film in his capacity as censor, but the York Watch Committee, thriving on the thrice-purified air of the cathedral city, stubbornly refuse its exhibition.

Malvina Longfellow has been in England a few months already and probably numbers her film engagements more than her stage bookings. She sustained the role of the May Queen in the Samuelson production, “Holy Orders,” dramatized from Marie Corelli’s novel; played lead in “Thelma,” and is now posing as the figure of Britannia in a series of propaganda subjects being issued by the Government Department of Information.

Charles Urban’s second visit in official capacity to the U. S. A. has convinced him that there is plenty of room in the States for the British film.

Major Paul Kimberley, the representative of Lubin and Thanhouser pictures, has added still another responsibility to his existing long record of war activity. This is in the position of superintendent of the home propaganda section of the Government Cinematograph Branch. Major Kimberley’s special task will be in connection with the distribution of the shorter propaganda films—the regular releases, so to speak—of the different departments concerned. So that the house films shall not be jumbled to the exhibitor haphazard he proposes to attach them as “trailers” to the bi-weekly news reels, the length of each not to exceed 150 feet. “The Gaumont Graphic,” “The Pathe Gazette” and “The Official Topical Budget” have agreed to the extra footage, which will not, of course, be charged to exhibitors.

Another innovation of the state department, now under the direction of the champion Canadian hustler, Lord Beaverbrook (better known in New York as Sir Max Aitken), is the despatch throughout the countryside of a fleet of automobile moving picture exhibitions. They have been specially detailed to exhibit the official films in rural villages and hamlets where no moving picture theater exists.

Woolwich, the arsenal city, has hitherto been as a barred and bolted door to the cameraman, but one of the recent official topicals holds back the curtain and reveals wonderful glimpses of the doings, mostly by female labor, within the walls.

July 6, 1918

THEATER

The New Majestic was opened with "Robespierre." During the last two weeks several fine American films have been screened, including "The Gray Ghost."

The Imperial cinema has completed the exhibition of "The Fatal Ring," and has also screened installments of Pathé's History of the War and several American comics.

The Bombay Excelsior has screened the "New Exploits of Elaine" to crowded houses.

At the Empire (Bombay) "Stranded in Arcady," one of the new series of "Pathé plays," has been exhibited to packed houses. The management has completed "The Neglected Wife."

At the Napier "The Mysteries of Myra" is now being screened. I learn that this theater has already become a financial success.

The Cinema Palace, which is now under the management of Krishnadas Brothers, has just completed the exhibition of "The Purple Domino." It should have been shown at one of the Calcutta theaters first. However, it is not too late yet. "Empire" management will be able to induce the authorities of the Presidency theater to take over the film.

Madan, of the Elphinstone, has shown "Second Mrs. Tampion," "The Deometer," "Peggy," "Fall of Nation," "The Mysterious," "Who's Your Lady Friend?" and several American comics. He has also booked "Patricia." His "Fun Fridays" are always well patronized.

At his New Cornwalls the exhibition of the "Goddess" has been completed. "The Mysteries of Myra" has just been started.

At the Albion he has screened "Two Little Vagabonds," "Along in London," "The Romantic Journey," and "The Shielding Shadow." "The Great Secret" is now being shown.

At the Ripon old friends mostly are screened. I cannot commend this practice. The Calcuttaes want fresh food. They get more than plenty of it at the Bijou. Films like "The Chance of a Lifetime" will appeal to Europeans, not to Indians.

At the Presidency a serial of 30,000 or 36,000 feet is screened every Sunday and public holiday. The patrons do not mind sitting from 11:30 a.m. to 6 p.m.

At the Bioscope theater we have seen the "Wrath of the God," the "Master of the World," and other films, which, though not very popular, are effective. "In the City of the God" is a film calculated to excite racial ill-feeling. I am afraid if it be screened in a place like Rangoon or Madaya, for instance, there will be hooting, and police interference will be necessary.

At the Karachy Kohinoor "The Shielding Shadow" is being screened, while the Emperor has shown "Patricia" and other films of note.

The Wellington cinema (Madras) has exhibited "Gentlemen of the Jury," "A Social Buccaneer" and several American comics.

Certain Indian theaters still continue their prize shows. The Picture House of Calcutta has a children's prize show every Saturday at 11 a.m. Certain Bombay theaters offer watches to their patrons. A Calcutta theater give away books to every patron. These shows draw extra crowds.

Newman Plans to Classify His Theaters

Will Have Three High-Class Houses in Different Parts of Kansas City and Will Make Each Appeal to Individual Clients.

FOUR years ago, on June 10, 1914, the Theater Royal, Kansas City's first high-class downtown photoplay theater, was opened. Practically on its fourth birthday Frank L. Newman, owner of the Royal and Regent, announced a new Newman theater, to be erected at 1112 Main street. With reference to his new theater Mr. Newman says: "Throughout the entire eleven years of my experience it has always been my dream to build a theater especially for moving picture exhibitions in the large and well-to-do neighborhood. When the opportunity came for me to secure this ideal location I resolved to realize it. I expect to have something as fine as anything in America, to install every possible modern comfort, and it will make every wordsworth say it is a word in a photoplay theater. If it is possible we intend to have the theater cooled by a refrigerating system. The architect is at present studying the problem. Some of the features will be a fireplace, a dome, the stage, the technical room, the balcony, which will be furnished as a salon for both the men and women. Aside from this it will also have rest rooms and a nursery.

Mr. Newman, with the three theaters, will be enabled to stage his pictures each in the vicinity most suitable and where it will have the strongest drawing capacity. For example, such stars as William S. Hart, Theda Bara, Maxine Pettrova will play at the Royal, and other features perhaps a little too strong for the Royal. The Regent will provide a suitable audience for Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark and others who appear in another type of photoplay. The Regent will be a place of business.

At the Newman the idea will be not so much to feature the star as the production. In fact, Mr. Newman's idea is apparently to give his theaters an individuality which will stand for the best in motion picture plays.

Mr. Newman seems to feel that it is possible to create a reputation for his houses as such aside from the programs which he presents. Moreover, the fact that he has three houses will make it possible for him to secure releases in such large quantities that he can discard a certain per cent which have objectional features and are not up to the required standard.

Although eleven years' experience might almost warrant it, Mr. Newman does not feel that he knows every turn of the business. He is arranging to leave Kansas City about the middle of June for an extended coast to coast trip for the purpose of seeing what the other fellow has been doing in the way of innovations. Mr. Newman will probably be gone about six weeks.

Fox Names Eight District Managers

Assistant General Manager Robbins Will Look Out for Philadelphia, Washington and Buffalo.

A NOUNCEMENT has been made by the Fox Film Corporation's sales districts in the United States and Canada. The appointments were effective July 1.

Herman Robbins, assistant general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, will be responsible for the territory embracing Philadelphia, Washington and Buffalo. Lewis Levin, who is also connected with the home office will preside over the sales in the territory taking in Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas.

Paul C. Moomey will be district manager of Cleveland, Detroit, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Cincinnati, and Clyde W. Eckhardt will have charge of Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, Denver, Minneapolis and Salt Lake City. George Mann will supervise the territory embracing Los Angeles and San Francisco, and Clyde E. Campbell will continue as district manager of Boston and New England. Albert W. Eden is made district manager of Seattle and the Northwest, and Vincent McCabe remains as district manager of Toronto, Montreal and St. John, N. B.

"Britain's Bulwarks, No. 7" (Pathé).

CONDITIONS existing along the front at St. Quentin after the retreat of the Germans are pictured in this number. It shows the flooded areas through which the British cavalry advanced, the engineers working to rebuild roads and bridges, the ruins of many villages, troops resting between marches, and the capture of some German prisoners covering the rear. Such pictures do much to bring the actual conditions at the front home to the observer.

"Britain's Bulwarks, No. 8" (Pathé).

Further scenes on the British front in France, and about St. Quentin. This gives a number of intimate views of the British troops on the march, resting in camp, repairing railroads and preparing trenches. A view of the men waiting to go over the top and other scenes give an idea of the ruin wrought by warfare in that region.

"Rainbow Bridge" (Newman-Educational).

Of unusual interest is the Newman camera trip to the Rainbow Bridge found in the rocky wilds of the Western States. The Newman party started from Gallup, New Mexico, and journeyed to Arizona and Utah, sure-footed mustangs being used as a means of transportation. Following for a distance along the rim of the Canyon de Chelly they finally enter the canyon where they are faced by walls of solid rock from 800 to 1,200 feet in height, which have to be surrounded in order to continue the journey. Monument Valley presents an unusual sight with its stone monuments rising at intervals from 300 to 1,300 feet in height, 277 feet in width and 30 feet in thickness. It is easy to imagine that few have found their way to this freak of nature; therefore the pictures of this desolate portion of the country brought to us by Mr. Newman are doubly valuable.

"Through the Nation's Parks" (Educational-Newman).

A reel of beautifully photographed views of the nation's parks is herein presented. These views have become familiar to patrons of moving picture theatres during the past year or two; but it is still quite possible to dwell on some of the featured beauties of these parks, such as for instance, Handkerchief Pool and the Paint Pots in Yellowstone, the beautiful Mirror Lake of Yosemite, or the various picturesque spots in Great Glacier Park, without becoming stale. Newman has done, and done it well. One of the interesting features of the reel are the bears, showing King, the monarch of the Yellowstone bears, and several lesser members of the tribe feeding and fighting.

"Making Peanut Butter" (Universal).

A subject of considerable interest appearing in the 77th issue of the Screen Magazine shows the making of peanut butter. The raw peanuts are dumped down a chute to the roaster, from which they are taken when roasted to exactly the proper flavor, and placed in a hopper for hulling. The bad ones are culled out and the good ones are placed in a machine which grinds them into a butter. The peanut butter is then placed in jars of various sizes, labeled and sealed and made ready for the market.

"A Twentieth Century Cooper" (Paramount-Bray).

An interesting subject appearing in the 125th issue of the Pictograph shows us the manner in which barrels are made. Each barrel is made in three parts, the staves being put together in the form to the heading of them by automatic machinery.

"War Garden Hints" (Paramount-Bray).

The planting of potatoes is given attention in the 125th number of the Pictograph of the "War Garden Hints." Here we see a young woman preparing the ground for the planting, choosing the potatoes to plant, preferably medium-sized ones with plenty of eyes, the soaking of them in a solution of formaldehyde to prevent scabbing, and then the cutting and planting of them. Having seen this demonstration one can scarcely fail to know considerable about this particular science.

"To All Canoeas" (Universal).

Lessons in "safety first" methods of handling oneself in a canoe are given in the 77th issue of the Screen Magazine. The main points emphasized are don't change seats or stand up when canoeing, sit or kneel on the floor to be safe; don't stand on the gunwale unless you are an expert swimmer; exercise care in landing. It is also illustrated that an overturned canoe is a good life preserver.

"Wonders of Insect Life" (Universal).

The 77th number of the Screen Magazine gives a fine series of views, and much information concerning various kinds of insects which frequent the garden. Among these is the aphis or plant lice which are shown in magnified form on pea vines. The Lady-bug, which is a useful insect, is also introduced, showing its larva feeding on plant lice. Then there is the tufted grub of the tussock moth, which is very destructive, the grubs of the parsley butterfly and also their transformation, and the tomato grub parasite, showing its eggs on the back of its victim.

E. W. Hammons Establishes New Exchanges
Visit to Middle West Affects Glad Tidings of Educational Outlook

E. W. HAMMONS, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America, spent the third week of June in the Middle West on a flying visit to the Educational exchanges. While in Chicago and Detroit, Mr. Hammons established new exchanges in those cities, which will ensure a much better distribution of the concern's pictures, travels, animated pictures and cartoon comedies than has heretofore been possible. Announcement of these exchanges will be made shortly.

The number of first run houses contracting for Educationalists throughout the United States is increasing rapidly. A notable instance is the 10 years contract just entered into between Moore's Theaters Corporation of Washington, D. C., and the Educational. All the International cartoon comedies, including the Katejammer Kids and Happy Hooligans, will be put on by Tom Moore the first three days of each week at the Garden or the Strand theater. Mr. Moore hereafter follows the example of S. L. Rothapfel of the New York Rialto and Rivoli, and Harold Edel of the New York Strand, who have played up Educational films for years.

In the Far West a striking instance of the drawing power of scenic Educationalisms comes from the Columbia theater, Portland, Oregon, where "Alaska Wonders in Motion" was booked for a half week, but on account of the enormous demand was carried over to fill the entire week of May 19.

Mutual's First Outing-Chester Release
"An Ex-Cannibal Carnival" Comedy of Life of Ex-Head Hunters of Fiji Islands Due for Public Appearance.

THE first of the Outing-Chester series of travel pictures, which are being released by the Mutual Film Corporation, will appear June 30, and is entitled "An Ex-Cannibal Carnival." This picture constitutes a comedy of the life of the ex-head hunters of the Fiji Islands, who have now adopted meatless days, and who welcome white strangers with dancing and a drink of "Kava," instead of threatening them with unwilling participation in the evening meal.

The second of the series, due for release July 7, has already been reviewed in these columns and takes the spectator on a delightfully thrilling trip to the great South American cataract, Kaieteur. It was exhibited some weeks ago at the Strand theater, New York City, winning much praise for its interesting quality and splendid photography. The educational market today is offering nothing better in general good quality than the Outing-Chester Pictures.

Items of Interest.

The group of films entitled "Colonel Roosevelt’s Exposition Into the Wilds," 2000 feet of which was recently exhibited at the Strand theater, New York City, is owned by the Rondon Commission, of which Colonel Rondon is the head. The money realized on the sale of the pictures will be used, according to Luiz Reis, sales representative of the Rondon Commission in this country, for the assistance of the education and civilization of the natives of interior Brazil under the supervision of the Brazilian government.

The eightieth issue of the Universal Screen Magazine contains an inspiring series of views taken on May Irwin’s farm. To those interested in farming for profit this will be of value. This particular issue, which is not due for release until July 20, also contains considerable information, accompanied by a number of close-ups on the beetle, the scarab and the cricket, and some attractive pictures of prize-winning dogs and cats.

A new one-reeler about to be released by the Educational Films Corporation of America is entitled "Cigars for Kings and Millionaires." The region illustrated is the Vuelta Abajo district in the Pinar del Rio province of Cuba.

The second of the “Mexico Today” series, exhibited at the Rivoli during the week of June 9, gave a detailed illustration of the Necoaxa dam and power plant.

Thomas Meighan.

In Marguerite Clark’s forthcoming production for Paramount release, “Out of a Clear Sky,” which is now being completed at the eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the star is fortunate in having the support in the leading male role of Thomas Meighan, one of the best known and most popular of the screen’s leading men. In “Out of a Clear Sky” Miss Clark plays the part of a Belgian princess who is being forced into an obnoxious marriage with a German nobleman. She comes to this country and, seeking a hiding-place in the mountains of Tennessee, meets a young mountaineer, portrayed by Mr. Meighan, who assists her to thwart the plotters.

Mr. Meighan’s popularity is by no means confined to the picture-going public, for he is one of the most sought after leading men in the various producing units of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. His services have been in such demand in Paramount and other productions that he has frequently been found working in two or more productions at the same time. He has been leading man at one time or another to nearly all the feminine stars of the organization.

Previous to this Marguerite Clark subject Mr. Meighan had the chief male role in support of Elsie Ferguson in the big western subject, which will be an Artcraft picture, adapted from “Pierre of the Plains,” and released as “Heart of the Wilds.” Mr. Meighan plays the part of Sergeant Tom, a Northwest royal mounted policeman, in which capacity he takes part in sensational scenes, and as the lover of Miss Ferguson has some extremely dramatic moments.

Goldwyn Managers Hold Sales Conventions.

Two-Day Meetings, at Which Future Policy is Outlined, Take Place in New York, Cleveland and Chicago.

TWO-DAY sales conventions of Goldwyn’s managers and the salesmen from all nineteen of its American branches were held simultaneously in July 21 and 22 in three cities—New York, Cleveland and Chicago.

In each instance an executive of Goldwyn’s home office organization was present in charge of the regional convention. Among the matters discussed were future policies of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation for the season, which begins in September. Managers and salesmen were impressed with the fact that next year they will have productions featuring six established stars, in addition to the Rex Beach pictures, and that instead of twenty-six releases there will be more than fifty.

The eastern district convention was held in New York, and was presided over by Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn. Present were: Samuel Eckman, Jr., manager of the New York City branch; George A. Hickey, Buffalo; Herbert W. Given, Philadelphia, and G. F. Lenehan, Washington. Salesmen from all of the offices in the territory attended.

Alfred Weiss, a vice-president of Goldwyn, had charge of the central district meetings, which were attended by H. A. Bandy, manager of the Cleveland office; J. F. Flynn, of Detroit; C. C. McKinbin, of Pittsburgh, and A. J. Pincus, of Cincinnati.

The Middle West convention, held in Chicago, had Harold Bolster, another vice-president, and Messrs. Aaron J. Jones and Nathan Ascher as its heads. It was attended by H. J. Bolster, manager of the Chicago branch; Richard C. Fox, of Minneapolis; Paul Bush, of St. Louis, and Richard Robertson, of Kansas City.

The salesmen in every division of the territory were called in to the convention cities to hear the voice of the representative of the home office and to learn from him direct of the good things Goldwyn has in store for the coming producing year.

The western states convention is held in abeyance pending the arrival on the Pacific Coast of a Goldwyn executive, held in a few days with the official draft of the sales policy.

Baseball Close-Down Affects Sunday Shows.

Demand for Seventh Day Pictures Increased in Nashville as a Result of Less Entertainment.

A meeting of southern league baseball officials in Nashville on June 10 it was decided to close down the premier Dixie organization on June 28. This action is expected to have an important bearing on the Sunday moving picture situation in Tennessee, and especially in Nashville, where an active fight has been waged for the past seven months in an effort to get the shows opened on Sunday.

The effect of the baseball closing has been to take Sunday baseball away from Nashville, Memphis and Chattanooga, thereby leaving Sunday moving pictures as the only method of entertainment on the seventh day. Chattanooga was accorded Sunday pictures after a vigorous fight. Military authorities advised that a place of recreation was needed for the various camps in and around the city, so the shows were opened, and are running full blast on Sunday. In Memphis the shows also are running, yet the mayor of Nashville absolutely refuses to permit the houses to open and even to make an admission or allow contributions to be made by the audience.

The Nashville theaters are continuing to run several large uptown houses on Sunday, charging thrill stamp admission. No profit is being made, and there is a heavy expense in pursing the policy. Each entrant is required to buy a thrill stamp at the box office, and, of course, permitted to keep the stamp. The moral effect of running a few shows, even at a loss, is expected to show the desire of Nashville for Sunday amusement, and should prove of benefit in the end.
Proofreading.

PROBABLY one of the chief contributing causes of poor advertising is to be found in poor proofreading, both by the management and the printing office. The printer is supposed to read proof only for the mistakes of his compositor. The rest lies to the advertiser, who is exposed to catch errors in names and titles made by himself and also to pick up the errors due to illegible writing and which may not fairly be blamed upon the compositor. Also he gets a chance to head off blunders the compositor so often makes and the proofreader does not catch. The other day a correspondent from Trenton sent in an advertisement of the Lyric theater in which Elsie Ferguson was announced in "Barbering Sheep." Of course the proofreader should have been sufficiently familiar with books titles to know that Barbery Sheep was intended, yet both the proofreader and the management permitted the ridiculous blunder to be printed in print. It is carelessness plus stupidity plus laziness to permit such a break to pass unnoticed, and yet no week passes which does not bring into this office examples of poor proofreading almost as bad. Any composing room foreman will be glad to show any advertiser how to read proof. It is no great mystery, and may be mastered in an hour, as far as the marks are concerned. The hard part is to develop the intelligent scrutiny that makes the errors apparent. Give more attention to proofreading. Do not leave it to the printer. He doesn't care a whoop whether your ad reads properly or not. It is not classed among the worries of his sinful life. It is up to you to see that you get what you want rather than what the printer thinks you want. Go a step further than this. Get your copy in early and do not be afraid to tear apart a makeup that does not seem just right. None of the samples sent in are disgraceful. And these errors react against the house. The patron is apt to argue that if the manager does not know how to spell a title or the name of a star, he is lying when he says that a play is great or a star unusually good. They lose faith in the announcement, and without reason, and if the fans are far better informed as to titles and spelling than many exhibitors seem to be, even though the latter may have the printed copy right in front of them for reference. To announce the title of the Hitleins novel as "Barbering Sheep" is not only to confess laziness, but ignorance of common literature that a live manager should be ashamed to own up to. Read your proofs, and read with care.

A Page to Be Read.

Here is an example of a page advertisement that does not try to carry too much type just because it happens to be a full page and not a two-fives. It is sent in by H. C. Fairley of the New Empire, Mont-gomery, Ala. Much more might have been said, but the chances are that the hold display makes the few simple lines carry greater conviction than would a crowded display. If you are accustomed to spending a couple of hundred words into a few inches it is sometimes difficult to take a whole page and say even less, but the little you do say is far more apt to be read.

A Little Too Formal.

Annabel Davidson, who does the advertising work for the City, Strand and Rialto theaters, Brockton, Mass., sends in some samples asking for a criticism. We think from her signature that she is a newspaper graduate, but evidently she has not spent much time in the composing room during her newspaper days. Her advertising is generally good, but a bit too formal. It is all nicely lined off or boxed in or fenced around with border. The left hand example in the top cut is a three tens. It comes already cut from the page, so we cannot see what it had to fight in the way of other display, but the three-point Philadelphia Programs.

Jay Emanuel has left the Park and Jefferson theaters to become one of the ablest bookers in the city. Emanuel has taken so much delight in roasting. We always knew that Jay would come to some bad end, living in Philadelphia as long as he did, but we didn't expect it. Emanuel is now running "The Vortex" and "The Source of Life." The Vortex at the Grand, the Source of Life at the Parkway.

Mr. Emanuel, in charge of the Parkway on Saturday, had a small crowd in to see "The Vortex." The Vortex is playing at the Parkway and there are many people who are interested in seeing it. Emanuel has been running this theater for a long time, and his success is due to his great enthusiasm and skill as a booker.

Emanuel has been in the theater business for many years, and he has always been known for his ability to make a good profit. He has booked several successful productions, including "The Vortex," "The Source of Life," and "The Great Impersonation." Emanuel has always been able to get good audiences, and he has never had a bad house.

There are some people who think that Emanuel is too ambitious, but he has always been able to get good results. Emanuel is a fine booker, and he has always been able to make a good profit. Better drop to the "on the same program." This would give greater emphasis to the double feature, though we can't see why anyone should want to sit through tea roam.

Should Be Able to Spell.

Anyone who lives in Punxsutawney, Pa., and is liable to spell the name of the town correctly should be able to tackle anything, but in a recent issue of a local paper three of the Germ advertisers Norma "Talmage" and the Majestic announces Abe "Norman." The mistake is supplied by the other two. The revised quotation "The little girl you can't forget" is spoiled in the Normand advertisement by merely quoting "little girl" instead of the entire phrase.

Circling the Kaiser.

W. L. Woodin of the Keystone Opera House, Towanda, Pa., sends in a good piece of work. Circle this: "Circus brings it and circus bill is right. We don't know where Mr. Woodin learned his spelling, but he has a piece of paper with the real circuses on it, for a sheet was changed while the programs were on the way down. Mr. Bush, by the way, has gone into the photographic division of the Signal Corps and is studying at Columbia University.

Loud But Permissible.

Distributed matter should be carefully considered, especially stuff that is liable to come into the hands of children. Heneghan has got out an interesting advertisement for "Kaiser," which we think would be good for any picture but a strong propaganda. It is a card 2 1/2 by 9 inches, with the upper 3 1/2 inches fouled over on itself. At the top the text reads, "Take off his mask and give him": just below is a circular window showing a red "H" on the under card. The rest of the card is a partial picture of the Kaiser matching with the lower half of the under picture. Hiding the card transforms the Kaiser into the Devil and the red H now becomes the initial letter to "Heartrending and Barbarian Cruelty." The idea is clever and even permissible, but we think it would have been better to have left the H out where the piece is apt to come into the hands of so many children. Even less good is the epithet adorning the back side. Even in propaganda films all things not permissible are immoral and sensational. It does not fairly drip blood. It just reads to get your interest, that's all.

Imported Blotters.

One of the dangers of having advertising done out of town is a possible change of bill. The Theatre, had out a bill this week with the face of the bloter recently and then print on the blotting side because their blotters were printed in New York and sent down to them and the bill for the week was changed while the programs were on the way down. Mr. Bush, by the way, has gone into the photographic division of the Signal Corps and is studying at Columbia University.

Camouflage.

Because the synopses is merely a story or a story, it does not follow that the story should not be told with care. It is still more important that you stick to the story and refrain from impressing the editor with your literary skill. Too many beginners, and not a few better practised writers, seem to think that if they can interest the editor in the way the story is written they may make a sale. This is an error. Most editors can tell the difference between verbiage and plot. If you have your heroine make a pie do not devote several paragraphs to telling how delicious that pie is. That will not show on the screen. You may make the editor's mouth water, but you are only selling a story as a pie, and selling it not for the pie, and not the pastry. All that will show on the screen is that the heroine makes a pie. Tell that and then go on to the next fact. Do not enlarge upon the possible delightful lives that her husband will lead because of the pie, but leave out the rhapsody. This holds doubly good in the case of a comedy story. Don't try to make the editor laugh at your words, but at the sagacity of the writer, and seldom that the writer himself.

Tell what will be funny and you can be as solemn as a hen-pecked man at the marriage of his best friend and still impress the editor. Sometimes you will be good enough to print and you'll find that it should be printed instead of sized and that you have sent it to the wrong man. Give the editor a good plot and he will not care whether you are a literary genius or the graduate of a correspondence school. All he wants is a plot, clear, understandabke plot, and the less you camouflage it with words the better. This does not mean that you should cut down the barest mention of the facts, but that every phase should exemplify the plot rather than your cleverness of expression. Do not say that "Marie breaks Ben's heart and goes to the mountains" but say rather that Marie breaks her engagement and add that Ben is heartbroken. The former phrase may sound smart, but the latter gives the facts in their order. You will have all you can do to get the story down plausibly and effectively without trying to dress it up with smart phrasing and meaningless sentiments. You can always make your story more interesting and yet vividly present, if you are interested, a difference between the attractive presentation of facts and an effort to be smart. You must be interesting if you would interest the editor, but interesting him in the story and not in your method of expression.

Don't Grouch and Work.

Don't try to do creative work when you feel that the whole world is working. You'll write better stories that no one reads and you'll not be sufficiently cynical to be clever. You don't have to bubble over with joy in order to write good stuff, but the better you feel the better your story is apt to be unless long practice has made you proficient in doing your stunt no matter what your personal feelings. Don't ever argue that you feel too rotten to do anything else, so you'll write a story. That's the most pitiful story you ever wrote. They put him on the job a dozen years, but it never works with the beginner and it is apt to leave an after effect that is not easy to eradicate.

Hold to Your Character.

Don't get the idea that you can make too many people interesting. If you can interest an audience in just one person, that is all you need do. You'll write better stories for a star, if it is even more important that all the other persons and events he made a background for the star, yet writers will persist in wandering from the track and writing in a lot of new and unneeded material. When the whole business is good, we'll not do. The audience must be presented a single question, and all of the action must contribute directly toward the answer. Side action is interesting only as it applies to the response to that question. The fact that Jim chokes John is interesting only because if he succeeds in his attack at murder John will be dead. Jane is interested in John as you want him to be, not so much because he is interested in John as because Jane is, and you are interested in all that concerns Jane's happiness. It is this centralization of interest that makes the story. The lack of the last chances of success.

Pick out your chief character in advance and write all of your action around that character. Do not try to write three or four lines of direct related action and then write the rest at the finish. Be clear and explicit.

Study the Wants.

If you hear that a certain company wants stories of a certain type, study that type of story. Don't shoot in a lot of stuff you think might suit. Make certain that it does suit exactly. Not long ago we had a script that was not wanted. The result was a snapstick comedy that was hardly strong enough for a reel when the demand was for a light comedy-drama in five reels. The author simply went ahead without investigation and sent in the product, still ignorant of the company's actual wants. It does not pay, as a rule, to write material to suit one particular company. It does not pay to send in any old idea on the off chance that it might possibly get by. You can at least select from the material at hand the types of stories best suited to the advertised needs.

Write Ready Mades.

We know of an author who is filled with ambition to write for a certain company and he is determined to be defeated by the fact that this company has a personal author who prepares all of his scripts, generally from published novels. As the star has a marked personality and the author writes to get this particular person, all is well, but when the personal author is unavailable for the use of others, and so the effort is completely wasted unless persistence is at last rewarded in the shape of a staff job. The star system makes for the special staff writer. Pray for the abolition of the star system and the use of star stories, and in the meanwhile write stories that are stories that merely vehicles for a certain star. The Chaplin business heads are particularly irritating in this respect. If an author queries the company he is cordially invited to send in, and then he gets his script back under the assumption that merely having to do with the production of the war. The outsider cannot know the particular points the propagandists wish to emphasize, and so their stories are apt to fall short. The propagandist only has some vague idea of making some contact and through a mistaken idea of friendliness, welcomes the script, which is then turned over to the script department which gives the reply which should be: "Sorry, but we want you to know that we are merely using you as a baiting policy of trying to make friends for the brand which has a decidedly reverse effect.

Propaganda Stories.

It is useless to try the open market with propaganda material. Most of this material is written by arrangement with those interested in the production of the war, and particularly with those who are trying to do with the prosecution of the war. The outsider cannot now the particular points the propagandists wish to emphasize, and so their stories are apt to fall short. The propagandists only has some vague idea of making some contact and through a mistaken idea of friendliness, welcomes the script, which is then turned over to the script department which gives the reply which should be: "Sorry, but we want you to know that we are merely using you as a baiting policy of trying to make friends for the brand which has a decidedly reverse effect.

Don't write the synopsis of a story until you have sat down and have seen it set down before your mental gaze. The ideal way to write a synopsis would be first to do the continuity and then make the synopsis. That is given to you and you will not be interested, but you must be interested in your story, not in the way you go about making a synopsis and not con- dity does not release you from the need of writing material that can be worked into a continuity without trouble. You still need technique, even though you may not need to use it.

In Summer.

Don't get the idea that just because it is hot weather you cannot write. If you are looking for an excuse to loaf, that is as good an excuse as any, perhaps, but there is no real excuse for loafing. Write in the bath-tub or under the tree, if you will, but keep on writing. You will find that the weather cools off again that you must do much of the work over again. Better ten minutes work once a day than a hundred minutes work once a week. This will result in a habit of regularity and you will find that work becomes a pleasure or, at least, is robbed of much of its drudgery. In the summer your vitality is very probably much greater than in the wintertime, but if you get no hot that you cannot think you would do well to use a physician. Take a couple of weeks off, if you will, but do not lay off the entire summer. You'll be all out of practice in the fall.

Reversed Emotions.

If you only knew it, you should be obliged, sometimes, to the man who sends back your script: it might be worse if he made it.

TECHNIQUE OF THE PHOTOPLAY

By EFE'S WINTHROP SARGENT

A book replete with practical pointers on the preparation of stories for the screen, answering the hundred and one questions which arise when a first script is attempted. A tested handbook for the constant writer of pictures by one of the most skillful and judicious of all motion from an author with a wealth of real "dollars-and- cents" experience.

Manufacturers' Notice.
It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially unless the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.
Owing to the mass of matter swelling publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

The Wagner Converter.
The purpose of my visit to St. Louis was primarily to examine the Wagner Converter and set before our readers such details with regard to it and its performance as may seem desirable. The Wagner Converter is well known to the motion picture fraternity, having been on the market for four or five years. It is a compact apparatus, having a very satisfactory electrical efficiency, as has been proven by former tests published in this department at the time of my last visit to the plant.

The Wagner Company's outfit is a current rectifying device of the converter type. As between the regular motor-generator set and the converter the difference consists in the following: The motor-generator is nothing more nor less than a D.C. generator of suitable amperage capacity and voltage range driven by an alternating current motor designed to work at the line voltage and frequency of the supply circuit. The converter, on the other hand, consists of one machine only, which in general has the performance of a standard D.C. generator. It has a commutator, and the brushes on the commutator end have exactly the same function as the brushes on a D.C. generator. In addition to the commutator, however, there are two or more slip-rings mounted on the shaft on the opposite end from the commutator. These rings will be seen at the left in the illustration and the commutator at the right. The slip-rings are connected to a small, stationary A.C. transformer, the primary side of which is connected to the A.C. line.

The impressed A.C. voltage and the resultant direct current voltage bear a fixed relation to each other; for instance, if 50 volts A.C. be impressed at the slip-rings then the D.C. commutator will deliver 75 volts. This is accomplished by providing the A.C. transformer with special, higher voltage taps. In other words, the machine is, by means of the transformer, which is an integral part thereof, adjustable either for the purpose of obtaining a higher direct current voltage at the lamp or to compensate for fluctuations in line voltage. This is accomplished by means of a change in tap connections in the transformer, the coils and connections of which are seen just above and to the left of the converter. The switch leading to the alternating current supply is the two-pole, single-throw immediately above the transformer. In addition to this switch a four-pole switch will be seen to the right of the two-pole switch just mentioned. This four-pole, double-throw switch is marked "Start." On one side, the other side is marked "Running." In order to start the converter throw the four-pole, double-throw switch into position marked "Start." Leave the switch closed in this position until the converter has reached approximately normal speed, which will occur in ten to fifteen seconds. Then throw the switch into the position marked "Running." The machine will now be ready to deliver D.C. current to the commutator end of the converter.

One peculiarity of the machine is that the polarity of the brush on the D.C. side cannot be predetermined. Sometimes the top brush is positive and sometimes negative, and this makes necessary an additional two-pole, double-throw switch in order to change polarity. This switch is shown in the upper right-hand corner of the switchboard. If it should happen that the converter has picked up with wrong polarity all that is necessary is to throw the double-throw switch in the opposite position.

In order to obtain a steady arc it has been found essential that a certain amount of resistance be introduced between the arc and the D.C. supply. For this reason a certain amount of resistance is connected into the D.C. line. This resistance is shown in the right, lower corner, just above the converter. It is inclosed in a pressed steel, ventilated case.

In cases where two arcs are to be fed from the same converter, and where it is desired to gradually increase the brilliancy of one and decrease the brilliancy of the other a duplex resistance, or, as the Wagner Company term it, "Duplex Arc Regulator," is used. This resistor makes it possible to gradually decrease the brilliancy of the arc in use, and to gradually increase the brilliancy of the arc to be used. It is by this operation that the arc is kept to a fixed number of volts. The cutting out of resistance on one arc and cutting it in on the other is accomplished by simply moving this handle from one extreme position to the other extreme position. The arc of the idle machine is thus gradually developed to full brilliancy, and the arc of the running machine gradually extinguished.

The manufacturer claims a machine efficiency of from 75 to 75 per cent, when operating on 220 volts A.C. supply. This, however, does not include the resistance loss. The Wagner machine is mechanically well built; also the motor-generator used in its construction are high grade. The Wagner Converter is built for single phase or polyphase current. One improvement that has recently been adopted is to make it possible to operate the arc even in case of a break down in the converter. In this case the arc will be connected directly across the leads of the A.C. transformer. In others words, the leads, which normally are connected to the commutator brushes, will be connected to the leads of the A.C. transformer which normally would be connected to the slip-rings of the converter. This arrangement is known as "Emergency A.C. Supply." While at the Wagner plant I had the privilege of talking with Mr. J. P. Jones, of the sales department, and Mr. H. Weichsel, of the engineering department.

Duplex Resistance.

Film Indicator.
The J. K. E. Company, Seattle, Washington, have submitted working model of their indicator, designed to warn the operator when to proceed with the 1500-foot film machine for the change-over. The operation of the device is quite clearly shown in the illustration, except as to the
It does not ring the bell loud enough. However I believe the model submitted is mostly hand made and very likely the finally finished, ready-to-be-marketed device and not properly subject to these criticisms. But there is one change I would by all means advise, viz.: so arrange that the roller at end of arm is magazine will run on film track. In fact the arm should, in my judgment, end in a fork without rollers. True the arm is very light but it is nevertheless possible, with the roller not rolling, as might happen, that a scratch could result. The scale of feet would be approximate only and not even that when a large hub (5-inch hub) reel is used. This is, however, of slight importance. A convenient catch holds the magazine arm up out of the way while threading.

Altogether, within its limitations as a mechanical device, the indicator is basically well designed. I shall be very glad to have the opinion of several practical theater operators who are using the device as soon as they have been marketed. One thing makes me particularly willing to recommend its purchase without hesitation and that is the unequivocal statement of the company, "Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded." You cannot very well lose on that proposition. Address of company supplied if stamped post card is sent for same.

An Odd Mixture.

1. Craig, Missouri Valley, Iowa, sends in the following:

"trigger," which is adjustable and may be set to ring the bell at any desired distance from end of reel.

The operation is entirely mechanical and, barring possible variation caused by out-of-center reel hubs, or out-of-center film roll caused by some other agency, such as, for instance, a bumped-up hub spring, ought to function with at least very reasonable accuracy. I would, however, suggest the making of the component parts, aside from the frame itself, a trifle more substantially. Of course there is nothing in the law that compels anyone to use only one type, but when the trigger part is unnecessarily light; also the coil spring is too light.

I have given this letter space as a somewhat queer mixture of fact and impossible ideas. I am not very well up in the various light ray vibrations, but broadly what the brother says on that subject is true, our utilization in projection is a question of obtaining the necessary rays and focus all rays at the same point. (Some considerable lens—Ed.) I have perfected a process for cooling the light ray at the condenser. I find it is a hinged-up affair, but when it reaches the aperture it is cool enough to allow of the film being stopped in the full power of the ray for ten minutes. Has such a thing been done before?

Maryland Law.

Recently a law proposing to govern the licensing of projectionists was introduced in the Maryland legislature. A clause originally presented held a clause requiring on the examining board "one master electrician to represent the building inspector's office of Baltimore City." Thus the exhibitors interpreted the legislature as requiring a "fully licensed motion picture machine operator, a member of the moving picture machine operator, a member of the moving picture operators union." Now I know I shall not be at all popular when I say I am opposed to doing it. Since the admission into law the proposition that a board member shall belong to an approved body, in my opinion the whole thing, as applied to both projectionist and exhibitor members of the examining board, is wrong, both in principle and in practice. I do not blame the projectionists for insisting on the insertion of this clause when they found the exhibitors insisted that they themselves be represented on the board, but it is a subject to the whole proceeding as tending to a measure defeat the very purpose for which such a board is formed. Members of the examining board are state officers, and as such cannot, without prostitution of their office, interest themselves in but one thing, viz.: The qualification of candidates for license to operate projection pictures. If this is all that they have in view then why are Maryland exhibitors and projectionists so very anxious about having representation on the examining board? Personally, I am opposed to the idea of the examiner of the examining board being set up as many men licensed as is possible without too much fussing about competency, while the projectionists want to limit license, and may temper the wind too much on the sails in the interests of the public. The original draft proposed that applicants for license should have at least one year's experience under a licensed operator, or two years' experience operating a moving picture machine. This was cut to 'six months experience operating a moving picture machine,' which is, if the exhibitors secured the change, as I understand they did, an example of a man handing himself a vigorous slap on his own face. This by reason of the fact that, while the inexperienced projectionist works injury to the whole industry, it injures the exhibitor more than any other individual. There has always been more or less trouble between Maryland projectionists and the examining board, and this move is by implication something worse than a little energy wasted. I believe the projectionists will be willing to keep humble. If you please, the examining board members will do likewise, and that both would be gainers if this were done.

Take-Up Trouble.

Edward Rosen, Frankfort, Maine, has trouble with his take-up, which he describes as follows:

"Am an interested reader of the department, and have obtained much valuable information therefrom. From your descriptions of theaters I find that although I am now operating in a small town still our equipment is not such that "something can always be done" to improve. We are constantly trying to improve. Have a "Power Six," which has been working very nicely, but all of a sudden when machine may be in operation, the elliptical will be out of order or "out of time" allright, then once or twice it will go very hard, varying that way. It runs alright without the film, or with the film allowed to drop in the sprocket. Why should it be different when lower reel is in action?

That is rather hard to say. When it is running hard test the film between the lower sprocket and the free-valve of the lower magazine. It is pulled very tight—much tighter than when machine runs easy.
When the trouble is in the take-up tension or in the take-up belt. Maybe or some reason the belt slips freely on the small pulley in all but one position and then tightens up as the film reaches the projection belt and your take-up friction, which is too tight. If it is not in the belt box examine the take-up tension very carefully, taking it apart. Also be sure and examine the mechanism of the take-up. If it lies in the second, knowing this, a little ingenuity in testing the various points involved (belt, spindle, and friction) should locate it.

Suggestions New Form of Handbook.

B. A. Aushinbaugh, Mingo, Ohio, writes to say:

"I feel rush in where angels fear to tread," says the poet, so I am constrained to once more obtrude myself upon your notice. Your masterpiece, "Motion Picture Handbook," makes me feel that if you should publish a pamphlet or series of articles in the projection department entitled "Projection Troubles and How to Correct Them" it would find instant favor. I wrote the author last week. Well, what is my Handbook for anyhow? Allow me to explain. Let us suppose a projectionist notes a floating, up-and-down motion in his pictures. He says, "I look for the rest of this particular trouble!" The answer is doubtless contained in the Handbook, but it takes considerable search to find it. If there were a heading, "Up and Down Motion of Picture on the Screen," followed by the various possible causes all this searching would be eliminated. Might this idea somebody consider for the Handbook Manual? For example, the Manual has one heading, "A Knock Enlarging which is coming from various kinds, and tells how to distinguish them from each other; also he sets forth the means for correction. The whole psychology of the matter is this: He then looks mechanical and we say the number of times you have yourself been obliged to refer owners of your Handbook to certain passages therein. Get a Ford Manual and examine its make-up. Do not help the novice to correct or to find troubles quickly? I am having this floating, up-and-down motion in one of our American Standards (this machine, the just came back from the factory) was put into a supposedly first class condition, and I'll be hanged if I can adjust it out, or find the answer in the Handbook, which I have consulted recently.

I have long realized and recognized the value of the form of instruction book you describe, yet I deliberately chose the form I use in the Handbook. Why? Well, for the simple reason that I want the novice to have READING KNOWLEDGE. If you had such a convenient trouble finder, Friend Aushinbaugh, you doubtless would use it wisely and well, but how many would do that? How many thousands of projectionists would place reliance in the aid of such a book, when in trouble, instead of equip themselves with real KNOWLEDGE. I regard such a book, as applied to projection, as the equivalent of what you, I think, call "crithmin" in examinations. I want the projectionist to have comprehensive knowledge of his business, and that he cannot and will not get without study. This book and actually, he ought to study it won't have to search very much when he gets into trouble, because he will have the necessary knowledge stored up in his mind where it should be. Much concern about the "novice" nowadays. If the novice will serve a competent apprenticeship, as he should, he won't be a novice when he takes charge of the projection. And no trouble. For so-called capricious reasons men imagine they can jump in, spend a week or two in a projection room, and, presto, they are projectionists. It can't be done. If the Ford owner, through lack of knowledge, ruins or injures his car, is his car, he is the loser, and it is his privilege to raise merry hell with his own property if he sees fit. Neither the films or the machinery ordinarily belong to the projectionist, and that is very different; also he can do large damage to the screen result if he knows nothing about it. If such a person concerned, genuine knowledge is necessary to the projectionist. As to the trouble in your Standard projector the answer is to be found in General Manual Instruction in the Handbook, but it is scattered through several instructions. No man could tell you what is the trouble without knowing just what sort of jump it is. It may be due to dirt on face of intermittent sprocket, or due to tension, or due to harelip of scissors, or due to adjustment of intermittent sprocket itself not rare (these later days), intermittent sprocket shaft spring (almost impossible with Standard), worn intermittent shaft bushing, excessive adjustment of intermittent sprocket, worn intermittent sprocket, old films or films with inaccurate perforations. Do not please imagine I am taking a swipe at you, Friend Aushinbaugh. Your case is exceptional, you being a school principal and interested in projection for the school benefit only. Yours is a separate and individual and non-commercial and demanding different treatment, but in my position it is very hard to differentiate.

All Wrong—but Right.

H. H. Burg, secretary-treasurer Tacoma Theater Managers' Association, has this to say concerning an article in May 4 issue:

"Concerning your 'Wrong—but Right,' page 403, May 4 issue, you are all wrong! Punches are bad. Indicators get out of order. There is one way to detect the change-over trouble, which no one would be able to locate by reading a paper or talking to a visitor, viz.: Split a long subtitle, leaving at least three feet of it on end of reel, and attaching the rest to next reel. The first reel can be faded into the sub-titles of the second without the audibility making the change being made. The sub-title at the end reel to the change sign, of course.

If friend Burg, I am NOT 'all wrong'; also I am not wrong at all. If you examine the book numbers I have used you will find that I have advocated the plan you suggest as excellent in cases where it has been used. But it has its faults, also they are serious ones. You say it works "unless." Having faith in the word "unless" constitutes a weakness. Of course, if projectionists are careless an indication must likely will get out of order. But that is precisely one of the things the projectionist is paid your operator's salary for. To keep things in order, and if he is too shiftless or careless to do it we would respectfully suggest the time has arrived to reported to the Tacoma unions, and then, if the fault continue, that he be given a warning. And if he is so careless that he won't keep a simple indicator in order I think you will agree that he will be just as likely to be "reading a paper or talking to a visitor." Also, I might remark that you yourself are open to just criticism if you allow visitors in your projection room while the show is on. Your subtitle splitting has serious faults, to wit: (a) it requires the disarrangement of reels when received from the exchange and the return of them to former state when they leave the theater—something of a task if it be a seven or eight-reel feature. In this connection it is useless to say the producer should arrange the subtitles as suggested. This department expended a lot of energy trying to get to do that thing very time some age, but without suc-
ces. Two or three of them pronounced, but that was all. They later made excuse that they could not get their directors to incorporate sufficient subtitles at proper place. Their excuse is for such a purpose are by no manner of means always to be found.

High Class Work.

Charles E. Bowby, with the "Italian Battle Front" picture, writes:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: I want to tell you of some high class work I saw in Des Moines, Waterloo, and Dubuque, all Iowa cities. The host projection I have ever viewed, and I have been pleased well all over the United States, in none of these cities. In the Garden theater, Des Moines, the screen result was very high class, and it remained so through the entire show. In Waterloo, the projection was perhaps even more excellent. In the Palace theaters. In all my experience I have not seen a better screen result than that at the Palace. I did not meet the projectionist, as I was tided out of the theater. It is possible, however, that the operator paid the operator. And I have no city more clean-cut men who are delivering the goods. I met the man at the Plaza. I saw some coloring put on at the Palace. It was very good indeed. How is it done?

Um, Brother Bowby, why don't you send in a few details? You say the work was very fine, but do not detail its points of excellence. But anyhow I am glad to know the men in those theaters are doing good work. As to the coloring, why have you not described it sufficiently to enable me to say how it is done. It is possible that your "limited way" may be because of carefully selected color glass held in the light ray, but nine times in ten where this is attempted it is over-done, the effect leaving very much to be desired Proper Presentation of Pictures Musically.

Orchestral Balance.

The wise exhibitor sees the handwriting upon the wall and is increasing the number of men in his orchestra. He sees the tendency towards a larger ensemble and notes the wonderful possibilities to be derived from a big body of musicians. In the first place it is good showmanship, as it gives his theater a distinction that will be noted by the clairvoyants and dressers would not have to be patronized if it takes up all of the slack in his expense line, and though his overhead has been increased he will not feel it appreciably. A poor orchestra employing the usual number of instruments can result in disappointment.

When an orchestra is to be augmented, or a larger one installed, there always comes the vexing question of instrumentation. How shall the three-colors and yet so that the final effect will be possible? How many strings and wood-wind will be necessary to balance the brass section or vice versa? Is a harp needed or can a piano be used instead of the clarinets and violins?

There has always obtained a sort of general rule as to what constitutes an orchestra of a particular size. This rule has been derived from the false notion that anything pleasant sounding and not serious thought being given to the results. As a consequence, if an exhibitor desires a ten-piece orchestra he tells his leader to get him one, and the leader arranges matters according to the following instruments: Piano, cello, bass, flute, clarinet, cornet, trombone, drums and another violin beside his own. This really is a drum and fiddle sort of orchestra completed by the familiar bass-violin and finally un억ted to properly play pictures.

It has never been thoroughly understood why American vaudeville houses adopted this combination of instruments. It is entirely overbalanced, the string section being almost worthless when the brass is playing, while the wood-wind portion, as represented by the flute and clarinet, sounds peculiarly out of place. When the drums have a forte passage the entire orchestra is lost in the rumble of sound.

At first the performing artists tried to arrange music for a concert orchestra that had been used in various hotels, theaters, temples, etc., and used it. It became the reason for a "shoo-fly" music, and one of the longest strides backward that music in America has ever taken. English orchestral works played on us and they were satisfied with the attuned orchestra.

In all cases of perfection this combination of musicians became permanent in the various theaters throughout the country and are still with us, most of our realization.

Orchestras of this make-up are to be found in many picture theaters and are worthless as an agency for picture portrayal. Many expedients are reported in order to improve the orchestra, to be done at least by forgoing the piano or the organ is to be "muted" its concert and trombone to obtain a soft effect, but this becomes monotonous in time. Cellos are reduced and are found effective, but if overdone their value is lost.

If your orchestra be overbalanced no amount of inexperience will cover up the fault.

In our opinion a ten-piece orchestra should be made up entirely of strings and wood-wind, with the trap drums for an occasional effect. A combination consisting of two violins, second violin, viola, cello, bass, flute, clarinet, cornet, trombone and drums would be ideal for the smaller house; a piano to be used to give tonal color and relieve the orchestra. The second violin player could double without the necessity of the extra violins. There would be an expert on his instrument, because he could not depend upon the piano to cover up his sins of omission or commission. This would be the best arrangement and yet would be able to give an occasional requiring volume. The use of the harmonium with the instrumentation would be excellent, as it could well take the place of the brass without introducing its blaring notes.

People have gotten beyond the point where noise will suffice their musical needs. They call for better music, more artistic rendition and more intelligent selection of orchestral work. As some leaders seem to think, by the music, for their purpose in coming is to see the picture presented in the best possible way. It is the business of the leader to work out the feature, not play away from it by giving a concert. Therefore, the smoother the quality of tone the safter the playing, and the closer the breaks in the music the less the interest of the audience.

For the inroads made by the organ in picture playing, the orchestras have no right to blame but themselves. Musicians have been leading their jobs, and when employed they have ceased to think about improving their position. They take it for granted that because the combination is the same as they have been accustomed to lead that it fits the situation. They never consider the acoustic properties of the theater, they never think of the people looking on, the light shine in the faces of the people, and as for seeking a better solution of their instrumentation problems, that never occurs to them.

Orchestral balance is their next problem to be solved by the selection of instruments. Sometimes, because of acoustic propensities, it may be necessary to "hide" the orchestra, allowing the sound to come through a certain area and to be varied to change the position of certain men or shift the whole orchestra to obtain the best results.

The exhibitor depends on his orchestral leader to give him the best possible arrangements, and to improve the position of the musicians. The first thing the leader must get is balance, and the way he does it matters little. Change your men, change your instrument, change your position, change your seating arrangement, but get perfect tonal balance.

The contention may be raised that by dispensing with the brass in a small combination, the playing of the picterial will suffer. It is a mistaken idea that it takes brass instruments to make a march sound well. It is natural and very effective with all brass as is a band, but we have heard a seven-piece orchestra "put over" marches with all the vigor and swing of a vaudeville combination and with a better result.

These considerations are for the larger orchestra, for which instruments should not be added a harp and drum until the number of men playing have reached fourteen. When we speak of brass we do not include in this classification French horns which are really of the wood-wind family and are really never used.

The lack of balance in almost every case is found among the small orchestrists, but once in a while we come across this fault in symmetry again. We have had experience in which we have fallen into of dropping the viol and second violin parts, using the piano instead, is probably to blame for the scarcity of "filling" to be found in some symphonies; orchestras. The tonal quality of the picterial is always larger in size than a large orchestra if proper balance is desired. The piano is originally an orchestral instrument, but its wide range and facile execution is making it the standard by which the American orchestra is measured. In small combinations it is frequently necessary, and when played artistically, becomes a wonderful orchestral aid, but it is not needed in large orchestras and can be eliminated.

No set rules can be laid down for orchestral balance. Much depends upon the size of the orchestra, acoustics must be considered, individual players, and the time of the year. The lack of balance is due to the greater number of variety of numbers. If a leader will take up this problem conscientiously and solve it, his gratification will be the fact that it will remain a credit to himself and a hot-office asset to the theater.

With readiness and dispatch, and perfect artistry. These two traits saying sum up the fine show presented at the Rivoli, during the week of June 8. The full two hours were knit together with a continuity that is seldom found in shadowy, dull programs. The use and "steal" used for the sinners were in strict keeping with the scenes' interpretations, while the lighting upheld the usual high standard of the Rivoli, to which the house has always remained faithful in its efforts. The performance começou the overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," by Nicolai, with a little different interpretation than is usually given to this well known number. His work is constantly improving, and his results are becoming more clearly defined. He is gaining a broader sweep in the use of his baton, coupled with a more definite beat that will eventually stamp him as one of our best conductors in pictures.

This overture was produced in 1849, about a month before the composer's death, and the opera to which it belongs still holds the stage. Founded upon Shakespeare's play of the same name, it is a delightful musical setting of that rollicking comedy, and there is much charming melody and clever orchestration in it.

The Scoule, showing "Mexico Today," was beautifully fitted by the use of La Peria Suite, by Lombe. This was probably the most beautiful melody as the first two numbers were all that was required to play the entire recital, besides being admirably suited to the picture.

Miss Gladys Rice sang "Mighty Lake," a picture presentation. The music of the Picture was well chosen, and especially so when

July 6, 1918

THE PICTURES OF THE MARRINEs were shown. The spotlit effect upon the darkened faces of the spectators was purely patriotic. It made one's blood tingle with the love of country.

Following this the orchestra struck up "Over There," dying away as the lights were dimmed and the camera went in. The picture was projected on a chair by the window where the light streamed in upon his expected and blind eyes. Seated by him is a girl who does not seem to notice his absence. The camera pans over to a man in the distance and Greek Evans (for it is he) sings "The Americans Come." This song is strongly reminiscent of "The Veteran's Song," which followed the war, and is not altogether devoid of a certain irony and suggestiveness. It is intensely descriptive of the fulfillment of the hope that the Americans will come to turn the tide.

The performance was very favorably impressed with Mr. Evans' voice. It showed a richness that we hardly thought possible, while his rendering rang out with the clearness of a bell. The song suited him admirably.

The feature was "Hit-the-Trail Holliday," a comedy by George Cohan. It was well suited though it required nothing but the lightest treatment.

The opening showing Rome, Egypt, London and New York had special excerpts to indicate the atmosphere, which we considered par excellence. This little touch evinced the careful thought given to details that have made the Rialto-Rivoli shows what they are and which must be followed by every theater in the country eventually, if they present pictures properly.

Music at the Symphony.

The long-delayed-opening of the Symphony theater occurred on June 14, when a private showing was given to warm the house. This home of the Metropolitan was crowded with a large audience. It is well suited with every possible appointment for the convenience of its patrons.

Cheerful music did not obstruct the view and the balcony arrangement is ideal and different.

The first performance is a bit ragged and we will not criticize them. There is a possibility that they have had time to acclimate themselves to picture playing there will be no question as to merit. The Symphony orchestra is composed of fifty musicians and is conducted by the eminent Italian maestro Luigi Ricci. The assistant, Enrico Leide, these leaders are excellent musicians and should give a good account of themselves when they have had a little more training.

The overture, which consisted of excerpts from "La Boheme," was rendered with true traditional interpretation, and though a little long for the Symphony audience, it was received with much favorable applause. Mr. Ricchi certainly knows his "Boheme," and from this first taste of Italian opera we can expect some fine examples in the future.

The second number of "The Front Page," "Gioconda," by eight ballet dancers and Mlle. Clara Tosca, was the finest thing we have seen outside of grand opera, and even there it has not been excelled in a long time. Some of the numbers remembered was put on at the Hippodrome, of New York. You will remember theformer. It occasioned us to mention this little divetissement show at the Symphony is far and beyond it, in point of all-around excellence. Mlle. Clara Tosca compares favorably with the celebrities of the Terpsichorean art, and her miniature ballet ably supports her. This one number should be seen by every music lover who can get into the theater, and our opinion is that it will hold the boards for some time.

The next best thing on the programme was the first number, called a Patriotic Tableau, and showing the village of Chateau-Thierry as it was during the war. The picture was beautifully constructed and which was wonderfully effective, and the lighting effects and fire scenes made the village seem intensely real. This was followed by good-looking young lady dancers representing the allied nations. During this part of the routine the orchestra played the National air of each nation, and played them from beginning to end. The little routine in all was a good one, and drew a large and enthusiastic applause.

A strain of each would have given the number more snap and is always good showmanship in the presenting of incidental numbers in the picture. A Mut and Jeff comedy was shown and the organ played it. This is bad picture presentation musically. The organ is not suited to follow a comedy matter. It spoils the fun and cannot give the necessary grotesqueness to convey the spirit of burlesque to the audience. The organists at the Symphony are Harold Smith, formerly of the Broadway, and Mr. Cooper, who is also well known about town. Here we have a duet of tremendous possibilities. They are both long expe-enced artists in picture playing and one most assuredly fitted to the right up to the highest standards.

The feature was "The Unchaste Women," featuring Grace Valentine. The picture does not give wide scope for musical setting, but the music used was satisfactory. The picture deals with a psychological subject with little physical action and, hence, must have been hard nut to crack for the first attempt at picture fitting in this new theater.

Altogether, the music was very good and great are our expectations. This feature is featuring its music, which is the right idea. It has the orchestra capable of doing big things. It has the conductor known for his sense of humor in all these matters. There is emphasis that it needs is time and experience to build up a name for picture settings that will set yet another high mark of perfection.

MUSICAL SUGGESTION SYNDICATE.

CITY OF DIM FACES (Paramount—Five reels)—Theme—Andante.

Suggest "A Japanese Sunset"—"Deepen, of "Japanese Reverie"—Hart-lett. This is a Chinese picture and of course the Chinese atmosphere must be held throughout. Chinese music is very limited, and a judicious use of the tropes will aid materially in conveying the necessary effects. We would suggest that the opera "Tribi," by Mokrman, be used, or else some of the other possibilities. The following list may be helpful to the leader in selecting for this picture:

H. A. Sings—Chinese numana—Katsarinaic
Sultan's Guard—Patriot—Gre.
Chinese Wedding Procession—March—Hosmer.
In Chinese Toilet—Opus—Kawase.
Lady Picking Mulberries—An Episod—Kelley.
Sunset Land—Moderato—Kawase.
Religious Night—Velini—Pfeiffer.
Chinese Highbinder Patrol—Johnson.
First Born—Chinese Serenade—Johnson.
Furioso.
Ching—Poinier.
Chinese Patrol—Poinier.

ELEVENTH COMMANDMENT. THE (Advanced Motion Picture Co.—Six reels)—Theme—Andante. Suggest "Eligium"—Speaks, "Peacefulness"—Borch, or "Est??e"—Ganne.

The character of this picture is a modern drama of the tense variety. You will need rather classic stuff for this feature of the heavier nature. A good effect can be made by carefully selecting quiet numbers to fit the scenes where the heroine is shown, and where plot are not playing imperatively. The selections will fit you reach the fifth reel, when you will require a misterioso, followed by a dramatic agitato, a dramatic andante, a dramatic tension and a coda. Close up with the main theme. Cue sheets can be obtained from the producers.

KAISER'S SHADOW. THE (Paramount—Five reels)—Theme—Unnecessary.

This picture filled with dramatic events of the time of war. You will need agitatos, a few misteriosos, and a furioso. There is good opportunity for some very stirring music, and it should be tempestuous to incorporate the Star Spangled Banner in the fourth reel. Do not use our national anthem, but select some other well known American patriotic airs. The scene is laid in London and an American city. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

LAST REBELL. THE (Triangle—Five reels)—Theme—Andante Semiplide and Southern. Suggest "Pleading"—Wood. "Southern Reverie"—Remix. or "Poncrmenis"—Langey.

This feature is divided into two parts, one portion showing a story in the Civil War, and the other taking place fifty years later. The atmosphere of both is Southern, yet a distinction should be made in the music transition to strongly emphasize the different periods. Open with old Southern melodies, getting in suitable numbers to fit the darkly characters. The music of the later period should be chosen after careful research work. There is much pathos in the feature, and you should note the fight with the band of thugs and the attempted drowning of the heroine. No cue sheets are available for this picture, so it would be well to have a good musical setting.

This is a mystery story about the murder of the guardian of the heroine. Open with the first movement of the Unfinished Symphony, and select other similar numbers. This work is little known, but will set the feature apart. The second reel will set you in a daze. You will then need dramatic tension stuff, misteriosos and agitatos. Note the big fight in the two reels, and the fast pace of the third reel, for which you will fit this close. Close with the second movement of the unfinished. Cue sheets have been discontinued by the Triangle Film Co.

ONLY ROAD. THE (Metro—Five reels)—Moderato and Spanish. Suggest "Serenata"—Crespi, "Serenade"—Tarengi, or "La Paloma."

Here is your chance to get some Spanish atmosphere into your setting. The action takes place on the Mexican Border and is intensely dramatic. You will need some misteriosos, agitatos, drame-tension, and so forth, but try to select your incidental concert numbers with a view to their Spanish flavor. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Metro exchange.

SOCIAL QUICKSIEVE (Metro—Five reels)—Theme—Allegretto. Suggest "Spanish Elves"—Borch, "In the Shadows"—Finck, or "Mussdora"—Leigh.

This comedy drama enacted in society of wealth and position.

Light and tricky music will be needed almost entirely. A few two-steps, one fag, and some light waltzes. Note the piano solo at the end of the third reel. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Metro exchange.

STOLEN ORDERS (Irby Production Co.—Eight reels)—Theme for Miss Gordon—Andante. Suggest "Andante"—Mandelson, "Wedding Trance"—Ascomb, or "Meditation"—Leigh.

Melodramatic music in large quantities will be needed for this feature. It is a war picture, the making of which was done in 1918. The battle scene was chased by the aeroplane don't use a galop, but select a number with sweeping string effects and vivace in tempo. Note the fight between the Americans and the Cossacks. Cue sheets can be obtained from using too much obvious German music. Cue sheets can be obtained from the World Film exchange.

You may not be able to fight, but you can save and buy War Savings Stamps.
Inquiries.

Questions in cinematography addressed to this department will receive carbon copy of the department's reply by mail when four cents in stamps are enclosed with each question. However, replies are not always mailed, otherwise such inquiry. This department cannot be responsible for pictures or apparatus that may be lost in the mail.

Another Interesting Letter from France.

Here is one of the most interesting letters that has reached this department from one of the leading theatrical war correspondents for Uncle Sam over there. The letter is from Sergeant Harry Thorpe to Lieut. Victor Fleming, both of whom were formerly the men behind the lens for Douglas Fairbanks, but lately of the Photographic Division of the Signal Corps.

Dear Pal: I haven't written you for some little time, but the hardest thing to do in this country, I find, is to write letters, even when one has the time you may have the inclination. I have sat around by the hour and have tried to bring myself to write, but when you are so far from home you just think what's the use.

It is raining again today, I said AGAIN, where I have been for the last two weeks it rains most all the time, though it does break at times during the day for a few hours, then I go out and do some work.

It is beautiful weather in France, and as the days are good and I get fairly good quarters I don't mind the rain so very much, but oftentimes is is raining when something big is going on, and then it is that an imaginative fellow has to be pretty sad to keep us from shooting. You'll say so if you get a chance to see some of them in the States.

I am the only one of the bunch to get a promotion, am in the Signal Corps. Now, what do you think of that? Am also the first one to get into the field and into the first line trenches. Oh, yes I have been UP THERE and heard the big ones whistle and the little ones, too, but the prettiest sight is to see the sharpened and high explosive break around and in the midst of a survey of places from two to three thousand feet up in the blue.

I will send you a picture of myself in the outfit we have to wear when we go close to the front, and if you think it's a chuck to work in an outfit of that sort you're all wrong. There are a million things I would like to tell you that I can't, but if you come over here you will learn awfully fast what the place you are in is. I laugh when I think of you giving the dope to the boys there knowing yourself of the conditions here. You may think I am jiving you and to say you have no conception of it is putting it mildly. I met an officer yesterday that you oughtn't to remember you saying that you were going to keep it for yourself or one like it; well, for my part anyone that wants its kind can have it. He told me about the boys there, said that he had quite a chat with you, also that you were all buck privates when he left; that, of course, was an answer to a query I put to him. I have wondered at different times if the buck had been made colours or major generals, and how the drilling was coming along, but there is conviction for me in the fact that maybe some of them will come over and get a chance to see what an ignorant old war is like.

I think that I have grabbed some pretty good stuff this time out; hope so any rate, as I expect to have to work and earn anything I may get in the service.

The Honorable Mr. McClintock is punching a typewriter, and damned glad of the chance to keep out of the way of the babies that whistle so.

I haven't had a line from the States as yet, don't know when I will, but it doesn't bother me any, you would be surprised how little I miss them. The U. S. Army is quite some place I visited some time or other. I have a vague recollection what it is like and that is all. I love France, and if they turn me loose after the war I will do my harshest to get on the other side, will probably be down there for a little stay before long.

Well will close now. Vic, have told you all I can for this time, will just add that motion picture going to do anything you don't work for and earn. Regards to all the boys.

Best regards to yourself, from your old pal.

HARRY THORPE.

Conducted by CARL LOUIS GREGORY, F. R. P. S.

P. S.—I often eat and sleep in some queer places. Day before yesterday I sat in a village blown to pieces by the Germans covering my lunch, in fact, by the time I was leaving the remains of one quart of Cognac, some contrast, eh. Vic. I am sending Douglas a German helmet through the courtesy of the officer who I am now working under. He took it off a German who was killed off by our men in a recent scrap. The helmet wasn't all be got in "No Man's" land, he grabbed a bunch of good negative with his M. P. camera. If you get over here you may meet him, he is 1st Lieut. E. H. Cooper of the Photographic Division, and has been mighty fine to me.

Recent Motion Picture Photographic Patents.

Abstracts by F. K. Research Laboratory.

U. S. Patents.

1292660. H. R. Evans.

A two-color Motion Picture Projection Apparatus in which red and green lights are simultaneously displayed between two adjacent gates, the light rays from such gates being directed by double reflection prisms to a pair of lenses to throw superimposed images upon the screen. The film is composed of perforations or holes in a picture space at each cycle, and consequently each picture is projected once at each gate.

1292564. F. E. Ives.

A projector for Motion Pictures in Natural Colors in which two complementary colored picture areas are arranged transversely beside each other on the film. The pictures are projected through separate paths with reflecting prisms and finally thrown in a common registering path upon the screen.

A method of printing on film, coated on both sides with an emulsion which absorbs violet and ultraviolet light and printing only with such light some of the rays pass through one sensitive layer to incorporate the other.

1292855. P. Artigue.

An apparatus for Taking Motion Pictures comprising a transparent back ground upon which shadowgraphs are thrown from the rear and photographs taken of the shadowgraphs and the background.

1292797. E. Koen, Assigned to W. P. Dunham.

An apparatus for Producing Motion Picture Drawings or Cartoons. A set of transparent films, each bearing an element of the picture, are superposed and retained in adjusted positions, an image for forming a picture, which is formed into a negative film. The positions of different elements are then readjusted and another picture taken to be a series of negative film. By repeating this method motion picture pictures are produced.

1292648. P. H. Terry, Assigned to The Fun Book of Making Motion Picture Films. The stationary elements of a series of pictures are first photographed upon the film, and then a series of representations of the moving elements in successive positions, the representation of a stationary element being masked during the photographing of the moving elements.

R. M. Craig.

A Motion Picture Film bearing sound records on one face and motion pictures on the other. The sound records consist of transverse lines composed of thin layers which are opaque to infra-red rays, but transparent to the visual projecting light. Infra-red rays are directed through the moving film toward a selenium transistor which is connected with a "loud speaking" phone behind the screen. The motion picture images are transparent to infra-red rays, and do not interfere with the sound reproduction. Conversely the sound records, being transparent to the projection light, do not interfere with the exhibition of motion pictures.

R. M. Craig.

A Combined Motion Picture Apparatus and Sound Reproducer. A special film bears both pictures and sound records. The latter cooperate with a beam of light to operate a selenium transmitter with a "loud speaking" phone behind the screen.

R. M. Craig.

A Apparatus for Synchronizing Music and Motion Pictures. An electrical switch is driven by the motion picture apparatus to flash a light to the musician at proper intervals, marks on the moving roll of film corresponding to such flashes.

T. T. Tuttle.

A Motion Picture Film, the edges of which are reinforced adjacent the perforations. The edges are covered with cement, and the bias on the bias is stuck to them.

F. A. Gildenihove and W. L. Trice.

A Feeding Mechanism for Motion Pictures in which a radiating system is reciprocated longitudinally of the film by means of a cam groove on the periphery of a rotary drum, while the film-grasping claws are oscillated transversely of the film by means of a cam on the end face of the drum.
Distribution Plan for Coming Year

Walter E. Greene Outlines How Famous Players Will Issue 208 Major Productions.

FEATURE productions to the number of 208 will be released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation during the coming year, commencing September 1, aside from the short subjects. The distribution of these pictures will be handled under the supervision of Walter E. Greene, managing director in charge of this department.

The new distribution plan calls for the pictures to be circulated on the star series has in which the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has found very successful during the season now drawing to a close. However, this system will be enlarged upon and improved to such an extent, it is declared, that every exhibitor in the United States will be able to show Artcraft and Paramount pictures without regard to size or location of his theater. The distributing facilities of the Famous Players-Lasky organization have been enlarged in keeping with its increased producing arrangements, so that this company will be able to take care of double the amount of exhibitors it is now serving.

The demands of the public for better productions requiring increased expenditures, it is pointed out, are being anticipated by this big organization, and with full appreciation of the necessity to keep down to a minimum the cost of the films to the exhibitor, plans are being made to increase the circulation of the product so that the multiplicity of theaters served will absorb the rising cost of productions. By this increased circulation of films the distributors will be able to obtain a return that will warrant a steady improvement in even their own standard of quality, at the same time keeping the price within the means of all exhibitors.

"In our usual course of progress we have found it necessary to increase our output, and in the list of the new season's releases may be found box office attractions which we are confident will prove second to none in the field and of a variety sufficiently broad to suit the various tastes in all parts of the country," said Mr. Greene, in speaking of the distribution for the coming year.

"With the increased product exhibitors desiring the best pictures will have an opportunity to make the Famous Players-Lasky product the foundation of their year's program." This policy of broad circulation of Artcraft and Paramount pictures, it is pointed out by Mr. Greene, comes at a time when they are at the height of their popularity, due to the high quality of these pictures and the drawing power of the stars as well as the tremendous national advertising and publicity campaign which has been conducted during the past year in behalf of this product.

The future advertising and exploitation plans, it is promised, include even a wider scope than those heretofore employed and will be conducted in a manner that will give exhibitors an opportunity to tie up with the drive, thus deriving direct results therefrom.

"Our plans for the coming season," said Mr. Greene, "are the most gigantic ever conceived in the history of the business and reflect the confidence of this company in the stability of the motion picture industry as well as our faith in the motion picture exhibitors of the country. Every exhibitor who thoroughly knows the field will appreciate the importance to him of this undertaking, as it particularly gives him the choice of affiliating himself with an organization that will protect him from the changing exigencies of war times and will insure him under all conditions an adequate and dependable supply of motion pictures that will meet the critical demands of the public."

"Our service to the exhibitors will increase in proportion to the increased quality of our product and our plans for distributing same. We pledge ourselves to give every aid within our power to assist our customers in their effort effectively to present our product to the public."

"Progress-Advance, our exhibitors' weekly, will be made of greater service. Special care will be devoted to the preparation of accessories which will include on each production the widest possible assortment."

"Service is the keynote of all success, and it will be our desire to render service in this direction during the coming year that will be active in keeping with the general progress of the industry."

"Above all we have very keen appreciation of the good will of the entire trade, and it will be our particular aim at all times to seek the good will of all exhibitors of America."

Buxbaum With Famous Players

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has engaged H. H. Buxbaum to fill the important position of Special Representative to Exchanges in connection with the work of the distribution department. Mr. Buxbaum has been associated with film distribution for the past four years and is well known in this branch of the industry.

With the General Film Company, four years ago, he started his motion picture activities and was later promoted to the position of controlling business manager at the New York headquarters. After three years with that concern he left to become special representative for Pathé in its distribution department. Prior to his connection with the motion picture business Mr. Buxbaum performed some notable work with the Harriman Bank, one of his ideas being the use of armored motor cars for collections and the delivery of currency, safeguarding the clients of the bank who hitherto had used their own messengers.

Shortly after his engagement by the Famous Players-Lasky organization Mr. Buxbaum left for the Cleveland exchange of that company, where he will begin his activities in behalf of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures. Mr. Buxbaum is the third special representative recently appointed by Famous Players-Lasky to enhance the co-operation between the home office in New York and its exchanges throughout the country and to assist exchange men in solving problems with which they are confronted daily. The two other special representatives are J. W. Allen, formerly manager of the San Francisco branch, and C. Lang Cobb, formerly at the New York headquarters in charge of short subjects.

ELECTRICAL WIZARDS TO SEE "A DOG'S LIFE."

Through the courtesy of the First National Exchange of New York Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" will be the feature amusement event of the annual meeting of the executives of the General Electric Company, which takes place the week of July 1 at Camp Edison, Association Island, Thousand Islands, New York.

SHERRY TO MAKE AN ANNOUNCEMENT.

Owing to lack of time before going to press, it was impossible for us to include in this week's paper the initial advertising announcement of William L. Sherry, which will be made in our July 13 issue.
Hayakawa Names First Two Productions
Japanese Player Will Be Starred in "His Birthright" and "The Temple of Dusk."

WITH two productions announced, a large staff of salesmen in the field and studio operations in Los Angeles, running at top notch, the making and marketing of the Haworth Pictures Corporation’s series of special productions starring Sessue Hayakawa are well under way. The distribution of the pictures is to be handled out of the exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation. The first two productions on the schedule are "His Birthright" and "The Temple of Dusk." The initial productions will be available for pre-rental on September 1. These first productions were selected by Hayakawa and his directors, William Walthington and James Young, who will alternate in directing his productions, after a thorough consideration of the plays and playsmen that might appeal to the dramatic material. The plays chosen were finally decided upon as being the most effective vehicles for Hayakawa’s talents and containing dramatic elements that will appeal most strongly to the public taste at the present time.

Sessue Hayakawa.

Sessue Hayakawa, admitted by foremost dramatic critics as the greatest Japanese exponent of dramatic art, was born in Tokio in 1889. Upon completion of his education in the schools of the Mikado, he came to the United States and continued his training in the different plays and upon a thorough study of Shakespeare and the translated works of the master into Japanese. Later he returned to Japan, where he formed a company and produced the works of Shakespeare, scoring a remarkable success in the role of “Othello.” When he returned to the United States he brought with him his own company—the Imperial Dramatic Company—which appeared on the Pacific Coast, and made a decided impression on critics and public alike. He was immediately imported to enter the silent drama, and joined the Ince forces. After a year with that company he accepted an offer from the Jesse Lasky company, remaining with it for three years.

Hayakawa first appeared on the screen in “The Typhoon,” which was followed by “The Wrath of the Gods,” and was immediately acclaimed as one of the greatest minces in dramatic roles since the inception of the silent drama. In “The Cheat,” in which he appeared with Fannie Ward, he achieved a triumph, the critics and public uniting in the verdict that it was a remarkable piece of dramatic work. This production confirmed their opinion that he was without doubt one of the most distinguished actors of the day. In March of this year Hayakawa formed his own producing company under the name of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, and completed arrangements with President James M. Sheldon, of Mutual Film Corporation, for the release of his productions. The actor has some very definite ideas on the production of photodrama, and will incorporate these in his productions with the same artistic thoroughness he has given to his individual dramatic work.

Hayakawa a Disciple of Danjuro.

“In these first productions and others which are to follow,” he said a few days ago while discussing his work, “I am happy to say I will have splendid opportunity for the display of my native stageappeal and, I am sure, makes the most profound impression upon the audience—the repressive, natural kind, devoid of gesticulation and heroics. Danjuro, idol of the Japanese stage, was this sort of an actor. My aim is to be like him, and if I succeed I shall feel that I have not labored in vain before the camera.” Immediately upon the formation of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, after the first production had been decided upon, Hayakawa sent several of his company to Japan, among them Kamatsu Ori, Murumi Ojato and Unjo Tamara, to film scenes for the initial production. They have just returned, bringing with them about four thousand feet of film taken in Tokio and Yokahama and in the wonderfully beautiful Mt. Fujiyama region.

Marion Sais will be Hayakawa’s leading woman in “His Birthright.” Miss Sais gave up a contract covering a period of eight months, during which she was to play the principal role in a series of productions of the Mutual Film Corporation, the Hayakawa company. Tsuru Aoki, wife of the star, has an important role in this production. During the past four years she has appeared in a number of photodramas in which her husband has starred.

Mary Anderson is the ingenue of the company. Howard Davies, who has an important role, was a vaudeville actor before entering filmland. “His Birthright” is being produced under the direction of William Walthington. “The Temple of Dusk” will be under the direction of James Young.

Gail Kane to Have Her Own Company
The First of Her Productions, Which Will Be Released Through Mutual, Is “Love’s Law.”

GAIL KANE is to appear in a series of feature productions, which are to be produced by her own company. This announcement is made by the star simultaneously with an announcement from James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, of the organization of a new producing company—Gail Kane Productions. Miss Kane’s first picture goes into work at New York studios this week. The story chosen is under the working title of “Love’s Law.” It is an original scenario by Joseph Franklin Polan, a picture author with a long list of important successes in producing activity. More and more the tendency is toward individual, specialized production rather than quantity production by large organizations handling a large number of people.

“This is of importance to the exhibitor in that the specialized one-star company can be expected to support that star to the utmost of her box office value. Productions so made can also be expected to bear more of the individuality of the star than pictures made under the usual conditions. The one-star company tends to give the star a control of the artistic aspects of the product to a degree comparable with the hold which the author or the painter has on his work. It will be of interest also to the scenario writers, authors and agents that there is an attractive market for vehicles, specially adapted to Miss Kane’s requirements.”

Sherry Names Exchange Managers
A Dozen Offices All Set for the First Releases, Announced for June 30.

To Make Educational Child Picture

World Film Purchases Scenario from Mrs. Backus, an Authority on Juvenile Training.

THAT the motion picture industry is fast becoming a favorite with educational authorities is demonstrated when the army undertook, through the screen, to instruct several medical units in France how to treat wounds and the care of patients along new lines.

Children's education in astronomy is now taught in many institutes with the aid of the motion picture. The elementary schools are about to do the same thing, and evidently it will not be far off when the millions of boys and girls in the country are taught their three "R's" with pictures and stories.

World Pictures has predicted this change, and with the purpose in view has purchased from Mrs. Bertha A. Backus, of Providence, the scenario, "The Quest of the Latchstring," which will be used expressly as a lead for the little World star—Madge Evans.

Although children are the main factors in this production, it is a story suitable for adults seeking refined entertainment and is also educating for the youngster. Mrs. Backus has made a specialty of educating children for seven years, and has taught in the Willimantic school, Willimantic, Conn., which she describes as the "picture school," and at the State Normal School, New Britain, Conn.

Mrs. Backus lectures to various teachers' institutes and instructs them how to conduct the model class.

Petrova Moved by Negroes' Singing

After Getting Pledges for $23,000 in Savings Stamps She Attends Services at Colored Church.

Atlanta, June 23.

ME. OLGA PETROVA, whose appeals at the Forsyth theater yesterday won pledges from her hearers to buy $23,000 worth of Saving stamps, today realized a childhood dream when she heard an audience of southern negroes sing their own melodies for her. When she came to address the negroes after listening to their crooning melodies she was so touched that she wept.

Mme. Petrova was introduced to the negroes by W. Woods Site, Sam C. Dobbs and Harry Herance, prominent Atlantians, as a woman who had come from a country that had for a century felt the oppression of war. Mme. Petrova sat through it looking up into the upturned faces of many who, not so long ago, were slaves. They sang for her a famous negro folk song, "Down by the Riverside," and when the star arose she spoke with earnestness and inspired appeal.

At the Forsyth yesterday Mme. Petrova was greeted by tremendous audiences and the expenses that of any other city she has yet visited on her tour.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of June 23 at New York's Principal Motion Picture Houses.

THE STRAND.—"Her Final Reckoning," a Paramount picture starring Pauline Lord, was the main attraction at the Strand theater the week of June 23. Jules Claretie, the famous French dramatist, is the author of the stage play that furnished the plot of the picture. The production is very artistic. The sixth installment of the Outing-Chester sceneries, "Smiling" Billy Parsons in "Daad's Knockout," and the Topical Review completed the screen program. Cora Tracy was the soloist.

"Tempered Steel," the fourth special production starring Mme. Petrova, and written by George Middleton, was the star feature at the Rialto. Jane Novak, Melbourne MacDowell and Robert McKim are in the cast. Scenes on the streets of Mexico City, a comedy and a Western, and Animated Magazine were also shown. Mlle. Madeleine D'Espiony and Sascha Fidelman were the soloists.

THE RIVOLI.—"Flying with the Marins," a sensational picture, with four top aviators, headed the bill of pictorial and musical numbers. The other features were O. Henry's "Sisters of the Golden Circle," the second number of Marty McHale's "Who's Who in Baseball," and the Animated Pictorial, Tulle Lindlah, Lieut. B. C. Hiliam and Julia Beverly were the musical stars.

MONTAGUE LOVE ENTERS SAILORS.

On Wednesday, June 19, Dorothy Green, the screen player, arranged to have a number of vaudeville artists go to Ellis Island, in New York Harbor, where a large number of sailors of the navy are at present quartered, and give a performance. The crowd gathered round the Battery and a perfect picture, and the whole occasion was presented by the Montague Love, a star of the World Film Company, who related a number of amusing stories.

The entertainment, which was managed by W. T. Granlund, publicity director of the Marcus Loew theaters, and Al Piantodosi, the composer of popular music, was greatly enjoyed by the audience, composed almost entirely of "Jack Tars," and every act brought forth applause.

GARSON LEASES GRIFFITH STUDIOS.

Harry Garson, manager of Clara Kimball Young, has just completed arrangements with D. W. Griffith, whereby Miss Young will produce her productions in the Griffith studios, Hollywood. Upon completing her next picture, "Cheating Cheaters," here in New York, immediately upon her arrival in July from the West, Miss Young will return with its retinue to "Ain't a thing on it," and "The Unpardonable Sin," by Rupert Hughes, here in New York. She will start work on the production July 1.

THEDA BARA REPORTED ILL IN LOS ANGELES.

Word just received by the Fox Film Corporation is that Theda Bara is ill at her home in Los Angeles. Although the illness is in no way serious, it is said Miss Bara is under the care of a physician. A telegram stated that Miss Bara's illness would not hamper her work on a play which she is producing, "The Message of the Lillies."
Canadians Disagree as to Policy

Conditions Vary Widely in Different Provinces—Toronto Working Under Full Steam and Montreal Wants to Close for Summer

A feature of the present summer situation in moving picture circles of the Dominion of Canada is the diversity of action among exhibitors of various cities. The attitude of the theater men of Montreal, for instance, is in contrast with the mood of the exhibitors of Toronto. The exhibitors of Winnipeg seem to be following still another line of action. In Vancouver the exhibitors are more or less isolated with their views, while conditions in New Brunswick are quite unsettled because of the recent enactment of a provincial law providing for an amusement war tax.

The decision of most Montreal theater managers is to close up shop for the summer, while in Toronto every exhibitor is working full steam ahead and does not even talk of closing for any period. Probably more than a dozen large and small picture theaters of Montreal were closed temporarily or permanently during a period of two weeks. How many more will follow suit remains to be seen. In Toronto several small theaters have been reopened, and one theater, to seat 1,000 persons, is being built. Two downtown houses on one street have just been redecorated for the summer season. Quite a number of Toronto houses are also giving special matinees regularly for children and others.

Several more theaters, in the central section, have reached the early morning.

In Winnipeg the Provincial Exhibitors’ Association has issued a printed appeal for more patronage in order, it is declared, to maintain a high standard of shows. A few weeks ago, and on account of the raise they raised their evening admission prices from 20 cents to 25 cents. One or two small houses in Winnipeg have been closed, but at least one theater has been reopened after being closed.

In Vancouver the exhibitors recently took joint action to make an important change in policy. They had been paying the provincial war tax for seven months, but the tax has now been increased to such a point that it was necessary to call upon the patrons of the theaters to pay their own tax. Slightly higher admission prices have also been the rule in Vancouver.

Regular Houses Unaffected by Converted Theaters.

Another development in various cities has been the conversion of various dramatic and vaudeville theaters into moving picture houses for indefinite periods. The Grand Opera House, Toronto, for instance, has been presenting pictures for two months, and this fact has apparently not affected the admission at regular patrons.

In Montreal several dramatic and vaudeville theaters have been used for the presentation of picture productions. These have been His Majesty’s, Princess and Orpheum theaters. The success among Montreal theaters has been Loew’s theater, it is declared.

Both Toronto and Montreal have had about eighty moving picture theaters, although Montreal has a population of some eighty thousand more than Toronto. Yet Montreal has not seen it fit to close down a theater, while in Toronto there is not one house that is not kept open.

Among the decisions to make an important change was the closing of theaters or leases. In many cities one or more theaters have changed hands during the past few months, and there always seems to be a buyer whenever a theater is on the market. Montreal has not many theaters, while in Toronto, on the other hand, there is a movement on the part of two or three large exchange companies to acquire theaters.

Canadian Embargo Hits Theater Publicity

Order in Council Bars Importation of Photographic Matter. Officials Refuse to Pass Posters and Other Advertising.

Following the passage of an order in council at Ottawa, providing an embargo on the importation of photographic matter, fruit, high-priced automobiles and other articles, the Canadian customs department refused to pass posters, printed pictures and other advertising matter accompanying provincially produced pictures when being brought into Canada from the United States. Just how the customs officials could class lithographs and printed stills as photographs is difficult to see, but this is what was done.

The Exchange Managers’ Association at Toronto immediately got busy in the matter. It was declared that the exchanges and exhibitors could get along better without the posters than with them.

No decision has yet been made by the government.

Manitoba Association Appeals to Public

Printed Declaration Asks for Better Backeting of Picture Show as a Necessary Industry.

The Provincial Exhibitors’ Association of Manitoba has made an appeal to Winnipeg citizens for increased patronage because local moving picture theaters are facing a serious crisis, it is declared. The support of the public is required, it is asserted, in order to maintain the present high standard of moving picture entertainment.

In the printed appeal, which has been widely distributed, the exhibitors tell of the manner in which the theaters have been inclined to view the theaters as a luxury rather than a necessity. The declaration is made that the future existence of a number of picture theaters depends on a great amount upon the public’s taking an active effort to supply a high-class product at a slight increase over the old rates. Unless the response continues—yet, unless it increases—there is no doubt but that certain moving picture theaters in this city will close their doors, either all or part of the time.

The comments of several representative exhibitors are also published. Manager Davis shows where current affairs instinct a change in the tax on reels.

Canada Decides to Alter Tax on Reels

Proposed Flat Rate of 15 Cents a Reel a Day as Used Not Fair to Small Theaters.

Intimation has been received by the Moving Picture Exhibitors’ Protective Association of Ontario that the government has decided to increase the tax on reels. The new tax is to be a flat rate of 15 cents a reel a day as used, and it is declared that this change in the tax on reels will be a serious blow to the Ontario association.

Considerable correspondence has passed between representatives of the association and the government, and the object was obtained, it is declared, without the necessity of sending a delegation to Ottawa from Ontario.

Announcement has been made by the Ontario association that a new secretary and organizer for the organization has been appointed. The man chosen is a Mr. Scott, of the Bryant Press, Limited, Toronto. At a recent general conference of the association in Toronto M. R. Nutting, a former publisher of Montreal, was named for the office.

President Baille, with other officers, is trying to instill more cooperative enthusiasm into the exhibitors of Ontario outside of Toronto. Mr. Baille has been able to line up many Toronto exhibitors, and has said that he hopes that the outside exhibitors will be able to follow. Not long ago he sent out ninety personal letters to out-town exhibitors, asking for their support, and he received only three replies. The association is busy with several legislative measures, but he finds it difficult to secure the co-operation of many exhibitors.
Kleine Starts Soldiers Letter League

Film Distributor Inaugurates Nationwide Movement to Fortify Morale of America's Fighting Men.

GEORGE KLEINE, who is distributing the big patriotic picture, "The Unbeliever," which is doing so much toward encouraging enlistment in the army and Marine Corps, like every other American citizen has his whole mind and energy devoted toward the success of the war and is bending every effort in the direction of the victory which is proved by the fact that we lead the world in the issue of the Soldiers Letter League, a movement that will interest every man, woman and child in America and be a vast aid in the success of the cause for which our soldiers and sailors are fighting, Mr. Kleine.

"The success of the battle belongs to the army of the greatest morale—the morale of the army depends upon the morale of the nation. The army and navy are but the arms and the nation, the body—the force of the blow that the arms can deliver is wholly dependent upon the strength and will power of the body. To my mind the most important factor in keeping the courage and spirits of our soldiers at the front up to the highest pitch is the letter from home. As a traveler with frequent absences from home I have known what a great stimulus it has been to soldiers to receive daily letters from home and that we are apt to slip by between our letters to the Soldier Boys and create long lapses without realizing it. But they realize it—and there is no despair in the world like the hopeless feeling that your family and friends have for you.

Send Soldiers Cheer and Keep Troubles at Home.

"So I am starting the Soldiers Letter League that no one will have opportunity to forget for a minute—will have the co-operation of every moving picture theater in America. They will all have slides to be thrown on the screen for the morning and evening performance that will arouse the spectator to his duty to write to the Soldiers and to write CHEERFUL letters. The managers will hand out slips of paper that the soldier should have the news that is encouraging and helpful. Every little domestic thing will interest him and news about the kiddies is especially interesting. We should let him know that he is fighting for a concrete purpose and not an abstract principle. He is fighting so that his little brother will not have to do it over again. He is fighting for the protection of his mother and sister, and he is fighting for the country he loves—for the cause of justice and freedom. They are the cause of God—so they cannot and will not lose.

"I shall also have the co-operation of every minister, priest and rabbi in the country for the Soldiers Letter League. Every time their congregations are assembled they will be pledged to ask the members if they have written their letters to the boys and urge them not to overlook it—to look upon the matter as a sacred family duty.

"Requests will be forwarded to every lodge and society in existence here to make the Soldiers Letter League a part and parcel of their minutes and regular routine with the special request that they send lodge or society letters to the members of their organizations who are at the front.

"Every theater program on the most important page will bear the message of the Soldiers Letter League and I think that soon every newspaper in the land will carry the line 'write to your soldier boy to-day—cheer him and encourage him' at the head of the editorial column. In fact no amount of travel can deaden the success of the movement. The letter to the soldier will do more toward a quick and final victory than even the bullh or sword.

Mustbaum Memorial Is Dedicated

Many Leading Men in the Business Go to Eaglesville to Honor the Memory of the Beloved V. M. Memorial Building on the grounds of the Eaglesville Sanatorium.

MEN prominent in motion picture and theatrical circles of Philadelphia, New York and other cities journeyed to Eaglesville, near Norristown, Sunday, June 23, to participate in exercises attendant upon the presentation and dedication of the Stanley V. Mustbaum Memorial Building on the grounds of the Eaglesville Sanatorium.

This building, a much needed addition to this home for persons of both sexes, was erected and will be presented to the sanatorium by the many friends of the late Stanley V. Mustbaum, the necessary arrangements having been made by the following Gentlemen: Mr. V. M. as chairman; Abe L. Einstein, secretary; Abe Sabolsky, John McGuirk, Frank W. Buhrer, Charles Segal, Louis Sablosky and C. J. Cunningham, The Rev. Dr. Leon H. Emalah, one of the most widely known rabbis in Philadelphia, offered the opening address and the address of presentation of the building was made by Judge Patterson, of the Common Pleas Court of Philadelphia County, Chairman Lawrence D. Beggs, on behalf of the memorial committee, turned the building over to the board of officers of the sanatorium, and on their behalf Louis Gerstley received it.

Universal to Continue War News Service

Company Announces That Its Two Releases Will Continue to Present Army and Navy Subjects as Before.

CORRECTING the impression which has prevailed in some quarters to the effect that official war films are to be issued through only one releasing organization, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is emphatic in declaring that both the Universal Current Events and the Universal Animated Weekly will continue regularly to present the latest official war pictures.

Universal exchanges have been delegated with inquiries requesting confirmation of these reports. The managers of these exchanges took the matter up with the home office, with the result that the following wire was sent to every one of the branches everywhere:

"Any statement that Universal Current Events and Universal Animated Weekly would not contain war news absolutely untrue and represents unfair competition. You can positively assure all exhibitors using both releases that we will continue to set the pace in issuance and presentation of war subjects."

As proof of the statement contained in this wire, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal organization, declares that according to arrangements effected by his company and the Committee on Public Information, Universal is assured of a regular weekly supply of war film.

Wolbert to Produce Bluebirds.

William Wolbert, pioneer director and previous to the era of films a stage actor of note, has been engaged by the Bluebird producer, Harvey Monroe Salisbury. The new production will be a French-Canadian story, "That Devil Baptesse," written by Bess Meredith.

Wolbert comes to the Bluebird studios after three years with Vitagraph.

Five Cent Houses Passing in Poland

Oregon Picture Man Ascribes This Healthy Sign to Many Contributing Factors.

ALL indications are that five-cent theaters in Portland, Oregon, will soon go big. The reason is that persons who have patronized the nickel shows are being lifted among those who like to pay 20 cents for photoplay amusement, and the business men who liked to consider a few reels while resting are too busy to seek this diversion.

G. T. Holtzclaw, Circle theater, the big first class five-cent family theater, has come to this conclusion and is positively making up his mind to meet the situation soon. A dearth of appropriate short subjects is another drawback to the five-cent theater at this time. Mr. Holtzclaw says his evening business is down, and that business upon which all five-cent theaters must depend are no longer the rule in Portland.

The Portland Amusement Company, controlling nickel houses in the workingmen's part of the city, is also noting the difference in the matinee business. War time conditions, leaving few persons with leisure hours, is the cause. The Circle will undoubtedly go to 10 and 15 cents, with the longer feature show as its policy.

To Distribute Official Films Abroad

PUBLIC INFORMATION COMMITTEE SENDS MESSRS. HOAGLAND, WHEELER AND VAN ARSDALE TO EUROPE.

Move of much import to the moving picture industry has just been made by the Committee on Public Information. Three representatives of the division of films are sailing for the other side to establish in Allied and neutral countries a distribution system for United States Official Films. There are H. C. Hoagland, Lucian C. Wheeler and Charles F. Van Arsdale. The headquarters will be established in Paris, under the direction of Mr. Hoagland. From that point operations will be directed. A branch will be opened immediately in London, with Mr. Wheeler in charge, and the intention is to establish offices as rapidly as conditions will permit in Spain, Portugal, Italy, Holland and Switzerland.

It will be the purpose of the foreign offices to distribute in these countries all films released by the division of films in the United States, and thus for the first time acquaint the peoples there with what America is doing to help win the war and to give them besides an accurate idea of the attitude of this country toward Germany and the war.

The foreign work will also include the co-ordination of the United States Signal Corps abroad with the activities of the division of films here. General Pershing will provide films from the front, showing what is transpiring from day to day, in cooperation with the Paris office. The films so secured will be shown in the foreign countries above referred to as well as in the United States.

The three representatives are eminently qualified to fill the posts to which they have been appointed.

Mr. Hoagland was for several months general manager of the Selig company and before that and later was connected with Pathe. He came from Pathe to the division of films.

Mr. Wheeler was for fourteen years in the Secret Service, acting as personal attendant to Presidents Roosevelt and Taft and President Wilson. Three years ago he became an employee of the Selig company and came from that office to the present appointment.

Mr. Van Arsdale was for a number of years with Pathe as assistant to George Fitzmaurice, Astra director.

War Changes England's Film Viewpoint

Fox Representative Says Diminishing of Stage Attractions Has Contributed to Creating of New Screen Clientele.

J. FRANK SHEA, European representative of the Fox Film Corporation, arrived home last week, after a trip filled with thrilling adventures. In England, says Mr. Shea, the motion picture had been on a par with all classes, the wealthier and more cultured people professing to believe that the films were unworthy of their patronage. The war, however, has changed this. Most of the popular actors of the legitimate stage are now in service, so that the spoken drama's attraction has dwindled.

The result is that the people have had to go to the films for entertainment. Once inside the motion picture theater many who scoffed at films have become converted and are now confirmed patrons of the cinema.

More than all the books written, and better than all the diplomats that this country has sent to the Court of St. James, the motion picture has revealed to the British the manners and customs of Americans, so that today the Britisher is getting a clearer idea of what sort of people we are.

The year just ended, Mr. Shea reported, has been the most successful in the history of the films in England, despite the war, air raids and high prices. The year to come, he believes, will be even more prosperous.

As an indication of the change in the British people's regard for films generally, Mr. Shea cited the fact that the British Government has at last seen the possibility of the motion picture as a means of arousing patriotism among the people and is now issuing propaganda films.

While the air raids on London have resulted in a curtailment of night amusement hours to the period of from 7 o'clock to 10, the motion picture theaters are crowded nightly. The programs, he said, are usually from nine to twelve reels long, being made up of a feature film, a comedy, a two-reeler and a news picture.

WORLD SIGNS SCENARIO EXPERT AS READER.

World Pictures has just signed as first reader in the scenario department Miss Rosalie Ashton, who comes to the World with exceptionally valuable experience in scenario writing and in the determination of what constitutes good screen entertainment.

Miss Ashton began writing stories-for the screen when she was a cub reporter on the New York Times. She joined the Kinemacolor Company in London, appearing in various roles until she felt that she had learned the tricks of the trade.

Returning to America Miss Ashton joined the Lasky company and spent an entire year writing continuously. From there she went to Fox and then became staff writer for Goldwyn. Now she is with the World, where she expects to do the best work of her entire career.

FAMOUS PLAYERS OPENS RECREATION ROOM.

On Monday, June 17, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation opened a recreation room for the 150 women employes of its New York offices at 455 Fifth avenue. The room is situated on the eighth floor of the building and is spacious and attractively furnished. It will be open every day during the noon hour, a portion being set aside as a place where the young women may eat their luncheons, coffee and tea being served at a nominal price.

Through the co-operation of the Scenario Department a library has been established, which will be available to all employes during a stipulated hour in the morning.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

Maurice Tourneur has taken up cudgels against the conventionalities of many veteran screen characters. "If the photoplay is to advance," he declares, "we must throw the whole impossible crew overboard."

Proceeding to Toss 'Em. The Chief Feminine Interest, he explains, "is usually cute, cooing ingenue who skips playfully through beautiful gardens always with nice back-lighting effects, or else she is a poor persecuted heroine working under factory conditions that haven't been known for forty years. She gets smart clothes somehow or other, and is continuously annoyed by a scoundrel foreman."

Exorcising the F. I. "Or else the Feminine Interest is a vampire whose single glance brings every man in his house before her. But the vamp is happily passing. The ingenue star, however, continues to be born between the idiosyncrasy of the bearded-eyed hero and the inexplicable villainy of the heavy. So she turns to a menagerie of dunces, whose animals as goats, ducks, or pigs, which, of course, are to be found in every home in real life."

Harry Carey Will Be Glad. "Then there are the impulsive, generous cowboys who spend their time loitering in front of the sheriff's office or danc ing round with decolleté dance hall girls at the Last Chance Cafe. I have yet to see a cowboy looking after a cow.

"There is the friend the convict who insists upon wearing stripes, although such prison attire has been abolished. Stripes seem to reconcile him to the rigors of prison existence. And he always escapes with absolute ease when the institution itself strikes him."

On With the Execution. "I might go on explaining all the rest of them. There is the screen doctor with his Van Buren's twinkle but kindly Sheriff with his tin badge, the faithful old negro servant, the regenerated wayward boy, the lonesome girl always demanding her rent, the underworld folks, where being a cook is the flower of life, the beautiful heroine with the tatters and perfect coiffure, the school teacher in the mining camp, the cool and calculating gambler, the upright district attorney, the moo shuiners with their regulation feud, and all the rest."

To Expose Their Checkered Past.

We are glad to announce that we will soon start a series of "Unsuspected Biographies." The first of these, reprinted from Paramount-Arcturus Pep, the "inside" house organ of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which is being edited by Julian ("King") Somon. These biographies will contain highlights on people associated with Famous Players-Lasyky organization, and will be illustrated with original cuts as they appeared in Pep.

Some of the biographies were written by Pete Schmid, some by Morrie Ryskind and others by the editors themselves. Each story contains intimate and interesting information about people you may not have known. Next week, in a smile or so to The Rambler's columns.

Canners Can Can What They Can.

Billie Rhodes has just sold her Californian ostrich farm to a firm of meat canners, and thereby hangs a tale-feather. Since ostrich feathers became passe for women, the ostrich farm is almost out of business. The expensive establishment rather for sentimental than business reasons.

Now that ostriches are serving their country in cans instead of in hats, some gastronomic scientist has established that they are nutritious, and canned, is indistinguishable from the choicest turkey meat. There are 1,200 ostriches on the farm, and they and they are being put through the can-

Canny as fast as the facilities will permit. One ag of his nearest state is negotiating with the canning firm for the purpose of buying 10,000 of the 1,000-long-legged birds are available for food purposes. Miss Rhodes, the owner of the farm, is now considering the advisability of engaging permanently in the business of raising ostriches for food instead of feathers.—Mutual Publicity.

"The Boss Reviews the Reviewers."

By reading the reviews of the shows Monday night, you will notice a peculiar rainning that will not be easily broken. Many critics know what happened out of the ordinary in the vaudeville theaters of New York on Monday night. A Variety reviewer never gives his fellow critic any credit for intelligence, which likely leaves through the other's writing for the other's stuff. So, when it rains, or it snows, or it's very hot, or there's a snowstorm, a Liberty man goes on, each Variety man says he knew of it.

Frivolity Follows War Work.
Viola Dana has begun work on a new Metro play called "The Flower of the Dusk." She spent her short vacation, which was spent between National Council scenes of "Opportunity," and the commencing of "The Flower of the Dusk," in doing all the things that she had planned to do while at work at the studio. This included dancing in the afternoon, shopping, riding in the car, and so on to match.

She had determined for once in her life to see just how frivolous she could be. She had determined that between productions was given entirely to the Red Cross drive, and for her part her spare time was at the service of the Government when the Liberty Bonds were being sold.

Rash Publicist Breaks Out
The little darling who plays in the Baby Marie Osborne pictures has been made the recipient of a new name. They are called off with a new name. Ielasco thought it sounded "high-brow" and made him change. Harry is going in for the Holland form of Van rather than the Hunnish Von.

Blaming It on the Poor Workout!

Edna Goodrich, main star of the speaking and picture stages, is wearing wooden shoes. Miss Goodrich has more than 500 pairs of shoes, but she is wearing preference with clog soles just the same, because why? Well, Edna is a patriot with a big J, as she has the tiniest feet in the screen horoscope.

For years the Goodrich feet have been alphabeted for shoe manufacturers. The star's name has been carried on half a dozen well known brands of shoes. Now you can buy a Goodrich stock company under an order that wooden shoes be substituted for leather. You're going to hear Edna in clogs, with a view to economizing on leather.

What could be more to the point than to have Miss Goodrich set a 29th century fashion in clogs? At least six manufacturers have already furnished Miss Goodrich with wooden soled shoes—Terry Hansey.

Anna Q. Nilsson is receiving the sympathy of all Metro's stars and equipment men. She met the other day with quite a painful accident. It happened on the boat, the Lillian Gish, in the California sky and it was hotter than the future abiding place of the Kaiser. Between scenes Miss Nilsson sustained a bad case of seasickness.

She sat down, but almost instantly wished she hadn't. She jumped up, registration on the boat.

Her cries of pain brought Franklyn Farnum and Director Will Davis running to her. She could be in no way injured, however, but she is receiving such aid as they could render. But she gave them a piece of her mind for not telling her that what she thought was nice, soft grass was in reality creeping cactus—Metro Publicity.

No Wonder Anna Felt Hurt!

Some Serious Stout Suggestions.
Men dressed up as cowboys riding on horseback near the theater are always at liberty to address questions to me, but riding to the Academy and have the management exercise the horses of the academy in front of the theater on Sunday mornings while this exercising is going on would be bound to call attention to your theater.

You Can't Become a Director.
Will S. Davis, who is directing Anna Q. Nilsson and Franklyn Farnum in "Judgment," returned to Metro's studios in Hollywood last night on his return from location. He was in a bad mood.

"It's terrible," he exclaimed to the guardian of the studio gates. "First they spring the daylight saving scheme, and this afternoon the sun got dimmer and duller until by four o'clock there wasn't enough light for shooting."

"Why," said the gateeman, "didn't you see the eclipse?"

"No," replied Davis, "we were out on a new location and I'm a stranger around here anyway."

More About the new Ramble.

Supplemental to last week's report on the PulIsades and Shore Road:

During the winter there has been construction of a new bridge over the Thousand path house at Hazard Landing, about a mile above Edgewater. At present, on Saturday and Sundays, the only way to get from the foot of West 181st street, but the Interstate Park Commission expects to have running, by July Fourth, a ferry-boat drawn from the Dykman street fleet, and lying between Hazard Landing and West 175th street regularly.

Nature is at her loveliest just now. The rain has washed the earth clean, and the willows of verdant branches that grow from thickly-clustered trees that come right down to the river are in their prime at the Hudson. If you would forsyx across from West 129th street to Edgewater, walk up the River road and climb the start of Fort Lee hill until you have passed the school and Firehouse. Just across the way a little further on stands a cottage, painted blue, and besides this there is a still more charming cottage.

There are so few people participating in the bounty of nature spread, free for those who would indulge in the few who can. But every day the fact grows apparent that Manhattan, that one is inclined to believe New Yorkers are pitiably unkied to themselves facing the River path and its delights.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Here's Metro's Cast for "Our Mrs. McChesney"

PLAYERS of prominence on stage and screen have been chosen to surround Miss Barrymore. Among these is Miss McChesney, which has been adapted for her use by Luther A. Reed from the Edna Ferber stories as dramatized by Miss Ferber and George V. Hobart. At least two members of the screen play also supported Miss Barrymore when she presented the stage production at the Empire theater, New York.

Huntley Gordon has been chosen for the important part of T. A. Buck, Jr., playing opposite the star. Emma McChesney (Miss Barrymore) is the traveling saleswoman, and later the secretary of the "Phoebe Snow Petticoat" company, and T. A. Buck, Jr., the junior member of the firm, is later the owner. Lucille Lee Stewart, another prominent member of the cast, has the feminine role second in importance to that of the star, Vera, the "chorus lady."

A favorite Metro player, Rice Allen, will have the amusing role of Henrietta Stitch. Rice Allen has been identified with more Metro successes than almost any other player. The versatile actor, John Daley, has been cast as the part of Joel Fromkin, representing the "Fromkin Form-Fitting Skirt," represented by Emma McChesney.

Wilfred Lytell, brother of Bert Lytell, the Metro star, has been engaged for the leading role of Jack McChesney, Emma McChesney's son. William H. St. James is the "Fat Ed Myers" of the production. The part of France has been cast by all who have seen the stage play or read the stories. Mr. St. James was the production leader of the role in Miss Barrymore's dramatic company.

Walter Pekelis, known favorably in every branch of the theatrical profession, has been engaged for the part of "Beauvy Blair." Bert Lytell, a Baltimore girl who has recently entered screen acting, has an interesting role.

Big Top All Ready for Fred Stone.

Preparatory to the advent in the Western film colony of the redoubtable Fred Stone, comedian extraordinary and athlete supreme, who is to make pictures for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, a big circus top is going up across the lot, where will go a bun with a red hair and the canvas men, the stake drivers, all are busy. And soon there will be the performer in spangled tights, clowns with plastered faces, horses—tambourine and pink and lemonade, peanut butchers, and ticket seller—but the circus will not be open to the public.

Donald Crisp will direct Fred Stone, and he is as busy as a bee preparing for his distinguished star. Nat Deverich is assisting, and Henry Kotani, the Oriental camera expert, is getting his lenses polished.

Rhea Mitchell in Lytell Support.

Rhea Mitchell will play opposite Bert Lytell in the Metro star's "Boston's Blackie's Little Pat." Miss Mitchell, who as a screen star in her own right has gained a large following, is cast for the leading feminine role in the Lytell production, that of Mary, business partner of "Boston Blackie," gentleman, scholar and master creak.

Griffith Talks of the Making of "The Great Love"

"I never really knew the full meaning of the word 'graciousness' until I went to England and began to produce my picture-plays over there. I was in a rather delicate position. The personages with whom I was working had kindly offered me their services as actors and actresses in my story; they were giving me their most valuable time simply as a courtesy. But a more willing and obliging assembly I have never had."

David Wark Griffith was speaking in a breathless pause during the assembling of his forthcoming Artcraft release, "The Great Love," and explaining a remark he had dropped but a few moments before concerning courtesy.

Mr. Griffith will soon offer "The Great Love" to the public as the first of a series of special productions following "Hearts of the World."

It was in return for producing "Hearts of the World" as a propaganda film for the British Government that the foremost personages of the empire offered to appear in one of the master director's photo-plays, and in addition to such popular photoplayers as Lillian Gish, Henry Walthall, Robert Harron, George Fawcett he has Queen Alexandria, Elizabeth Asquith, Lady Diana Manners, Countess Macerine, Mrs. Montagu, Lady Laver, Katherine Stuart-Wortley, and a number of others.

"The title of my picture, 'The Great Love,' may mean many things," said Mr. Griffith. "It may mean the love of country, and again it may mean the love of individuals. I am not going to tell you whether or not it is either or both," he smiled, "but I hope to show the remarkable transition of the butterfly life of British society to that of stern, sincere, hard workers in the great cause of winning the war."

"I was permitted to photograph practically anywhere I wished. I remember one place. It was at a beautiful country place that at one time was one of the favorite spots of King Edward VII. In the back of an arbor was a tree planted there by the Emperor of Germany while on a visit long before the war. The tree still stands and blossoms, but the tablet which commemorates the occasion of the planting has been buried deep in the ground at its roots."

"Queen Alexandria was gracious enough to come down to Lady Diana Manners' hospital which she conducts on her own estate and devoted nearly an entire day in arranging the hospital scenes and appearing in them herself. The Queen is greatly interested in the cinema, and showed a familiarity with a number of photoplays, and when they visited "inertial," the first time they had been to the theater in two years, she and the King sent for me to come to their box."

"I went to London a total stranger to those who appeared in 'The Great Love.' It was a thrill to me that I could do some good toward letting the world know war conditions and what England and France were doing toward winning it. These ladies and gentlemen who appear in 'The Great Love' agreed with me, and, although they are directing and supervising the affairs of the empire, they gladly took the time to assist in the making of the picture. It was an honor paid the photodrama which could not be equalized."

"Ghost of Rancho" Soon.

Pathé announces for release this summer the new Bryant Washburn romantic comedy, "The Ghost of the Rancho." This is an interesting comedy drama of the Southwest with Rhea Mitchell in the cast.
Artcraft Releases Three Big Subjects in July

THREE Artcraft big features representing a wide diversity of subjects are announced for release in July. They are William S. Hart in "Shark Monroe" on July 8; "We Can't Have Everything," a Cecil B. De Mille production, also July 8, and Elsie Ferguson in "The Danger Mark" on July 29.

In "Shark Monroe," which Mr. Hart, himself, directed, the player enacts a role which differs radically from any in which he has previously appeared. It is predicted that those who have seen him so often in his Western portrayals will marvel at his new characterization, for as "Shark Monroe," he is the master of a scaling schooner. Katherine MacDonald appears for the first time as Stuart's leading lady.

Cecil B. De Mille's special production of Rupert Hughes' "We Can't Have Everything," scheduled for the same week, is especially noteworthy for its cast, in which Kathryn Williams, Elliott Dexter, Wanda Hawley, Theodore Roberts, and Sylvia Breanner are featured players. Other artists who will be seen in the production are Thurestone Hall, Raymond Hatton, Tully Marshall, James Nell, Ernest Joy, Billy Elmer, Charles Oguz, and Sylvia Ashton. The story of a wild man viewing the fables of worldly people with a cynical and philosophical eye.

The final Artcraft offering of the month is "The Danger Mark," an Elsie Ferguson vehicle. The screen version of the popular Robert W. Chambers novel is the work of Charles Macague, and Hugh Ford directed the production.

Kleine Issuing 'Unchastened Woman.'

The George Kleine offices have in charge the distribution of the new Italo De Lass production, "The Unchastened Woman," for all territory outside of Greater New York. "The Unchastened Woman" is made from the successful play of the same name by Dr. Louis Anspacher, and in its translation to the screen loses none of the delightful qualities that made it the enormous success it was on the speaking stage. Grace Valentine is the star, and she is supported by a number of clever artists.

Los Angeles Strong for Lyons-Moran Comedies

ALTHOUGH the Lyons-Moran Star comedies are popular the country over, nowhere are they more popular than at Los Angeles, the country's hub of motion picture making activities. According to advice received from Dave Hershon, manager of the Universal Film Exchange, Inc., in the City of Angels, three comedies featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran were headlined at an army Broadway house last week. One of these theaters was Grauman's.

"Some of the film people are under the impression that you can bank the stage town exhibitors with pictures of poor quality," declared the Universal exchange manager. "They may be speaking from their own experiences, but I do not know that you can't put anything over on Los Angeles fans".

"Composed to a large extent of professionals, they are too well versed in pictures to be fooled. To go over well in this city a picture must possess more than ordinary quality. The fact that three theaters decided to make the Lyons-Moran Star comedies a regular feature of their bills speaks highly for these pictures."

Metro to Stir Up Things for "To Hell with the Kaiser"

A WHIRLWIND campaign of advertising and publicity, record-breaking in its scope and thoroughness, has been launched throughout the country by Metro to put over Screen Classics, Inc.'s super-feature, "To Hell with the Kaiser." Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, regards this latest Screen Classics, Inc. feature as the greatest of the series, and has instructed each Metro Exchange to get square behind it to give the exhibitor every possible aid in his publicity work.

Among the many ideas contrived by Metro to advertise this subject is one in which the telephone plays an important part. Each exchange has been instructed to close all its telephone conversations with, "Well, to Hell With the Kaiser." Instead of the conventional "Good-bye," The originality and novelty of the idea as well as the fact that it is probably the most inexpensive, simple and effective form of advertising ever devised has made a great appeal and is rapidly spreading. This is evidenced in the fact that business letters are being closed in this fashion and social business talks are invariably terminated with the title of Screen Classics, Inc.'s newest super-feature.

Another novel stunt which is getting the title of the picture before the groom is a lapel pin reading "To Hell With the Kaiser." Several million of these will be distributed. Paper stickers with the title are also being scattered broadcast. In addition to these catch-phrases for similar advertising and also for use in programs and house organs have been devised. A large, striking and effective series of smashing display advertisements have been got up which will be supplied exhibitors. The paper on the production is equally striking and artistic. One six-sheet show a giant octopus with the head of the Kaiser, spreading its tenticles around the helpless women and children, being particularly out of the ordinary.

Prominent Players Cast in "The Glorious Adventure"

SCREEN players of prominence are in the cast which supports Mae Marsh in her latest Goldwyn production, "The Glorious Adventure," adapted from Edith Hartman Delano's popular story, "When Carey Came to Town," and to be released July 14.

The new Mae Marsh picture marks the first appearance in Goldwyn pictures of Wyndham Standing, long prominent as leading man. Standing was a prime stage favorite before his entry into motion picture work and, though only three years in the film field, has been a factor in the success of large screen productions.

Again is Alec B. Francis, the veteran film favorite, to be seen in support of Miss Marsh. Though Francis has the role of Scott, the butler, his work is important. Mabel Ballin, long identified with Goldwyn pictures, has an important role, too.

A part, requiring a talent of a high order is entrusted to Sara Alexander, an actress remembered for her splendid work in support of Lydia Thompson, John T. Haymond and Kylee Bellew, after a successful six-year engagement in stock at Salt Lake City. Paul Stanton has the role of Bob Williamson, chum of Hiram Ward, played by Mr. Standing. Stanton is well known for his juvenile characterizations in Broadway stage productions. Others prominent in the cast of "The Glorious Adventure" are Gladys Wilson, Irene Blackwell and V. Vorhees Nood.

Hobart Henley is the director.

Drumier Has Strong Role In World Film's "Heridity"

Jack Drumier, an accomplished actor, has been engaged by World Pictures for the important role of Edgars in a production of "Heridity," directed by W. P. S. Earle and starring June Elvidge. Mr. Drumier has had an interesting career. At the age of twenty-one, after being graduated from the University of Pennsylvania, he began the practice of law in his native city, Philadelphia. After three years of considerable success he went on the stage. In addition to filling stock roles as a leading man in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Buffalo, Syracuse, Montreal and Toronto he starred while with the Biograph were Caleb Plummer in "The Cricket on the Hearth," Pagani in "The Blind Violinist," in the Beast of Broadway stories and numerous other pictures.

West Is Not In It with East, Says Louise Huff

"The thing that has impressed me most in coming from California to New York, says Louise Huff, as the new world star, whose first World Picture, "Tother Dear Charmer," is now being filmed, "is the immense energy. California may have the climate, but New York has the get up and get it!"

Miss Huff went on to compare east and west conditions as relating to a film star more carefully. "I have spent a great deal of time in California," continued Miss Huff, "and I thought conditions were splendid there, but it always annoyed me to be forced to spend so much money on living expenses and to waste so much time in securing clothes. In California a film star is considered a nobody unless she has an expensive bungalow and a flock of servants. Here I live in a hotel more comfortably and delightfully and also more economically.

"On the other hand I was forced to make an exhaustive trip to San Francisco to secure the clothes I wanted, or to go to New York or Chicago for them, and then be disappointed in them when they arrived. Here I am in the fashion center of the United States. I can get anything I want and exactly what I want, when I want it. The situation is ideal in this respect and in so many others that I am willing to do without the famed California climate for the pleasure of being here where everything is done with so much enthusiasm and refreshing energy."

Porto Rico Officers See "The Kaiser"

Jewel's production, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," has enlisted for the duration of the war. Taking effect immediately, the production will be utilized by the military authorities of Porto Rico for the purpose of creating the proper "hate-up" toward Germany and all things German in the hearts of the students attending the Second Officers' Training Camp.

This use of the Jewel Film's patriotic patriotic patriotic production was arranged by a letter to Alex Goldman, manager of the Universal office at San Juan, which controls the distribution of the production in that possession. The letter was signed by Lieut.-Col. Orval F. Townsend, commanding officer of the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry.

July Will Be Unusually Heavy Month for Pathe

THERE will be no midsummer desultory eclipse with the house of Pathe in July. Four big features will be released.

On July 1, "More Trouble," with Frank Keenan, is the bright spot on the program. The big hit registered by "More Trouble" when it had an advance showing for a week at the Rivoli in New York has created interest among exhibitors.

July 21 provides for the release of a new Baby Marie Osborne picture, "Cupid by Proxy." On July 25 comes "The First Law," a Gilson Willets play with Irene Castle and Antonio Moreno as co-stars. The "First Law" is by all odds the best picture play in which Mrs. Castle has appeared.

Four good comedies are scheduled for release in July. On the 7th Harold Lloyd in "An Ozard Romance," the 14th, Toto in "Fire! the Cook!" the 21st, Harold Lloyd in "Kicking the Germ Out of Germany," and on the 24th, Toto in "Beach Nuts.

July will see the windup of Pathe's biggest serial success, "The House of Hate." The eighteenth, nineteenth and twentieth episodes will be released in the month. Four Post Travel Series Pictures, Nos. 4, 5, 6 and 7, and the last four episodes of "Britain's Bulwarks" will also go in the July program.

The seven-reel special, "Moral Suicide," and the big new "Ailes' Official War Review," will be released each week. "The Ailes' Official War Review," issued by the Committee on Public Information, will be released on Mondays.

Ambitious plans have been made by Pathe for the release of "The First Law," in which Irene Castle and Antonio Moreno appear. It is one of the best Astra-made stories in some time.

"The First Law" is scheduled for release in July. Gilson Willets, who is now a member of the Pathe scenario staff in New York, wrote "The First Law," which was very widely read in book form.

"Joan of the Woods" (World).

"Joan of the Woods" is the title of the World Pictures release on July 22, the story being written by Louise Yale and the picture being directed by Travers Vale. June Elvidge is starred in this new World Production in the role of Joan and she is supported by George McQuarrie in the role of Judge Wentworth, John Bowers in the role of Norman Dicks, and a notable cast.
H. K. Lucas Ranks High Among Simplex Distributors

HARRY K. LUCAS, general manager of the Lucas Theater Supply Company, 155 Marietta street, Atlanta, who later became manager of the Lucas Simplex projection machine, Mr. Lucas later purchased the record by dispatching two carloads of Simplex projectors in twenty-six days. This achievement is the outgrowth of the expansion of the business and the adherence to a well-defined sales policy.

Mr. Lucas, whom F. H. Richardson, the projection expert, designated as a "high voltage wire of the live sort," on a visit to Philadelphia several years ago, owns one of the most complete supply houses in the country, not excepting to New York.

Although the Lucas company operates in ten states, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Missis-issippi, Tennessee, Louisiana, Southern Virginia and Texas, no road salesman are employed, nor is the firm dependent on agents for its sales or the office. Everything is conducted by mail from its headquarters in the New York city office, which has possible the inauguration of a sales plan worked out in detail.

Mr. Lucas is a believer in printer's ink, and lots of it, to obtain the best results. He dips deeply into it on all occasions. It is nothing for him to have struck off to the engraver a dozen or more proofs of a single envelope insert at one time, and never prints less than three thousand of anything that seems well worth while having printed at all.

One of Mr. Lucas' principal means of keeping in touch with customers, old and new alike, is a bi-monthly departmental magazine, which is merely a four-page pamphlet, but like the organs in up-to-date picture theaters, it meets the interest. The name is "The Coskiki," and according to the announcement on the cover it is "published in the interest of the people." It contains a column of news for the period, but it comes out once a month and contains timely hints on all material needed by the theater. In every number appears a signed editorial by Mr. Lucas on whatever topic is uppermost in the minds of theater men at the time.

Strong on Correspondence Novelties.

Mr. Lucas is always bringing out something of interest in the way of envelope inserts. Now it will pertain to his Haku oil, or to the "Big Six," or to an announcement reminding theater managers of his repair depart- ment. All these notices are made distinctively of half-tone cuts, and terse phrasing. For instance, take the matter of carbons. The manager on opening his mail some morning is greeted with the following: "Have you been stung? Hundred. Have. Then let the same bee sting you twice." In the upper left-hand corner is an illustration of a bee, with a long workmanlike sting and an expansion of tense earnestness, showing that the bee has had his mind on his work. With the attention of the bee buyers, "Bee" Mr. Lucas then goes on to show in a few words the point how one can save money by using carbons.

Mr. Lucas has found the means to pre- vent this "order is Heaven's first law." Betty Blythe in Coming O. Henry.

Betty Blythe, whose rise has been one of the interesting developments in the past few months, saw the first showing, and is the secondary dramatic feature of the "Big Six," with a ready-made market already established. The film, "An Unlucky Number," is the second offering of the "Big Six," and is a delightful comedy-drama picture in which a young and attractive girl, with unexpected twists brings about a novel ending.

Following this release will be "The Company of Carlo Pell," a Will C. Nijus, featuring Patricia Palmer and Robert Harrns.

This strict observance of system carried out in the minutest detail has eliminated unnecessary delay in repair work and has facilitated the dispatching of orders. Mr. Lucas, recently, his slogan, "We have a monopoly of promptness," means something to all who see it. By featuring promptness in his business Mr. Lucas has found that promptness, on the basis of one good turn deserves another, has featured him as a progressive supply dealer.

The Lucas company owns a stock of mov- iewine parts and accessories. As an in- stance of this, there are never less than one hundred sets on hand. The Lucas Theater Supply Company occupies two floors, thirty by one hundred feet, at 155 Marietta street. On the second floor is a display room, a private projec- tion room and the repair department. Upstairs is a short picture room, additional display space and the office.

Projection Room is a Model.

The Lucas simplex degreaser special mention, as it has become an institution in Atlanta film circles. It was constructed for them by the Lucas company. There is in the demonstration of pictures for out- of-town exhibitors. The room seats forty persons comfortably and has stage, booth. The booth is 6 feet deep by 12 wide.

Ten years ago Mr. Lucas became asso- ciated with a firm in San Francisco as manager of the Opera House at American. On January 1, he moved to the Dreamland theater at Columbia and has been in the business for six months. In 1909 he was manager of the Liberty theater in Savannah. He then went to Dubuque, Iowa, where he remained for nine months, and in 1910 he went back south and established the National Film Exchange in Jacksonville. A year later he moved to Charlotte, N. C., and in 1912 came to Atlanta, where he opened the United American Film Company, with offices in the Brown-Raphael Building. Some time ago he opened the West Street theater, a place where in a short time his business grew so rapidly that he found it necessary to desert his small room and build a new one. Then he went to his present location at Mar- etta street, leasing the entire building and forming the Lucas Theater Supply Company, capitalized at $25,000.

Exhibitors Show Interest in Fox's Big Six Reissues

FOLLOWING the announcement that William Fox will release "The Big Six" for the fall and winter seasons as "The Clemenceau Case," "The Two Orphans," "The Plunderer," "The Bondman," "The Soldier's Oath," and "The Man Behind theought," several theaters have written for information from exhibitors. It is announced from the office of the Fox Film Corporation that new prints of the houses, when those pictures were first shown with the theaters of today. It is claimed that the success which those pictures had in their original form there were thousands of pictures in every city in the country who did not see them because of the small size of the theaters when they were first shown. Not only that, but the poor print the audio- runs had terminated before the produc- tions exhausted their drawing capacity.

Another thing exhibitors stress in writ- ting to the Fox corporation is that when the pictures were first shown they had no special attraction to the theaters, from whose stage every "Big Six" had made traditions in the motion picture industry—which by the way, is so strong that no matter what traditions and standards are not plentiful.

Theda Bara, who is now among the more popular films of the season, first sprang into fame by starring in her three of the "Big Six"—"A Pool There Was," "Victor Vatheufanereau Case," and "The Two Orphans."

In "The Plunderer," "The Bondman," and "The Soldier's Oath," Theda Bara laid the foundations for the sterling screen reputation which he now has.

The United States entered the war to drive an ambulance. After arriving there he wrote his father that he was trying to qualify for one of the aviation corps for which he was eligible to take a more prominent part in the war. He had an unusual group of mechanical knowledge and became a pilot in record time.

Like his father, the young man was identified with Metro Pictures Corporation as a star and director of feature produc- tions before his departure for the front. He had been extensively popular with his players and very successful in his profession. He was twenty-seven years old.

Webster Seeking Author of Scenario He Says Is Big

THE Harry McTeer Webster Produc- tions, Inc., desires to make known that if the author or owner of an unnamed photoplay in which the leading male and female characters are desig- nated as "The Ag—ile" and the "Miss—", will communicate with Harry McTeer Webster, 501 Brokaw Building, New York City, he will hear of some- thing to his advantage.

After putting together Richard Field Car- roll's six-reel feature, "Reclaimied," and intrusting the sales management to Chess- ter Beccof, Mr. Webster and the author of "Reclaimied" got busy putting the finishing touches on a multiple feature to succeed it.

In spite of the fact that their new play is one of big theme and novel treatment, the appeal of the unknown script "with- out a parent" is said to be so strong and so vital that the director stands ready to sidetrack his own efforts and start work on it immediately if he can acquire the rights. Mr. Webster proclaims it the American play the public has been waiting for.

In connection with "Reclaimed," Chester Beccof asserts he has had numerous offers for the world rights and expects to close a deal in the near future.
Paramount Names Seven Productions for July Issue

The schedule of Paramount releases for the seven feature productions, one for each of the five weeks of the month, with one additional for the weeks of the 8th and the 15th. The stars in the order of their presentation are Dorothy Dalton, Jack Pickford, Charles Ray, Sasae Hayakawa, Margaret Clark, Enid Bennett, and Wallace Reid. For the exception of Miss Clark's vehicle, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which was made in the East, all are West Coast productions, three coming from the Thomas H. Ince studio, and three from the Famous Players-Lasky.

The picture released July 1 is "The Kaiser's Shadow," a story by Octave Roy Cohen and J. U. Glery, which deals with the War in America. The same day marks the release of the film which Jack Pickford makes his last screen appearance, at least for some time to come, for "Sandy" was the last picture the young star made before enlisting in the navy. In "Sandy," Louise Huff is again featured with the star.

"The City of Dim Faces," a story of life in the Chinese quarter of San Francisco by Waldemar Klay, is the next vehicle for July 15. A number of tragic moments in the play are said to give the Japanese star opportunities to display his remarkable dramatic talent. The story of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in which Marguerite Clark makes her appearance in the double role of Little Eva and Topsy on the 15th could not be omitted from the program. Sufficient is it to say the production, which was directed by J. SCarle Dawley, is entirely worthy as a picturization of Mrs. Stowe's immortal novel.

Enid Bennett will be presented by Thomas H. Ince on July 22 in "The Vamp," a story by C. Gardner Sullivan. In the play Miss Bennett "vamps" for patriotic purposes and thereby accomplishes a German spy's undoing.

"Less Than Kin," the release of the 29th Century Fox Pictures Wallace Field in a romance of a Central American revolution, with the star playing the part of a ne'er-do-well.

Three coming from the Famous Players-Lasky are from the novel by Alice Duer Miller.

Current Events No. 58

Contains Some Big Stuff

Photoplay patrons will view with intense interest the ceremonies shown in Universal Current Events No. 58, filmed on the eve of the Blue Devils' return to France. Among the prominent officials who bid these valiant fighters farewell were Secretary of War Baker, Jules Jusserand, Ambassador of France, and members of the diplomatic corps.

The special ceremonies got a warm response from the American Legion and an enormous gathering watched the event.

Of unusual interest, in view of all that has been said and written concerning the production of airplanes for our birdmen, are the scenes showing the processes which enter into the manufacture of flying machines. The photoplay pictures a plant in which the spruce forest is utilized for the lumber which is obtained.

Current Events No. 58 also contains exceedingly timely views of the graduation exercises at West Point, where the famous Military Academy graduates obtained their commissions a full year ahead of time. One of the Universal cameramen succeeded in obtaining some striking views of the Secretary of War while he was delivering his address.

Unusual Exploitation for "Hands Up" Planned by Pathe

HANDS UP!, Pathe's serial of romance and adventure in the great West, produced by Astra, with Ruth Roland, George Cheeseman, and a big cast, will be backed by a nation-wide billboard show and big publicity campaign.

This story of dramatic situations characterized by sweeping panoramas of the western country, big settings such as are new to serials, and a large number of people. The story was written by Gilson Willots, the well known novelist, and the production is being made at the Astra West Coast studios under the direction of James W. Horne.

The novelization will be published in the Motion Picture Magazine, beginning with the September issue, out August 1. The preceding issue of Motion Picture Classic will carry an interview with Ruth Roland in which this coming story is announced, and the serial will be played up as a big feature.

Picture Play Magazine will carry an article by Gilson Willots on how he writes serials, and the other "fan" publications, such as Photoplay Magazine, Photoplay-Lyceum, as well as similar, will publish articles and photographs with regard to this serial.

The hollywood campaign has been carefully planned to take advantages of the fact that summer is the best time for outdoor advertising.

The twenty-four-sheet is a remarkable piece of work characterized by splendid pictorial value, attention-compelling poses and striking colors. This twenty-four-sheet will be posted throughout the country in all important cities, and in addition to this will be given to exhibitors in the form of a special number for a period of one month.

The list of advertising matters to be issued on this serial also includes many other posters.

Rivoli Theater Features Two-Far O. Henry Story

Division of prestige of prominence with S. L. Rothafel's Marines pictures on the program of the Rivoli theater for the week of June 23 is "Sisters of the Golden Circle," the current General Film O. Henry release. This two-reel subject enjoys the unusual distinction of being the only dramatic subject to be shown at the Rivoli during "novelty week" at the newest Rothafel motion picture palace. The O. Henry story was selected from a wide variety of short length pictures offered for the Rivoli program, which consists for the week only of short subjects. It was given feature prominence in the advertising matter issued by the Rivoli.

"Sisters of the Golden Circle" is an O. Henry story of New York life featuring Edward Earle, Agnes Ayres, and Alice Terry, and has been pronounced by critics to be one of the most artistic and attractive of the O. Henry series filmed to date. General Film reports that it is in heavy demand all over the country, and that it bids fair to excel all booking records established by the more successful of the sixty O. Henry stories released since last year.

Cleo Ayres to Play in World Picture.

Cleo Ayres, who was last seen on the screen in the support of Dorothy Dalton in "Love Letters," has now entered her first eastern production to be in the picture "Montana Love," in the "They That Hath." a forthcoming World Picture. Miss Ayres was also with Vita- graphs some months ago. "To Him That Hath" is a picturization of the famous novel by Leroy Scott.
Contents of Allies War Review Tells Its Own Story

THE first issue of the Allies' official war review, the Pathe July 1, contains a remarkable series of exclusive-up-to-the-minute pictures of unlimited patriotic appeal to the public and box-office power for the exhibitor. The new Allied propagandist film, which has been booked for release June 24, advertising matter has gone forward, and a big publicity campaign such as has never before been given to a film system in recent months is in full swing. The advertising force of the Division of Films, which has been built up at Pathe London, has been given an immediate and intensive message to the nation, as has also the experienced selling and publicity organization of Pathe. The credit for this new system goes to William Fox, its founder. The first show is on the Allied office in New York, with a few select press passes. Its last fiction show was at Pathe London, and it is expected that this will be a great success. The last motion picture show was October 1, and it is expected that this will be a great success. The last motion picture show was October 1, and it is expected that this will be a great success.

Two Extravaganzas Ready

For Fall Release by Fox

Two extravaganzas, which it is said, introduce something new in motion pictures, have been completed by William Fox. It is announced from the Fox offices, and it is understood they will be ready for release during Thanksgiving week. Although extravaganzas have been shown on the stage for years, they have not yet been shown in the films. The home, and with its greater resources for spectacular effects, offers a splendid field for this sort of work. Of the two productions, it is said, several novel and striking effects will be seen.

Pathe Prepares New White Serial

Pathe's serial activities continue at high speed. It is announced that the company will present the first in a series by George B. Seltz and I. B. H. Millhouser, the working title of which is "The Lightning Raider." Mr. Seltz is remembered as the author of "The Iron Claw" and the director of "The Fatal Ring" and "The House of Hate." Mr. Millhouser is the scenario writer of "The Fatal Ring" and "The House of Hate," each of which has proved in its turn the biggest Pearl White serial success. The story of "The Lightning Raider," it is said, will be characterized by four major points which make it a new type of serial.

"The Lion's Claws" Drawing to Close

With the story coming to a close, a action, and thrill is aptly contained in the latest episodes of "The Lion's Claws," the Universal serial featuring Marie Walcamp. In the thirteenth episode, the Universal serial star is attacked by an enraged lioness, rescued from the clutches of an orang outang and leads an exciting life is general. In order to create a new adventure Miss Walcamp has been compelled to risk her life as frequently or more frequently as many stunts are required in "The Lion's Claws."

World to Make "The Millionaire Chance"

Guthrie Tellus, the great writer of economic subjects, once that the greatest fortunes of nations and men seem to be due to the mere chance of the "Millionaire Chance." This quotation has been grasped and molded into a gripping drama that is one of the most popular of the day. World Pictures announces that it has bought the scenario of "The Millionaire Chance." The writer agreed with the great economist, hence the story. Carlyle Blackwell has been selected to play the leading role in this picture.

In "Cheating Cheaters" Miss Young Has Stage Success

With the acquisition of the screen rights to "Cheating Cheaters" by Charles Kimball Young has added another to the long list of notable stage successes that are presented by him upon the screen. Miss Young is in this manner giving to both exhibitors and public the benefit of her happy success on the stage. The selection of "Cheating Cheaters" Miss Young has rounded out her list by the addition of a drama of the very latest school—of the "surprise" type. "Cheating Cheaters," It will be remembered, is one of those plays which, according to a crook, is played at its best by an able director and highly entertaining lines. The play was given its stage production by Al Woolworth, and its producer which included Margorie Rameau and other Broadway favorites. The play is scheduled for early release by Miss Young, and will be announced later in the fall.

Constance Talmadge Is Back in Eastern Home

AFTER a successful period of picture-making in California Constance Talmadge has turned her face to the east and has made her home. Constance Talmadge's young star is expected in New York with a few select press passes. When Constance Talmadge went west last November she had made three of the most popular series of Select Pictures, in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, and only the first of the three Select productions could be shown in the west. Miss Talmadge returns however, after having completed her entire series of pictures, eight in all, seven out of the eight having already been shown on the screens of the country. The Talmadge Select productions have been hitherto unknown on the screen. This is a new picture, and its box-office appearances are frequent, but which is nevertheless interlarded with humor from end to end.

Constance Talmadge is now so well abreast of the schedules of releases for her Select Pictures that she has been given a brief halt in which to visit her home town, which is little old New York.

"Les Misérables" Set for August

Announcement from the Broadway's Select Pictures Company is that "Les Misérables," in which William Farren scored a big success when the picture was shown in the Lyric theater, New York, will be released to exhibitors on August 12. "Les Misérables," it is declared in the announcement, will be a special release and will be sold to exhibitors on an independent basis. Announcement of this subject, which was probably the greatest picture that William Farren ever did, caused considerable attention and discussion. The William Farren picture to be released was "True Blue," which was offered to exhibitors on an independent basis.

It is understood that a special campaign is being organized for the release of "Les Misérables," by which means the strong advertising that the picture already has obtained as a result of its showings in big cities.

The Moving Picture World

July 6, 1918
"Dad's Knockout" Is

"Smiling Bill's" Latest

NOTHING is left undone—no expense is spared—to make a Capitol Comedy the superior of any two-reel motion picture production. "Smiling Bill" Parsons, the millionaire screen comedian, sees to that. Settings that would do credit to big special features are the hall in Capitol Comedies, released by Goldwyn.

When a producer decides to make a property for the world he assembles top producers by erecting one of the most luxurious offices in California for the production of his two-reelers. And the Parsons way of doing business on a lavish scale is reflected in his Capitol Comedies.

Particularly is this noticeable in "Dad's Knockout," released last week from the scene at Bill's home to the merry incident in a theater, where many of the scenes were taken, gorgeous settings greet the eye. For the production Parsons rented one of the largest theaters in Los Angeles for four days.

To lend realism to several of the scenes on the set, he hired the entire theater and the curtain after he had combed the theatrical colony on the coast for thirty young girls to take part in the dancing, which is among the high points in "Dad's Knockout." Besides, he hired 200 extras as an audience. Among them were several high-class players to lend comedy touches to the theater scenes.

Perhaps the costliest scene in the production is the incident in a Los Angeles restaurant. Here Parsons and his company made merriest and during their rehearsal the entire furniture is shattered, of course the furnishings that are ruined are all studio "props."

Pathe Names Nine Post Travels.

In a Post Travel Series, a weekly release by Pathe, the traveler follows a trip to the romantic West Indies, will go to Trinidad, a country rarely visited by Americans.

The list of these pictures now announced are: "St. Thomas," "St. Croix," "Guadeloupe," "Dominica," "Our Virgin Islands," "East Indians of Trinidad," "East Indians of Quina," "Venezuela," and "La Guaira to Caracas."

It will be remembered that the Post Travels series is released under the auspices of the big daily newspapers which print concurrently articles written by Clyde E. Elliott.

Two Screens Involved in This Mutt-Jeff-Bara Comedy

A REAL life personage and cartoon characters meet and act together on the screen in the Mutt and Jeff animated cartoon, "Meeting Theda Bara," which is announced from the William Fox offices as one of the latest of Bud Fisher's creations.

The picture is described as one of the funniest this comedy pair have yet appeared in. Jeff inherits a fortune and Mutt decides that they are going to become motion picture producers. Their aim is to secure the services of a star. This ambition is inspired after Mutt and Jeff see Miss Bara in a picture. Jeff's admiration for Miss Bara is so strong that he is in a hurry to serve notice on Mutt that any "vamping" for the Mutt and Jeff Motion Picture company will be uncalled for. Jeff launches and informs his diminutive friend that a contract holds Miss Bara to produce certain pictures for their production. The pair then go about obtaining a vampire in a scientific way.

It doesn't take Mutt long to convince Jeff that it's the eyes that make the vampire. However, to his chagrin, that he was only partly right. Jeff makes up his mind that he will drop all other lines and stick to acting a star. He picks out the stage door of a moving picture theater as the logical place to find the famous star. Mutt sees him there and thinks it is a great joke. Later sitting in a glided restaurant, Mutt is still laughing at the idea of Jeff waiting at the stage door of a moving picture theater. However, there are two sides of the story, and Mutt didn't know that Jeff's side of the story was hidden by a screen that surrounded the table next to Mutt. Mutt's curiosity prompts him to peer over the top of the screen. What he saw on the other side caused him a surprise that you will have to see the picture to appreciate.

Other most recent Mutt and Jeff productions are "The Extra Quick Lunch," "Life Savers" and "The 75-Mile Gun." In "The Extra Quick Lunch," the pair open a restaurant in which speed and economy are characteristic. Miss Bara is the hostess and Mutt is the "waiter." Each person is served at the table, and in "The 75-Mile Gun" they capture the German super-gun and Mutt is the "marksmen." With results disastrous to the leaders of Prussian kultur.

Don't wait to be urged to join the W. S. S. army. What if our men in the trenches waited to be urged?

Goldwyn Rounds Out First Year with Strong Quartet

GOLDWYN's next four releases, which will complete the cycle twenty-six begun with "Polly of the Circus" on September 9 of last year, are described as the producers' carefully planned and powerfully fitting group climax to a series of productions which have lead to success in less than a twelve months. Following "The Glorious Adventure," in which Mae Marsh is starred and which is to be seen everywhere beginning July 14, the productions and dates of release are:

The Glorious Adventure," directed by Hobart Henley and completed some time since, was held up to make way for another Mae Marsh production, "All Woman," which has been given unan- imous newspaper and trade press approval everywhere. Goldwyn describes it as "the story of the girl of her happiness for a dollar." Adapted from Edith Evarldo Delano's story, "When Carey Came to Town," it is a thrilling and interesting romance built around the adventures of a girl who invited herself to be a ward in the home of a gruff young bachelor and who eventually made him a happy beneficent by marrying him. Wyndham Standing heads an unusually capable cast.

Mabel Normand is doing something entirely new for her in "Back to the Woods," from an original story by J. Clarkson Miller, directed by George Irving, a newcomer at the Goldwyn studios. In it the star is the progressive daughter of a reactionary old lumber millionaire who tests out her theory of life as teacher of a school in a lumber camp town. There are comedy opportunities, of course, in "Back to the Woods," but there is an absorbing story to carry them along.

After a venture into melodrama in "The Service Star," to be released June 30, Midge Kennedy returns to comedy-drama in "Friend Husband," directed by Clarence G. Badger. It is an amusing story of a girl who marries not for money, but because she doesn't love to gain an inheritance and the things that happen later to make her wish she hadn't and glad she did.

"Money Mad," Mae Marsh's last production in Goldwyn's first releasing year, is perhaps the most dramatic story Miss Marsh has appeared in—certainly as a Goldwyn star. As the heroine it devolves upon her to track down the murderer of a man slain in her own home. How she does it makes a thrillingly melodramatic tale filled with action from beginning to end.

Kellermann Films Ready in Fall.

Annette Kellermann, the William Fox offices announce, has completed the filming of "Queen of the Sea," and the film is now in the hands of the film editor for titling and arrangement.

Although no definite date has been announced for the release of this big marine production, it is understood that it will be offered to exhibitors in the fall when other big productions which the Fox forces are now engaged on will be ready for the public.

The announceent from the Fox offices states that "Queen of the Sea" is even bigger in its scope and conception than "A Daughter of the Gods," which Miss Kellermann also made for Fox. Besides several stupendous sea effects, the production is said to have a number of novel features which are unique in marine pic-against a ring of uncunpelling financial sharps headed by Christopher Beaumont, called the king of finance. When the king's plan to defraud the small stockholders in the enterprise of developing a semi-tropic island in the middle of the ocean fails, the king in khaki can strike the first blow, and the latter, seeing himself about to be outwitted, leaps into the ocean and, boarding the boat, beats Beaumont in their first match.

Harold Lockwood is playing the role of "A King in Khaki" and Stanton Hem is appearing as Christopher Beaumont.

Nazimova Devises Dance

ACTUAL work before the camera has been begun by Mme. Nazimova in her Screen Classics, Inc., production of Henri Kistelmecker's play, "L'Occident," under the direction of Albert Capellani. The opening scene shows the celebrated Russian artist in the fanciful garb of the captured Arabian girl, Hassouna, as she appears in a French circus in nate dances.

In "L'Occident," in accordance with the story, which has been adapted for the screen by Mr. Capellani and June Mathis, Nazimova appears in the role of Hassouna, the dancer of the Veils, which Hassouna has learned in the desert, and then, deliberately, to put the vital facts to certain persons in the audience, she does the weird, symbolic, haunting dance of the Veils. Strictly speaking, this dance is a series of picturesque posturings, invented by Mme. Nazimova herself, as the seriousness of the moment precludes the levity of actual dancing steps.

For these scenes the star wears a costume designed by herself, that is frankly fanciful rather than true Arabian. As she herself expresses it, is is the circus idea of the desert costume. "I hate the tailored draperies of the skirt, closely-bound and tied in a knot," says Mme. Nazimova, "are true Arabian. But the intention has been to convey an idea, rather than to adhere strictly in this instance to authentic costume. The amber beads are Arabian, but the dull green ones are Persian, and the variegated ones—what you will. The Turban is a Turkish Turban. The Bow is simply Oriental in a broad sense. The close-fitting embroidered jacket in indescribable greens and browns is my own idea to complete the whole."

Romantic Comedy Leads

Pathé for July 7th Week

A LIVELY comedy with a strong romantic flavor, "Annexing Bill," with Gladys Hulette in the star role, head the Pathé program to be released July 7. The action of the story is in the Orient, and it is a romance that has a direct appeal to every feminine photoplay patron. It is, "Would you give up a day to make a man that you love?" Gladys Hulette plays the part of an art student in modern circumstances, with a young lawyer who is also poor, but has bright prospects.

Episode No. 18 of "The House of Hate" is also released on this program. This episode is the Pilot's Plot, and it is said to have the strongest finish of any of the episodes to date. In this episode the identity of the murderer is kept in process of revelation when the episode ends. Pearl White and Antonio Moreno having been happy, as a matter of fact, and action never lags. There are two more episodes of "The House of Hate" to come.

The big picture of "A Queen of Khaki," with Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels, Harry Pollard, and the rest of the famous Pathé troupe, is also in the running. "A Queen of Khaki" is a fine moving joke on the old sob style of melodrama and it is said to be very cleverly handeled.

Part 3 of "Britain's Bulwarks" is called "Kiel Dealers," and part 3 of "The Black Arts of War." In the Post Travel Service the subject is "Duffer's Day," which profoundly mirrors the people, scenery, historic points, trade and industry of the fair land on which this remote and lovely island in the West Ends.

Harold Pathe News No. 56 will be released Wednesday, and No. 57 Saturday.

Fisher to Draw War's Lighter Side

The first picture from Bud Fisher, creator of Mutt and Jeff, since his arrival at the front in France, is "The 75-Mile Gun," which relates the capture by Mutt and Jeff Animated of the German super-cannon which has been shellimg Paris. The story, to arrive at an announcement from the Fox offices, will be released shortly.

On a production for France Captain Fisher made an arrangement with the Fox Film Corporation whereby the Fox company would have charge of the business end of marketing his work.

Being at the front, Captain Fisher will deal largely with the war in his pictures, but just as Captain Bruce Haisanfather has made a reputation for extracting humorous details of the German side of the war, so Fisher will deal with the lighter side of the war.

Considerable material has already been received from the artist and is now being printed for the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons.

"Other Men's Daughters" (Fox).

SPIRITED play of the gay side of the foreign war, "Other Men's Daughters," is based on descriptions of the William Fox offices of "Other Men's Daughters," a special feature release in which Peggy Hyland is the star. The production, it is said, given to Miss Hyland and directed by Cedric Gibbons.

"Other Men's Daughters" was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and directed by Carl Harbaugh. Supporting Miss Hyland is a cast which includes Regina Quinn, Eric Mayne, Frank Goldsmith, Elizabeth Garrison, Riley Hatch and Robert Midlemans.

Franklyn Furnum Supports Anna Nilsson in "Judgment."

A N ambitious program production featuring Anna Q. Nilsson, supported by Franklyn Furnum and a notable cast, has been scheduled at Metro's west coast studios. The working title of the picture is "Judgment," and the scenario is by George B. Baker. Anna Nilsson, who plays the role in Franklyn Furnum is to appear in this one picture forthcoming, in a scene with Furnum in the furnum smiling.

Miss Nilsson long ago won renown as a powerful woman of the silent drama. She played opposite Bert Lytell in his first two pictures as a Metropolitan star, and her work was of such high caliber that Mr. Baker seized the first opportunity of featuring her. "Judgment" is the story of a girl with occult power, whose worthless, who is the means of saving the man she loves from pursuing the criminal who is the cause of the crime. A sensational murder trial, with a thrilling and unexpected denouement, is under way in the drama. This is led up to by a series of exciting incidents creating an atmosphere of breathless suspense.

The cast also includes Herbert Standing, Harry S. Northrup, Spalding H isn, Edward Connell, S. T. Todd and Katherine Griffith. The production is directed by John M. St. John with photographs by William C. Thompson.

37 Per Cent of Town See Gerard Film in Three Days

A N excellent idea of the big way in which "My Four Years in Germany" is going over in the smaller towns has come to light in an interesting report filed by P. B. Hirsch, of the Criterion theater, Rutherford, N. J. Mr. Hirsch says that when the picture played in his house for the three days of June 5, 6 and 7, the turnover recorded the following: First day, 746, second day, $586, third day, $562.

The Criterion seats but 650, and the record for all three shows is more remarkable when the facts are taken into consideration that Rutherford is a town of 7,945 population and "My Four Years in Germany" also played against two big features and a legitimate show with local talent.

In these several pictures the manager had to run no comedies in conjunction with the Gerard picture, declaring that it was against the dignity and thrilling appeal of Ambassador Gerard's screen revelations.

"The Kaiser's Shadow"

Is Another Hun Hitter

A GENUINE surprise is promised in the dispensary of "The Kaiser's Shadow," Dorothy Dalton's Paramount picture announced for release July 7. Mystery is the keynote of the production. Moreover, the entire story is said to be ideally suited to the present time spirit of the country, and having to do with the subtle workings of the Hun intelligence bureau in America. Dorothy Dalton is the author of the story, which has been declared to be one of the most sensational expositions of Hun espionage methods. Edward Cecil, Leota Lorraine, Otto Hoffman, and Charles French furnish the support. The script, which is based on a remarkable degree of originality, and a prologue arranged by Mr. Searles of the staff of the Teuton intelligence office.

R. William Neill directed the picture, and John Murnag did the photography.

General Film to Release Pictures of Camp Dix

AFTER several weeks spent in filming various army activities at Camp Dix, near Wrightstown, N. J., Joseph F. Reed, of the Connecticut producing firm, released a series of intimate camp life views which are to be released through General Film Company under the title, "Near Boys at Camp Dix."

The plan of release includes a four-reel production divided into single reel parts, each adapted to separate showing, thus constituting a series for booking one a week. There will be posters and other advertising material.

Besides the general interest in what sort of existence the selective service draftee lead after being taken from the office desk or the work bench, there is expected an added personal interest for relatives, friends, and neighbors of the many thousands young as Nancy Hanks in the Lincoln series. She has also taken leading roles with several other motion picture concerns.

Other important characters are those of Joe Reed, a small-town constable, taken by Wilson Reynolds, who is playing with Marie Calif in the Cort theater, Chicago, in "Just Around the Corner;" Joe the Grouch, the role taken by William Wadsworth, also playing at the Cort; Jack Doray, played by Howard L. Smith, who has been the Juvenile lead with May Robe in "A Bit Old-Fashioned," played at Powers' theater, Chicago, Nutty Brewer, played by Marlow Bowles; Mrs. McGuire, played by Florence Barr; Mary Blount, the sweetheart of the leading player, played by Evelyn Ward; Mrs. Grouse, played by Leona Ball, and Mrs. Ward, played by Frances Raymond.

Other minor characters and those to fill in on the crowd scenes have been engaged from the Chicago theaters.

The entire cast was picked specially to fit each part and not filled in from a stock company. The play will be in six or seven parts. It was originally written for the stage by Fred Ballard.

Sherry Optimistic as to Kenyon and Keeney Pictures

JUNE 30 has been set as the date of the release of the first picture produced by Doris Kenyon and her own company and the first of the Frank A. Keeney pictures, with Catherine Calvert as star. The announcement is made by William L. Sherry, head of the William L. Sherry Service, which is distributing all of the Kenyon and Keeney pictures.

The first production featuring Miss Kenyon is "The Street of Seven Stars," by Mary Roberts Rinehart. It is after her story of the same name published serially in the Saturday Evening Post. Upward of 250,000 copies have been sold in book form. The first of the Kenyon pictures is "A Romance of the Underworld," a screen adaptation of the well known drama of the same name by the late Paul Armstrong. Miss Calvert starred in the play when she was the girl-wife of the playwright.

"I regard myself as especially fortunate in being able to start my new service with such pictures as these," says Mr. Sherry. "Both are full of real human interest and are of high artistic quality. The Kenyon pictures are being directed by John B. O'Brien, and the Keeney pictures by James Kirkwood, two of the most competent men in their line. The only reason why the release of these two pictures has been delayed is that I desired to perfect my distributing organization before placing them on the market. There has been a brisk demand for both pictures, and a wide and extended sale is assured."

The Keeney forces have just begun work on their fourth picture, "The Girl with a Past," by Paul Armstrong. The story is said to be tensely human, with rich dramatic coloring. The part of the heroine affords Miss Calvert an exceptional opportunity for the display of her abilities as an emotional actress and admirably fits her winsome personality. Miss Kenyon and her company are now busy making a second picture, "The Inn of the Blue Moon," by Louis Joseph Vance. The scenario was written expressly for Miss Keeney. The novel rights of the story have been sold to one of the leading American magazines, and it will be published serially after it has been placed on the screen.

Oakdale Announces Six Five-Part Productions

A MONG the most important of General Film Company's product acquisitions is a series of six dramas called the Oakdale productions. These will be released beginning probably July 15.

The distinguishing feature about Oakdale productions is that each of the six pictures has, besides well known adult stars, a juvenile star of recognized personality and strength, according to the General Film announcement. Each of the six stories, furthermore, contains the child element as a powerful factor in developing the story, as well as in bringing to it a lighter domestic touch that is so much in favor with audiences. General Film Company will announce the titles of the pictures and the casts in a forthcoming statement regarding the series.

All the Oakdale productions are five-reel pictures described as consistent throughout as to subject and dramatic treatment.

"Salome" Ranked by William Fox as His Greatest Yet

AFTER six months of unremitting activity at the Hollywood studios of William Fox Pictures Corporation, March Berles, who gained fame as Theda Bara in the title role, has been completed, and is now in the hands of the cutting stage, where she is being cut down for final elisions and titling. The biggest of all film productions ever achieved by the Fox company, and seen in the most dramatic theaters of America with the advent of September, Samuel P. K. Loew, the producer of "Salome," on the booking, and an unprecedented campaign heralding the monster production is currently at the climax of its first tour. "Salome" is declared to mark a new departure for the spectacle picture. Massiveness of effect will not smother dramatic interest. An official of the company says:

"Two elements are responsible for overcoming this common failing of so many productions of the spectacular picture, the story, which has inspired among the greatest of writers of literature and music, is dramatized in the most realistic vestiture provided and it must be at once apparent that here is a production that can stand comparison with the best of the lot."

The statement of the official touches on the outstanding features of a production on a grand scale, and which is historical in style. Mr. Fox is credited with spending $50,000 alone in placing the sets.

Two thousand players were engaged for this super-picture. Eight hundred artisans alone were employed building the city of Jerusalem as it existed 2,000 years before the time of Christ, this being the first instance of such scenic grand scale. Salome's bath of costly marble and jewels in the royal apartments is said to be a triumph of examples of Judean splendor. The peacock fountain in Salome's home, which had been modeled after an old Biblical print, of modern significance in the reproduction of the Temple of Je'su through which repeatedly marched the victorious毕修斯 under command of General Allenby.

The enormous expense involved in staging "Salome" may be gauged from these items. Two hundred horses, 600 sheep, and 200 cattle were engaged to build the streets of Jerusalem, twenty-five tons of papier and as many loads of cobblestone were used. A hundred sculptors and mural decorators were employed at the recurring cost of $10,000 for the fittings from Miss Bara's costumes, which appear to be worth a king's ransom, ten thousand dollars fine being required to clothe the army of performers in multifarious scenes.

Nothing has been overlooked by the technical staff which would contribute to the verisimilitude of the picture. Camels and horses, donkeys, elephants, goats, sheep, lamb, and oxen, cats, dogs, bats, cockatoos, donkeys, peacocks—they are wherever they add realism to the spectacle.

Nature aided J. Gordon Edwards, director of the production, in his expert striving. Barely had the painters and hucksters completed a street scene in Old Jerusalem when a downpour of rain lasting several days occurred. It served to give the tumble-down thoroughfare exactly the weather-worn appearance desired.

Loew Does Good Business with "Cecilia."

Marcus Loew has reported to President Louis B. Mayer that "Cecilia," a Picturegoer Corporation that the showing of Marion Davies' select picture, "Cecilia" of the Loew circuit in the United States in Greater New York, attracted unusually good business to the houses. Mr. Loew himself was well pleased with the results attained with this producction, and box-office attracted the picture had exceeded all expectations. Mr. Loew said.

"Salome" was given a seventy-day run in Loew's houses throughout the greater city. The first day of the run were coincident with the billing of the picture at the Rivoli theater, New York, but another week was consumed before the playing of the picture was complete. Mr. Loew expressed the belief that there had been no diminution in attendance at his theaters on account of the presentation of the same attraction at the big Broadway playhouse during the same period.

"Flower of the Dusk" for Metro.

Director John H. Collins is busy enganging the scenery and costumes for Viola Dana's next vehicle, the screen rights of which base recently been acquired by General Film Corporation. This story is one of the most loved of Myrtle Reed's delightfully humorous novels and is currently being made into stage adaptations of the original stories novels to be picturized by Metro. The scenario was written by Mr. Collins, who also directed "An Affair of the Century" starring H. B. Golden, with John Arnold at the controls.

Especially engaged for Miss Dana's company is Guy Coombs. Another player will be Margaret McWade.

The locale of "Flower of the Dusk," Mexico, Island, China, and the United States, not forgetting one of the most picturesque Western mining camps imaginable, are being mentioned by General Film Company bulletins as contributing to the variety of atmosphere in "Her Moment," the special production being designed, which type of scene is starred. The greater part of the story in enacted in the United States, to which production, for the second attractiveness also made an impression.

The direction of "Her Moment" was in the hands of stage producer J. F. C. for the Author's Playtops. The story is by Samuel H. London, with a dramatic intensity not seen since "Her Brother's Wife" and "Her Moment," which is scheduled for immediate release as a six-part feature.

Great Public Interest In "Crusaders" Poster

A most interesting commentary on the unprecedented interest taken in "Crusaders," produced in New York by the engagement of the Lyric theater of "Pershing's Crusaders," the first feature film, has been brought to light by a statement from Howard Herrick, publicity director of the Division of Public Information, Mr. Herrick states that his office is being swamped with requests, from private individuals seeking copies of the striking one-sheet and window cards of the picture, and "Pershing's Crusaders" is a pictured history of the country's first year at war, and will hold your interest to the last picture, and the strides made by the country's war machinery. Among the scores of interesting facts will be "sir" of "Crusaders is the occupation of a line trench by the khaki-clad defenders of Liberty.

Outing-Chester's "Ex-Cannibal Carnival" Leads Mutua

THE first of the series of Outing-Chester's "Ex-Cannibal Carnival," produced by C. L. Chester in collaboration with the editorial board of Outing magazine, has been released by the Mutual Picture Corporation. The first release is an excellent example of these distinctive travel pictures. It is a journey through the Fiji islands, and shows the natives who only a generation ago were cannibals holding high places in the native hierarchy, and who now are shown as a modern city, with a strange mixture of ancient and modern elements. Numerous and the hybrid costumes of the inhabitants of the Fiji, Prince wearing a silk hat, a dress coat, and high hat are also shown. The snappy titles are no small item, and with the photography should carry the picture.

The second of the series, "Kaleutur," will be released July 7. "Kaleutur" picture in the story of a trip among the exotic wildlife of British Guiana to this famous waterfall, which is five times as high as Niagara. The seventh and eighth series of the party is shown in continuity form. There is real action in the picture, which vividly, vividly, and delight the eye by its beauty.

The Strand comedy of the week is titled "Miss Informed," and is released July 2. It is a characteristic Strand-Mutual full of clean, wholesome humor, and is terrific mess of messes when she attempts to put something over on the police. Nate makes an old sport for dad, and almost loses her own sweetness when he gets him out.

Screen Telegram Nos. 34 and 37 are released July 3 and 7. American soldiers in France will be interested in the showing of "The Entertainment of Commanders and Comrades," an interesting war picture made in attendance at the annual ball game of Congressmen at Washington, D. C.

Farrar Selects Story After Consulting Exhibitors

The visit of King George and Queen Mary to the battlefields of France is shown in a color picture of the "British in Bulwarks" series, giving graphic scenes from all phases of the world war, and released exclusively by Pathé July 3rd. The King visits the Tankodrome and is much concerned about the lads inside. One of the most dramatic episodes of the war was the smashing of the German line at Cambrai by the operation of numerous British tanks which walked through an immense wire entanglement, tearing great holes in the German defense. Nine Productions in Work
For Fox East and West

No fewer than nine productions are in work under the William Fox banner. It is announced from the Fox offices, companies being busy both in the East and on the Pacific Coast.

The Fox West Coast is progressing rapidly on the super-production "The Message of the Lilies," for which new title the studio has reserved the services of William Parnam, also at Hollywood, is busy on "The Rainbow Trail," which is a sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage," just finished by Mr. Parnam. Zane Grey wrote the book, upon which each production is based.

A new name, "The Fallen Angel," has been chosen for "You Can't Get Away With It," the Gouverneur Morris story which Jewel Carmen is making at Hollywood. Gladys Brockwell, also at Hollywood, is working on "Kultur," a drama which is described as an expose of Germany's secret diplomacy. Tom Mix has finished "Faune and Fortune," which is based on Charles Alden Seltzer's story. "Egyptian Vultures," is about to begin on a production reported to be a revelation of certain types of labor troubles on war work are so shocking.

In the East the Fox forces are equally busy. Virginia Pearson, who had just completed "Her Price," for the Fox offices, is working on a production at the Blackton studios in Brooklyn, for which "The Alien Strain" has been issued as a tentative title. Peggy Hyland has begun work at New York, Staten Island, on "Bonnie Annie Laurie" under the direction of Harry Millarre and George Walsh has completed a striking patriotic picture, entitled "Yankee Doodle Dandy." Other productions are under way under the direction of R. A. Walsh and Richard Stanton.

Good Demand for "Italian Battlefront."

The General Film Company, having taken over the distribution of "The Italian Battlefront," the official Italian war pictures, in important territories for the Fort Pitt Theater Company, has found the public very eager. The pictures have given a big boost for business. Prints of this film have been booked for Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Atlanta, and Detroit territories, and the big feature is said to be equaling the initial successes in Providence, Boston, Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago, and St. Louis. "The Italian Battlefront" contains an endless variety of remarkable scenes from that war zone which has contributed the distinctly spectacular activities.

W. E. Shallenberger Announces Offering of One and Two-Reel Pictures, Made By American Film Company for Release One Each Week

W. E. SHALTENBERGER, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has acquired the rights to the J. Warren Kerrigan productions of the American Film Co., and is re-editing and re-releasing the entire series, consisting of thirty-one-reel and ten-two-reel productions.

These releases are being offered to State Rights dealers to be shown weekly, commencing July 8. A complete and new line of advertising matter is being prepared for this series. The Kerrigan series is the pick of over 100 productions made by the American in the past four years.

"It appears," said Doctor Shallenberger, "that there is a dearth of theatrical material on the market, and motion picture houses have sent up a cry for this length of release, and we are developing them, mainly from the work of the Kerrigan studio as a shorthand subject in a longer one.

"I expect to speedily close out the United States and Canada on these Kerrigan issues and will then announce an additional material for the trade on other subjects of like merit."

Gaumont News Reels Show Several Timely Pictures

JUST three days after showing the Gaumont News Reel entitled "middles" at Annapolis the Gaumont Company, in Graphic No. 12, pictures the arrival of 150,000 of the new Ashanti battery, one year ahead of time, of 135 new army officers at the U. S. Military Academy, at West Point. After the issue of the diploma the Secretary of War addressed the new officers.

A subject from one of Uncle Sam's big war plants shows the making of torpedo tubes; others show how army engineers are taught the art of railroad and bridge building, the making of a military road by state convicts, and some of the steps they are taking to let the fact that the war may return any day be known.

Foreign scenes show the fight made by the marines in checking the German drive, reinforcement of the French forces by Italian infantry, a picture of a French village under bombardment, and an airman who has been decorated for brilliant work with the "tanks." Captain Deloche, who was held a prisoner with his tank by the Germans for forty-eight hours, but finally escaped and drove back to safety.

Another subject deals with the growing and preparation of food supplies. The Employment Service, U. S. Department of Labor, utilizes its need for men and women to aid in harvesting the bumper crop raised this year, and one scene shows the masts of the Great Steamer "Soldiers of the Sea," enrolling "Soldiers of the Soil" for this patriotic work.

In this issue of the Gaumont News is shown "Flag Day" being celebrated all over the country; in the national capital the President and Mrs. Wilson attend the exercises at the foot of the Washington monument; ten thousand soldiers assist Mme. Schumann-Heink, the operatic prima donna, in a patriotic concert at the Stanford Stadium in California. Prominent actresses are shown making vests of leather, and the stimulating effect Miss Dorothy Gish had on a recent Thrift Stamp sale. Acland's "Dawn of the Day," is shown. Another scene taken in an altitude of thirty thousand feet is a parade of bathing girls on the Pacific Coast.

Much Interest Aroused
By Leah Baird Serial

A. ALPERSON, general manager of Western Photopays, Inc., announces that the serial which this company has acquired from the star starring Leah Baird is arousing considerable interest among state right buyers. During the past week the following men, well known in this branch of the industry, were among the visitors: Harry Charms of Standard Film Service Co., Detroit; E. H. Hardee of E. & H. Distributing Co., Atlanta; Harry Lady of Quality Film Service, Pittsburgh, and Sidney B. Rust of Washington, D. C.

It is stated that a special showing will be given when the first five episodes are completed.

The line has not yet been selected definitely. It is said that Miss Baird does not agree with the company officials regarding the distribution of the serial, but letters have been written to a number of picture fans in various sections of the country asking their opinions on to which of several titles they consider the most appropriate.

Hutchinson Seriously Injured

A SERIOUS mishap occurred Wednesday day, June 1, on the taking of one scene during the third episode of the Leah Baird serial now in the making at the Creative Studio. Charles Hutchinson, who is playing one of the principal roles, was to make a seventy-foot dive from the window of a house situated on the side of a cliff. That portion of the jump the going out of the window was done inside the studio; for that portion showing the exterior of the window as well as the cliff and water, a trip was made to the Palisades. A set was erected and three cameras located at various points down to the water's edge to catch the sensational jump from every angle.

Unfortunately as Hutchinson hurtled himself through the window the tip of his shoe caught on edge of window sill, causing him to lose his balance, and falling mid-air, and hitting the water partly on his back and side.

Being rendered unconscious he immediately sank. Cameraman H. J. Frommer and a bystander dived to his assistance and pulled him to safety. He was unconscious for about twenty minutes, but recovered on route to the hospital sufficiently to inquire faintly, "Are you the camera had gotten it?"

Unless internal injuries develop he will probably be able to leave the hospital within a week.

Special Trade Showing Of Fourth Petrova Film

FOLLOWING the custom inaugurated with her first special production, a special screening of "Tempered Steel," Madame Petrova's fourth special picture, will be given by the Petrova Picture Company for the motion picture trade press, followed by a luncheon for the assembled guests. Bert Mann, publicity director, will be the master of ceremonies.

"Tempered Steel," written for Madame Petrova by George Middleton, the well known playwright, and directed by Ralph Ince, who also makes the picture, "Patience Sparhawk," "Tempered Steel" is said to be marked by a number of innovations, especially in connection with the sub-titling. In place of the ordinary speeches and descriptive matter, the subtitles has been handled in such a manner as to blend smoothly into the continuity of the story. It is also stated that an effect has been gained that impresses the audience with a sense of smoothness.

This production will be released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Rifkin Secures Specials
For New England States

CONTINUING his policy of adding special productions at frequent intervals to the library of the New England exhibitors by the Eastern Feature Film Company, Herman Rifkin has completed arrangements with the Atlantic Distributing Corporation for the handling of "Nine Tenths of the Law" and "The Devil's Playground."

Both of these productions have attracted a certain amount of publicity because of their advertising possibilities. Mitchell Lewis, star of "The Harrier," "The Bar Sinister" and "The Sign Invisible," is seen in "Nine Tenths of the Law," while "The Devil's Playground" is a spectacular production of Broadway cabaret life in which Vera Michalena appears as the central figure of a drama dealing with the gay white way.

It is announced that the Loew, Moss, Fox and other large circuits have booked these pictures.

New Brady Film Offered To State Right Buyers

WILLIAM A. BRADY'S success, "Stolen Orders," now in its third week of prosperity at the Park theater, New York City, will be sold on a state right basis and exhibition houses soon have the opportunity of playing this timely picture.

So far every week that "Stolen Orders" has been shown at the Park theater it is drawing a new audience and last week was the corresponding week for the showing of "The Whip."

"Stolen Orders" is claimed to have the attributes which will enable exhibitors to make a big clean-up, that is, thrills, love, passion, hate and timeliness.

Lockwood-Allison Films To Be Released by Arrow

A QUIET campaign to ascertain the demand for releases of productions with national prestige has been conducted by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, for the past four weeks. As a result, the Arrow Film Corporation announced that it re-released the Lockwood-Allison features heretofore titled "The Buzzard's Shadow," "The End of the Trail," "The Secret of the Side of the Door," "Life's Blind Alley."

These productions are being re-edited as the laboratories of the American Film Co. under the supervision of Mr. Shallenberger, and a new and original line of advertising material is being issued. In the case of these reissues the productions are sold to retain all of the original prints held by the company; the releases are prepared to make the story more modern and up to the present high standards of feature releases. The new titles have been determined upon, but have not yet been announced. Release dates of Lockwood-Allison is based on one contract—the first production to be released is the middle of July.

"The Hand of Vengeance" Sensational but Clean

THE new Gaumont serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," is said to be not only startling, but also to be absolutely clean, and that returns need feel no compunction about letting their children released "Pershing's Crusaders" has been built to suit that purpose of the theater-going public that likes sensational entertainment, and the hero is a thoroughly "red-blooded" person. After being wronged the hero gets his revenge and then becomes champion of others who have also been wronged, using spectacular and effective methods always. The serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," has been released weekly in two-ree episodes, the entire serial requiring two and a half months to complete. The serial is said to grow better and better with each episode until the sensational climax at the end is reached.

New England Company Takes Griffith Film

by Robert N. Howe, 30 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—Dorothy Gish, who plays one of the moving roles in "Hearts of the World," now at the Majestic theater in this city, was in this city Wednesday, June 19, accompanied by her mother, who also played an important role in the picture. They appeared at the time of the letter some of the experiences on the Western front while "Hearts of the World" was being told to the rights to the Griffith film have been sold to a local organization known as the "Hearts of the World Committee." Those in the deal include Alfred S. Black, of the Maine Theaters, Inc., and president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League; Goldstein Bros., of Springfield, Mass., and M. A. Smith, of Providence, R. I., and William H. O'Neil, who controls the Auditorium and Palace theaters in New Hampshire. The new management is now in control of the production at the Majestic theater.

The Griffith interest sold "Hearts of the World" for New England presentation for only $5,000, a reported fact that has the Pacific Coast territory bought it for $250,000, and the states of Illinois and Pennsylvania sold $15,000 each. The film is to be screened by *Edgar Lon, the Boston press representative, who convinced the Massachusetts State Board of Health that "Hearts of the World" was a picture worthy of Sunday showing, is now general press representative for David W. Griffith with headquarters in New York City.

Olga Petrova Sells Many Stamps.

The appearance of Olga Petrova, the noted film star, in Boston, to enter the War Savings Stamps campaign, was an event of unusual interest. She spoke to over 2,000 people at noon on Boston Common, and in the afternoon and evening addressed two great audiences at the Boston's Scollay Square and the Gordon's Washington Street Olympia. She sold nearly $25,000 worth of war savings stamps during her day's stay in this city. She deplored the popular impression that motion picture actresses enter campaigns to aid the Government with the view of winning popularity themselves. She said nothing could be further from the truth. She declared she would much prefer to rusticate at her own home York, to be reserved and moderate and stared and made at the object of indiscriment remarks as is so often the case when one has learned a lesson. She said she entered the War Savings campaign with the sole aim of aiding the Government, that she was "Olga Petrova and I am an American," she declared with a fine show of spirit.

"Pershing's Crusaders" a Big Hit.

"Pershing's Crusaders" is drawing big at the Shubert theater, Boston. Special nights are being arranged for all suburban theaters with an effort to kill off objectionable sections, with the result that big delegations take up a good part of the house nightly. The patriotic appeal, and the fact that the funds go to the war charities, has popularized the film. The film has been given the special Sunday night privilege, with the result that "Hearts of the World," "Pershing's Crusaders" and "My Four Years in Germany" are now being shown every Sunday night here.

French Officers Visit Path.

Manager Stanley Hand, of the Boston Pathé office, was agreeably surprised when he opened a call from the will be French officers that are booming recruiting in Boston. The Pathé, being a French organization, is very popular in that country, and the officers were anxious to see the working of the American branches of that organization, so Manager Hand had the honor of being host to them for an afternoon. The afternoon's entertainment was the showing of the French war films in the Pathé exchange and a dinner afterward Manager Hand does not forget to handle the Pathé scenes, and such a special meal a fine host, and the officers left very well pleased with the afternoon visit.

W. H. Bradley Resigns.

There has been a change in management of the Boston office of the Goldwyn exchange. William H. Bradley, who has been in charge since Harry R. Campbell was left to take charge of the Fox exchange, has resigned, and the new management has not been announced. Mr. Bradley has been with the Goldwyn office for some time, having managed the Washington office and Brooklyn department of the Griffith with headquarters in New York of this company.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—A picnic luncheon and a baseball game will be the feature of the day's outing to be held on Tuesday, June 25, at Westville, N. J., under the auspices of the Exhibitor's League of Pennsylvania, in conjunction with their state convention. Owing to the conditions brought about by the war the annual state convention meeting of the league will be held at their headquarters in Philadelphia, at 1331 Vine street, on Monday and Tuesday, June 24 and 25. On Monday the election of officers will take place in conjunction with the selection of delegates for the national convention. On Tuesday all business will be disposed of by noon, and then the grand banquet will be made for the Westville "Special," which will leave Camden (Penn. R. R.) at 12:36 and every hour thereafter, speeded by Blatt, Charles Klang of Westville. Given have the honor of organizing the teams which will play on the theater men's and the exchange.

Dinner Tendered to Buhter.

Employees, manager, and executives of the Stanley Company and the Central Market Street Amusement, Inc., were honored by Frank Buhter by tendering him a dinner to mark his elevation to the position of managing director of all the theaters under the control of the companies, recently announced by Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company. The affair started at mid-night Wednesday, June 12, at the Hotel Bingham, and for several hours the guest of honor was lauded in speeches and enthusiastically congratulated upon his well deserved promotion.

Abel E. Einstein acted as toastmaster, and brief addresses extolling the merits of Mr. Buhter as an executive and a splendid fellow were delivered by Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company; Mr. Abert, the Saloscys and others, and in behalf of the managers and other friends William Goldenberg, who presided at the affair, presented Mr. Buhter with a silver loving cup as a moment of the happy occasion.

Edward J. O'Keefe, the popular Atlantic City theater manager, has added the Maryland Exhibitors' League houses, which will come under his personal direction, thereby making a total of four theaters.

Parax Film Opens Office.

The Parax Film Company have secured the former World building at 1334 Vine street, Philadelphia, as its permanent local headquarters for the distribution of the Sherry Service. George Wright, of New York, with several years of experience in the film business to his credit, has been appointed the manager, and he is certainly optimistic regarding the future. The parax productions to be released in the near future are Catherine Calvert in "Romance of the Underworld," Doris Kenyon in "The Street of Seven Stars," Catherine Calvert in "The Girl Problem," and Dorris Kenton in "The Inn of the Blue Moon."

What Films Are Doing.

Admirers of Mary Pickford, and they are legion, were bound to be elated with the news that her latest film, "How Could You," in which she is starred, is being played at the Stanley theater Monday, June 17. It is the film version of her own Broadway success, "Hit the Trail Holliday," and George M. Cohan gave last Monday's entertainment before the theater in his portrayal of Billy Holliday.

For the all-week feature film at the Arcadia theater "Her Final Reckoning," starring Pauline Frederick, proved one of the most absorbing seen on the screen of that popular playhouse this spring.

BALTIMORE TRADE LETTER

By J. M. Sheflman, 1902 Mount Royal Terrace, Baltimore.

GERARD STORY PLAYS TO RECORD HOUSES.

ALTIMORE, MD.—The receipts during the week of June 10 at the Garden theater, 31 Park avenue, were the largest in the history of the house. During the entire week, Ger- ard "The Strange Story," was played, run with four acts of vaudeville and the playhouse was packed to the walls every evening of the week. On the two days of the run Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the company, and L. A. Deffio, his executive manager, had to erect a screen and place chairs on the roof garden to accommodate the crowds that could not find seats in the theater.

Two Houses Dark During Summer.

The Daisy theater, 1752 North Gay street, under the management of J. Hassinger, has now been closed for the summer months. The Royal theater, 1940 West Pratt street, owned by Frank A. Horing, president of the Maryland Exhibitors' League, has also closed for the summer months.

AL. ROSENTHAL IN BALTIMORE.

Al. Rosenthal, formerly associated with the box office of the Imperial in Baltimore and has just closed a deal with the Variety Pictures Corporation of this city, whereby he will handle all pictures handled by him in this territory. He wishes his Chicago friends the best of luck. Mr. Rosenthal and Milton Capen, president of the Variety Pictures Corporation, attended the moving picture convention in Richmond during the week of June 10.

NEW THEATER PLANNED IN BALTIMORE.

The Forest Park Theater Company have made application to Mr. S. F. Fich, inspector of Baltimore for a permit to build a one-story moving picture theater to measure 37 by 38 feet, on the west side of Garrison avenue, south of Liberty Heights avenue. The building is to be built of brick and stone and will cost in the neighborhood of $20,000.

DID NOT CUT FILM, FINED.

The case of the Maryland Censor Board, represented by Mrs. Marguerite E. Harrison and Clarence Petree, members of the board, against Joseph Blevich, proprietor of the Picture Garden theater, premises, the Variety Pictures Corporation, for failing to delete certain scenes of "The Old Boy," was called up on Thursday morning, June 13. The case was tried in the Central Police Court before Justice Beach, and while the Variety Pictures Corporation was fined $25 and costs the case against Mr. Blevich was dismissed.
Sherry Service Opens Pittsburgh Office

B. F. Lyon Will Have Charge of Branch at 804 Penn Avenue—Other Notes of Interest from Western Pennsylvania.

By E. J. McCurdy, 452 Union Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—A new exchange will be added to the Pittsburgh list of film distributors next week, when the Pittsburgh branch of the Wm. L. Sherry exchanges opens at 804 Penn avenue. This is the fifth branch of the firm that has been completed, and will have a number of features ready to release, the first among which will be the French-Czech, "A House in the Underworld," starring Catherine Calvert.

The Pittsburgh branch will be in charge of B. F. Lyon, who is back in Pittsburgh after an absence of two years. Mr. Lyon came to Pittsburgh originally as the branch manager of Pathe's exchange on Liberty avenue, and went with the International Film Service when Mr. Hearst launched the organization as manager of the Western branch. In this position he remained until he was made district manager of the International, and when he resigned in order to resume his duties as a host of friends among exhibitors sincerely regretted his leaving. Mr. Lyon was considered one of the most popular of the managers in the Pittsburgh territory, and it is reason to presume that the exchange he now opens will be as successful under his guidance as it was when he held the same position.

R. A. Fulton Takes Titusville Theater.

Another theater in the territory has changed hands because of the war. The latest is the Orpheum at Titusville, Pa., a two-story building, which will be taken over by Mr. Fulton, who will join in the management. The theater is large, having a splendid seating capacity, and plays to the best patronage in town. Mr. Fulton has taken up Y. M. C. A. war work, and the theater has been taken over by R. A. Fulton, formerly manager of the Titusville Grand. Mr. Fulton has been very successful in the hotel business, and is expected to operate the theater to his liking. The theater has been closed for remodeling and repairs, but will open about the 1st of June.

Western Pennsylvania Notes.

The Grand theater in Beaver Falls, owned by Edwin Goodman, was purchased this week by Hyman Goldberg, who formerly managed the Majestic theater, at Rochester, N. Y., which was sold about four months ago. The Grand seats about 400 people, and should prove a good property under Mr. Goldberg's management.

"Carmen of the Klondyke" opened at the Orpheum theater at Pittsburgh on Fifth avenue, and played to good business during the entire week. The production, distributed by the Western Pennsylvania Corporation, declare that bookings have been very heavy, and they will be necessary to buy another print, making four in all.

A short time ago I made mention of the fact that a group of film men were to buy property and build theaters in many towns around Pittsburgh. The first announcement of this plan has now been made. The Western Pennsylvania Corporation has purchased property at 614 Main street, Sharpsburg, Pa., and will construct a theater seating approximately 700. Work will be started soon.

The new Orpheum theater at Clarksburg, West Virginia, has been opened by Jack Marks. The new theater will be called the Opera House. Every modern improvement and convenience conceivable has been added to make it a truly exemplary theater for road shows as well as pictures. J. F. Young, who has been in charge of Harvey Day's Premier Exchange in Cleveland, was a Pittsburgh visitor the other day. Mr. Young reports business as brisk in Cleveland, but some how like Pittsburgh very much.

C. H. Murray, of the Sharpsburg Cinerama, expects to join the draft forces shortly, and the management of his theater will devolve on the younger brother, Mr. Murray's older brother is already at the front. Mark Spandau, who has been working as a roadman for Jerome Epstein, has joined the colors, and leaves Jerome to seek another salesman.

A combination has been effected whereby the Poster Company and the Poster Mounting Company become the American Theater Poster Company. They now have retained the old location of the Poster Company, and the new officers of the concern are H. Clay Berger; Adolph Schaeffer; and George M. Schaeffer.

Exhibitors' Booking Now Ready.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—After two months of organization, the plans of the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation of Ohio have matured, and they are now ready to do business.

The corporation was organized by Cleveland exhibitors, capitalized at $8,000. There are now thirty members and a total of $2,500 worth of stock has been sold. Owing to the fact that only $1,400 worth of stock will be sold, that leaves but $1,100 to be disposed of, which will have to be divided among 70 exhibitors, as only 100 exhibitors can be taken into the organization with the present capitalization.

The Exhibitors' Booking Corporation is to buy pictures for the plan devised by C. C. Petitchon and others who organized a similar plan in Chicago some years ago. Sam Bullock as representative of the Ohio company, is now in New York at a meeting of all the state organizations, where the final plans for buying pictures is being worked out. The new company hopes to be having before fall.

"Glady She Saw "The Unbeliever."

"The Unbeliever," which is having quite a run in Cleveland, is responsible for the enlistment of many boys from the Forest City in the Marine Corps.

Two of such instances, however, are worth more than passing interest. These are two employees of the Cleveland Klondyke exchange, Ely Epstein, bookkeeper, and Joe Sato, projectionist.

When "The Unbeliever" first arrived in Cleveland several months ago these boys were contemplating enlisting. "The Unbeliever" was screened by Manager Normand and Sweet and Epstein saw it.

The following day both went to the Marine recruiting station and applied. In a few days they were accepted. In a letter to the writer received last week from Epstein, who is at Paris Island, S. Carolina, he says:

I am certainly pleased with this branch of the service and I might say that if it wasn't for 'The Unbeliever' I perhaps would never be in the Marine Corps and therefore am thankful to Edison for producing a picture which induced me to join the service.

Epstein says he qualified as a marksman and received a $2 pay increase as a result.

Masterpiece Film Gets a Weekly.

Announcement was made by Leon D. Neeter of the Masterpiece Film Attractions that his company had obtained the Gaumont Weekly for distribution in Ohio and Kentucky.

The service will start July 1 and there will be two releases per week, one on Sunday and the other on Wednesday. The Weekly will be distributed from the Cleveland exchange for northern Ohio, and from the Cincinnati exchange for southern Ohio and Kentucky.

Changes in Ashland.

Ashland, Ohio.—This city has been undergoing many changes in the operation of her theaters. Messrs. Michael and McIntosh, who formerly ran the Princess theater, now have the Opera House, while the Princess has been opened up under the name of the Band Box by J. H. Clark, who formerly ran the Olde House. Mr. Michael and McIntosh also are running the Grand theater, there.
Coal Has Come, Hurry for Yours, Exhibitors

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Get your winter’s coal in NOW, Mr. Exhibitor and Mr. Exchangeman.

This is the advice of Howard A. Forman, of Buffalo fuel administrator for Erie County, N. Y. Remembering the barn-like atmosphere of some of the local theaters last winter, many of the film men are heeding Mr. Forman’s advice. Paraphrasing an old proverb, they believe a ton of coal in the cellar is worth two on a distributing ticket. During the past two months the government has sent here as much coal as was received in this city during the entire winter. The fuel administrator believes Buffalo will be well taken care of in its coal requirements during the coming fall and winter. His advice to the film men is: “Buy your coal now, even if you have to borrow the money.”

Another Buffalo Manager Honored.

Mat Whitman, manager of the Allen-dale moving picture theater, Buffalo, has resigned to succeed Edward L. Hyman as manager of the Liberty theater at Camp Wheeler, Macon, Ga. Mr. Hyman, who formerly managed the Victoria theater, Buffalo, will now manage the Liberty theater at Camp Wheeler.

“Ed. Hyman was so successful in managing the Victoria theater that Camp Wheeler that the Government is giving him a more difficult position in charge of a similar house at Camp Taylor,” said Mr. Whitman.

Of the thirty-two Liberty theaters in the United States two are managed by Buffaloans. Friends of Messrs. Hyman and Whitman are proud of the record.

George A. Hickey Wins Coveted Prize.

Buffalo film men—competitors and all—are congratulating George A. Hickey, manager of the Goldwyn exchange, this city, because he won second prize in the sales contests, national event, which the Goldwyn company closed recently. Mr. Hickey this week is poking fun at that bugaboo, the reaction. George has just deposited in a local bank $500 in gold—not stake, but real money—which is hard to come by these days.

The reason for Mr. Hickey’s success in the country-wide contest is that he is a hundred-per-cent pluggcr. He doesn’t depend on road men to get him the business. He goes out and fights for it himself. During the three months of the contest he combed the Buffalo territory thoroughly. Using his car, he visited hundreds of theaters, and with good sales results.

Mr. Hickey has received a letter of congratulations from Paul H. Bush, Goldwyn manager of St. Louis. Near the close of the race these two ran neck and neck, but the Buffalo man grabbed the second prize in a spectacular last-week spurt. Mr. Hickey received similar congratulations from Comptroller Schay of the Goldwyn.

Higher Fares and the Film Shows.

Buffalo’s street-car fare will be raised from five to six cents. The City Council has adopted a resolution permitting this advance, which will go into effect shortly. The extra income of the company will be used to pay the railway employees higher wages. They threatened to strike if they were not granted this concession.

With higher rates on the trolleys and steam roads many people will be more careful at times to save the additional expense and give extra patronage to their neighborhood film houses instead of making the trip to the big theaters downtown.

Uncle Sam With Sword at Shea’s.

Harold B. Franklin, of Shea’s Hippodrome, Buffalo, recently had as his stage setting a large figure of Uncle Sam, sword in hand, commanding the forces of Treasury and State to win the war. Mr. Franklin and S. A. Anderson, a Buffalo florist, will have charge of the erection of a large floral arch at Lafayette Square. This will be one of the big features of the War Saving Stamp campaign week, June 22-28. An indicator each day will show the amount of money pledged for war stamps in the previous twenty-four hours. The arch will be illuminated at night and covered.

Buflalo Brevities.

Irving Hanower, manager of the First National exchange, Buffalo, recently visited Rochester, Syracuse, Elmira, and other places, and he plans to return in the spring of 1921 with "Four Years in Germany" and "Tarzan of the Apes.

Considering the time of year and conditions, A. T. Barnett, our road man, is putting over some good work,” said Mr. Hanower.

The United Film Service, Buffalo, is handling “The Public Defender” for the Modern Feature Photoplays in this territory.

Toronto to Rate License Fees by Capacity

Exhibitors informed that After January Next City Theater Tax Will Be Graded by Seating Capacity of the Houses.

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Winona Avenue, Toronto, Ont.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—Intimation has been received from the City of Toronto will enforce new theater license regulations starting with 1918. The assessment will be based upon the seating capacity of a theater, the minimum being $50 for a theater with 99 seats. It is understood that before, the bibli- iant tax has been a flat $50 per year for all picture theaters.

Theater Has Attractive Summer Dress.

The Strand theater, one of Toronto's great houses, for the next few weeks, appears a summer dress on June 17. The whole ex- terior was given a fresh coat of paint while the interior presents a delightful summery appearance. The lobby and vest- ibule have been decorated with choice blooms and plants while the interior has been hung with chintzes to heighten the effect of the coolness it combats with the cold air system. Another new item consists of new equipment in the projection room, including two pro- jection machines. The large orchestra is being continued under the direction of Ernest Knugi and a number of organized programs has included vocal solos by John T. Fiddes. Manager Clarence Boden, is arranging to make the theater inviting to summer patrons.

Edward Morris Meets Hero's Death.

The two films men were shocked to hear of the death in action of Ed. Morris, one of the veteran figures in local film circles. Morris was recently serving with the Canadian Army in France and leaves a large family. He was one of the original projectionists in Toronto being first associated with the old Crystal Palace. He was later connected with the Canadian Projection Company.

Orpheum at Toronto Opens.

The Orpheum theater, 604 Queen street, west, Toronto, was opened during the week of June 10. The first presentation was "The Girl of the Phillips." This was shown for the first two days and was followed by "The Conjurer" and "Puritan". The programs was working with William and Grace Desmond. The policy of the theater is to change programmes three times each week.

Business Jottings.

Manager of the Royal theater, Peterboro, Ontario, has added to the equipment facilities of his theater by the purchase of two new Simplex projection machines. Similar improvements have also been made at the Wyndwood theater, Bathurst street, Toronto. At this theater a new gold plate screen has been installed and the house also has a new Simplex.

Effective "Eagle's Eye" Publicity.

In presenting "The Eagle's Eye", Man- ager A. W. Herron of the Duchess theater, Saule St. Marie, Ontario, resorted to a number of stunts which resulted in capacity patronage. He clipped from many newspapers all items referring to spots and was called "You Know Your Neighbor?" on a three sheet board. He also showed an illumin- ated picture of cups, bottles, etc., placing a flasher back of the eagle's eyes which he had replaced with red gelat- ined photographic plates. The newspapers and quarter sheets to advertise the serial, the quarter sheet stories and the homes. The population of the city is only 11,000.

Allens Choose Name for New House.

Announcement is made that the fine new moving picture theater which is being built in Toronto by Jules and J. J. Allen is to be known as Allen's Bloor Street theater. Building operations are pro- gressing at a rapid rate and it is probable the theater will be opened early in the fall. It is a two-floor house and will have all the latest improvements. The seating capacity will take care of a crowd of 1,000 people. The Allens have two other theaters; one in their home town house, and Allen's Beaver theater in the West End. The theater which they have acquired in Ontario is now known as Allen's Regent theater.

Cincinnati News Letter

By Kenneth C. Crain, 367 First Nat. Bank Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

Ten Theaters Aid Worthy Cause.

CINCINNATI, O.—A fund has been raised to benefit of the Fatherless Children of France, an unusually appealing relief organization. This will be materially benefited by the offer of the managers of ten moving picture houses to distribute free three days of charge to a picture for a school children's outing. The outing is to be held at Chester Park, and the theater man- agers are giving up their relief for every ticket turned in by the children, hence the wider the distribution the more relief money that will be raised. Manager Libson will distribute tickets at the Grand, the Family, the Strand, the Henry, and the Bilou. Manager Henry Hodge of the Clifton, will also distribute, and Manager Willame, will do the same with the Aragon Amusement Co.'s four houses. This makes up the ten which will see that thousands of children receive tickets.

"Re-making of Nation" Much Liked.

The Whirlwind theater, Queen city to its first view of the official training camp pictures, "The Re-making of a Na- tion," was highly satisfactory to the army authorities in charge of the picture. The performances at the Grand were con- tinuous, running from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. and, while the admission charge of 25 cents was higher than that of the or- dinary pictorial, the managers of the theater are gladly to get a first-hand im- pressed by the way Uncle Sam trains his boys into pictures, as it is a part of the Government's educational work.

Spy Talked as a Four-Minute Man.

CINCINNATI.—The splendid work which is being done here and elsewhere by the "Four-Minute Men" has made the public more ready to listen to speakers on war- time topics than was formerly the case, and this has been turned to account by the German army. As his arrest by Secret Service men a few days ago proved. The man in question, known only in Germany as "Geining" is a veteran of the war. He delivered a number of addresses in this guise in which he laid great emphasis on the horrors of poison gas, the great number of American wounded, and other matters, always speaking with sons in the army. Of course, he had never been near the front. His arrest, therefore, did tremendous damage, for this dangerous German propaganda may be disseminated by unauthorized speakers, led to a meeting of representatives of the theater managers, at which arrangements were made for careful supervision by the authorities as to where the silver addresses either for pay or without it.

Lyric Theater Goes to 10 Cents.

The season of high-priced productions at the Lyric, Cincinnati, has ended for a time at least, and the policy which pre- valued for the greater part of last summer, when ten cents was the price of admission all over the house, has been started. That the policy was a success is evidenced by the fact that the film ver- sion of "The Yellow Ticket," featuring Pauline Lord and Ward, was the first of the popular-priced shows.

The Gifts Reports No Bad Weeks.

McMahen & Jackson, at the Gifts, Cin- cinnati, are fortunate in landing many a fine attraction in their moving picture pictures, and they were once more for- tunate in one of the latest shows, fea- turing Richard Dix and "Men of Plattsburg." Business continues to run big at the Gifts, McMahen & Jackson re- port, and that the theater has had a single bad week since the house opened, which certainly justifies their belief in the value of sec- ond week shows.

Thieves Loot the Lincoln Theater.

That thieves have begun to turn their attention to moving-picture theaters in Cincinnati as a means of securing easy money, a month or so ago, is indicated by the fact that an unknown marauder recently ob- tained a number of the pictures, Fifth and John streets, and got away with $70, a gold watch, and other valuables by breaking open the safe. It is thought that the thief obtained entrance by means of a duplicate key.

Red Cross Gets Theater for Night.

The management of the Arcade theater and the Lincoln, as a result of a recent appeal to the public, did a good turn for the Red Cross by turning over the theater on one evening to some school children for use in presenting an entertainment for the benefit of the great relief organization. Their program was presented free and the handsome sum of $452 was real- ized.

Theater Burner Sought by Marines.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—United States Marines, commanded by Captain Ray McKee, charged with burning down a number of moving picture theaters in Nashville, where Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" has been billed to turn out to be a failure, are being sought by the Nashville recruiting station for his apprehension.

Tech is New York on May 20, and has been gathering confederates along his trail over the country. When at the show he fowls with all possible energy by civil and military authorities.

Capt. Robert Brown was the Prin- cess theater at Hopkinsville. He is described as being in the twenties, curly hair, is 6 feet 4 inches tall, weighs about 135 pounds, and bearing several scars on his hands.

"Work or Fight" in Nashville.

The "work or fight" order will be felt in Nashville moving picture theater circles as a result of this new attitude. At the Knickerbocker Manager Wassmann antici- pates a drop in ticket sales and installed girl ushers, ticket sellers and doorkeepers in place of the former box offices. The other Nashville houses a number of the male employees have left the theater business and have taken jobs at the government powder plant at Nashville for $6.90 a day.
Detroit Exchange Organization at Work

Film Section of the Local Board of Trade Elects Officers and Appoints a Transportation Committee—Will Be Active.

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—The exchange managers of Detroit after many conference have affiliated with the local board of commerce and have formed a local board of trade. This board has the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers of the Detroit Board of Commerce. Mr. Henry W. Warner, now vice-president; H. A. Ross, of the Arctraft-Paramount, is secretary of the Board of Commerce, is the board of commerce and will be president of the board of commerce.

The transportation committee has been appointed, consisting of Mr. Duncan Vitagraph; W. D. Ward, Universal, and Robert Cotton, World. Already the committee have taken over the traffic department of the Board of Commerce to improve express shipments, and has been under the direction of Mr. J. C. Fishman, of the Strand theater. It looks as though Detroit will really have a worth while association of exchange managers.

Most offices are backing up their managers and insisting that they take an interest in the organization that they attend all meetings if possible.

Parex Film Opens in Detroit.

A New Detroit exchange, just opened, is the Parex Film Exchange. William L. Sherry pictures. H. E. Wells has been appointed manager, and an office is now being taken over the floor of the building. The Parex have subleased part of the space of the Mutual Exchange, but will have separate offices and partitions and alterations are completed. The first picture which they are releasing in this territory is "A Romance of the Underworld."

Among Theaters in Michigan.

C. H. Miles, of the Orpheum theater, Detroit, announces that for the summer months the Orpheum theater will again play pictures and vaudeville an entire week. For the past few months the Orpheum has been in agreement with the Regent theater, both houses being under a lease.

While no definite date has been set, it is almost a certainty that the Majestic theater, Detroit, will close on the 15th of July, so that the interior can be re-decorated and many alterations made to the stage.

Film Men in the Service.

Among those drafted for June 25th call are A. Goldner, traveling representative for Paramount-Artcraft, and Mat Lekho- witz, salesmen for Pathè. A card has been received from Jack Erickson, formerly with Fox and Select, that he is now with the Heavy Tanks Company, at Gettysburg. Another card received was from Harry D. Goldberg, former manager of the Civic and Feature Film Co., who is now in France.

A. F. Denman Now Heads the Franklin.

A. F. Denman, formerly with the Orpheum theater, Detroit, has been appointed manager of the Franklin theater, Saginaw, succeeding A. J. Moeller, who has been in the vaudeville work in England.

Hyman Will Operate Regent Theater.

Arthur S. Hyman of the Dawn Masterplay Co., Detroit, has closed a deal whereby he has purchased the Regent theater for the summer months. The house is operated by C. H. Miles, who conducts it as a picture house in the summer months during the regular season. He had intended to close the house but later leased it until the first of September. Mr. Hyman, who represents the Dawn Masterplay Co., has been in thehardware business, and under his management, the Regent will change programs Mondays and Thursdays and will show pictures exclusively at 10 and 5-cent prices. The Regent is located at the corner of Woodward and the Grand Boulevard, and has a patronage of 2,000 people on the first and second floors.

Dawn Masterplay Gets More Film.

Again Arthur S. Hyman, of the Dawn Masterplay Co., announces having secured additional pictures for his exchange. At this time he has purchased all of the Franke Hall pictures formerly sold through the Foursquare exchange, which include, in this territory, "Just a Woman," "The Dreaming Last Rule Song," "The Beloved," "Those Who Pay," "The Crucible of Life" and "The Lost Chord." Also, Mr. Hyman has announced that the house will be re-built and will feature the Adaline, a favorite picture from the countryside.

Will Rebuild Princess Theater.

Hopkinsville, Ky.—The Crescent Amusement Co., which owns the Princess theater in Hopkinsville, has announced that the theater will be re-built and will feature the recently transferred, Princess theater, which was used for the recently transferred, Old-fashioned pictures, and will be re-built. L. H. Davis, owner of the Princess theater building, has announced that the house will be re-built and will feature the Adaline, a favorite picture from the countryside.

Interesting Louisville Notes.

L. J. Dittmar, head of the Majestic Amusement Co., of Louisville, is at present operating a combination in the East in connection with the development of his colored pictures project. Harry Loomis is actually operating the theater.

The Phoenix, which is a combination house, is being operated by Louisville exhibitors to get time. Oga Petrova is coming to Louisville in July during the War Stamp campaign.

Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" has made a big hit in Louisville wherever shown, doing an especially good job at the Ideal, West Broadway and other suburban houses.

Mr. Y. Smith's theater, Louisville, Ky., has closed its summer picture program, hot weather cutting the crowds down to the minimum at that house.

Transfer of the 84th or Lincoln Division from Louisville to Chillicothe, O., has resulted in the local theater being deserted for a time, but the new draft is rapidly filling up the camp again.

J. J. Garfield, manager of the Princess theater, Scottsburg, Ind., was recently in Louisville, and stated that he had taken over the management of the Princess. Mr. Garfield is a native of Salem.

A. F. Carroll, manager of the Louisville Universal Office, has returned from Indiana, where he spent several days with the district Universal office in that city.

E. C. McClintock, of the Alamo theater, Garden City, Mo. Two Kansas City Theaters Sold.

George Ross, proprietor of the Bancroft theater, 1240 Madison Street, has sold his interests in the Broadmore to Knox R. Lancaster, secretary and treasurer of the Columbia Operator, Kansas City, Mo., who have charge of the management of the theater.

Exchange Buys Ford for Salesmen.

The Kansas City office of the Universal bought no deeds of interest on Friday in this territory. One of the Universal travelers has been making his trips by bus for several weeks and the author which he brought in convinced Milton Feld, manager, that it was by far the more effective way to travel to the territory of an exhibitor. Consequently five roadsters have been purchased for the salesmen. Each car will have its own ad, advertisement, and this is expected to bring in results. The upkeep will be sustained by the charges made and the expenses equalized on account of the greater number of exhibitors which can be reached.

Dallas Trade Letter

By Douglas Hawley, Times Herald, Dallas, Texas.

Hot Weather; Business Quiet.

DALLAS, Tex.—June temperatures and heavy attendance at moving picture shows don't go together, so the fellows who have come from Texas this week are reporting rather slow business for the dog days. However, there has been good stuff, according to the film house managers. Weather conditions have been fine for several weeks and the excellent progress has been made with wheat and oats. The sunshine, with show curtains also has been good, and the very thing for the corn, too. Everything looks all right.

The film business between Classic releases made an excellent impression at the Jefferson theater during the week, when the company's production featuring the famous dancing sisters was offered along with the vaudeville bill.

William Eppstein Sells Out.

Wm. Eppstein, formerly of Lytte and Eppstein, San Antonio, in Dallas recently, told folks he had sold out his entire interest to Mr. Lyte and was on his way to New York. He didn't intimate whether that place would be his future residence, but Mr. Lyte was also in Dallas about the same time Mr. Eppstein went through.

The former is doing business on Film Row for a day or so and apparently was in a good buying frame of mind, because Lyte made a considerable sale of stock left on him, going down to San Antonio.

General to Be "Regular" Exchange.

It is rumored that a "regular" exchange town manager James B. Kelly of the General, 1127 Broadway, will move down on the main street right where all the other big fellows be, and he's gooner fix up his corner and make it "film" office. Which means Jimmy Kelly is to move the General's offices closer to the heart of things. Mr. Kelly and his wife have been away on a long business trip, and the town manager has an office close by, which will be an added convenience. The new offices will be on the main street, and will be a great addition to this section, which has been growing in importance for the past year.

About Interesting People.

"Bill" Ward used to own the Fort Worth franchise in show business, but now he owns the Rex theater, Ft. Worth. He was a Film Row visitor last week.

Joe Phillips, of the Odem, Fort Worth, was also a caller, to the satisfaction of at least two local house owners who made good sales, it is reported.

Indiana Exchanges Move.

The headquarters of the Mutual Film Corporation and the V. H. Hodupp, Inc., which operated film exchange in Indianapolis, moved this week to a new theater in North Illinois street, have sent word to Jacob H. Hillkene, recently appointed director of the Indiana Film Supply house, that they will comply with the new fire prevention ordinance, which provides that the exchange be removed from its present location and in a building in which there is a public assembly room.

Two companies have leased new quarters in a building at 111 West Maryland street and will be ready to move there in time for the opening of the coming season. Speaking for the Mutual company, said that although the change would cause the company considerable inconvenience, he believed the new fire prevention ordinance would greatly reduce fire hazards and danger in connection with the handling of the films.

Noted Preacher Praises Films.

Motion pictures came in for a considerably favorable address given in Lafayette this week by the Rev. Moses Breeze, of Columbus, O., secretary of the National Police Sunday School Movement in Ohio. The Rev. Mr. Breeze, who spoke on the subject, "The Church and the Moving Picture," said in his address at the program at the rural church conference held at Purdue university.

A rural church which should have a motion picture equipment, a gymnasium and a three-acre recreational ground for the children as a part of its program to adequately perform its function as a rural community center," he said. "One of the best modulions for teaching the children as well as the grownups is the motion picture films.

Theater at Hopkinsville Burns.

The Floyd Theater at Hopkinsville, Ky., one of the most popular motion picture houses in this section of the state, was badly burned out in the early dawn, June 19, as a result of a fire which started in the operating booth in the rear of the building, and spread to the popular war picture, "My Four Years in Germany," being presented when the fire broke out.

The building was too badly burned slightly about the arms in attempting to extinguish the flames. The fire spread through the entire building, and made the lady's residence only a matter of making his way to safety. The audience filed out quickly and orderly when the alarm was given.

The theater building was owned by J. H. Davis, of Hopkinsville, and was leased to the Standard Amusement Company of Nashville, Tenn. The theatre equipment is still owned by Mr. Davis.
was valued at approximately $7,000, the building at $10,000, partly covered by insurance.

Indiana Theater Notes.

The Index Motion Picture Company, Rockville, Ind., has purchased the business of the late H. B. Yoder, recently purchased by B. Deardorf, of Goshen, Ind., is being remodelled and redecorated. The company plans to extend work and preparations to a big opening about July 5, which Deardorf will direct.

O. G. Murray, owner of the Murray and Murrette theaters, Richmond, Ind., has leased both houses to the Merchants' and Bankers' Theater Company, of Chicago, and has announced that he will retire from the vaudeville picture business.

Mr. Murray says he intends to devote his entire time to the Foster Advertising Company, a newspaper company in which he is interested. The Foster Advertising Company, of which he was a co-founder, has in the fifty towns and cities in this section of the county.

With four thousand of the oldest and most experienced theatrical and motion picture men in eastern Indiana.

GERAD FILM STIRS CHILDREN.

Grand Rapids, Michigan, Theater Gives Special Show.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—Fourteen hundred children ranging in age from eight to twelve years up, attended a special show of the Gerard "My Four Years in Germany," at the Majestic Gardens on Saturday evening.

Manager Sid Lawrence said it was the most enthusiastic audience of the week and he was astounded at the intelligence in matters of the war displayed by the children.

"They applauded the lines with as much discernment as any audience this week," he said. "They recognized a vein of patriotism and the teaching ability of the teachers in the Grand Rapids schools." In speaking of the performance, Mr. Lawrence said the German government and his insistence upon American rights inspired cheers and shouts of "Yes, sir." There were no "yellow streaks" in the audience. The keen intelligence and information shown on the part of the children, whose ages aged from 12 to 14, was amazing.

IN MINNEAPOLIS.

Temporary Directors Elected.

Members of the Associated Theaters, Inc., Minneapolis, held a meeting at the Hennepin Hotel on Saturday, at which time a temporary new board of directors was elected and a number of important details connected with the operation of the exchange threshed out. The new board of directors follows: F. F. Culp, president of the Bankers' National Bank of Minneapolis; O. N. Davies, screen editor of the Minneapolis Tribune; J. M. Bergstrom, manager of the Blue Mouse theater, St. Paul; M. W. Sturtevant, manager of the Ione theaters; Minneapolis; and J. M. Bernt, Jr., manager of the Nicollet theater, Minneapolis.

Secretary Hamlin's report showed that the corporation had 675 stockholders and that the corporation's net worth was $10,000. The firm's film supply was operating on a paying basis and that it expected to expand its work during the summer. The condition of the bank would permit of its securing territorial rights to big productions.

Bad Weather Conditions Hit the Northwest

Many Exhibitors in Minnesota and the Dakotas Consider the Advisability of Closing Till Late in August—Other Notes.

by J. L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—A month ago road men returning to the city following visits to different cities and towns of the territory reported that conditions were splendid and促使s near to the tallies being well started toward a bumper harvest and country exhibitors would have more than a little difficulty in almost all sections. However, about two weeks ago a series of heavy rainstorms swept over the Northwest and the motion picture theater a heavy blow. Following the termination of the wet spell the general business of the business spell, but directly following the rainy spell came one of extremely hot days and nights and it looks as if the present time as if ten per cent of the country exhibitors will close their theaters until August.

The Strand at Huron, S. D., one of the leading Dakota theaters and the Minneapolis Palace, Staples, Minn., were among the theaters that closed up tight for about a month, during the last few days. Throughout Minnesota and the Dakotas the number of theaters that are cutting down their show days each week is increasing speedily. Showings everywhere have suffered considerably during the past several weeks, and over the entire territory. "Pershing's Crusaders" in St. Paul.

St. Paul, Minn.—"Pershing's Crusaders," the latest government motion picture, opened a week's engagement at the St. Paul Metropolitan Opera House, Sunday June 14, and radio links in the present as if ten per cent of the country exhibitors will close their theaters until August. In the cities the free concerts in the parks and fishing parties have been more popular for the past two weeks.

A. Fisher Takes the Chair at Metro.

A. Fisher, former manager of the Me tro, was named last week as the successor to Louis H. Coen as manager of the Minneapolis Metro exchange. Mr. Fisher is scheduled for two years and will begin his new duties Monday June 24. S. A. Shirley, traveling auditor for the Metro exchange, has been appointed manager of the Metro office here and will remain in the city until the new executive is installed.

Olga Petrova Expected.

Mme. Olga Petrova, independent film star, will arrive in the Twin Cities within the next two weeks to boost the War Savings Stamp campaign. Mme. Petrova, who has been in the United States for her national tour due to the many requests made for her personal appearance in these cities, has been sent important units through their officials and exhibitors.

What Exhibitors Are Doing.

Another woman exhibitor was added to the Northwest ranks last week when Olga Petrova, independent film star, when her husband was drafted into the Navy.

Following R. C. Gibbs announcement that the Strand theater Huron, S. D., would close for the summer managers of the Lounge and the Idle Hour theaters of the same city have been considering forming a new management organization.

Joe Jensen has taken over the management of the Princess theater at Lake Preston, S. D. His son, the former manager, having been drafted into the National army.

J. X. Woodhouse, former publicity manager for the Finkelstein & Ruben interests and more recently manager of the Calhoun and Lagoon theaters in Minneapolis, Minn., has taken over the management of the Southern theater here and will announce a new policy of pictures and special musical programs shortly.

Keough Has Succeeded at New Lyric.

James A. Keough whose smiling phal- logeny is here shown is manager of the New Lyric theater, Minneapolis, one of the recent purchases of the Finkelstein & Ruben circuit. Few of Mr. Keough's predecessors at the New Lyric helm have found it a "smiling" job for, with all due respect to those who man- aged the theater previously, it did not prove a money maker to any great extent. In about eight months Mr. Keough has brought the Lyric back into the front rank where it appears it will remain.

Mr. Keough managed the Minneapolis Strand for Saxe brothers for over a year and also managed the Alcazar theater in Chicago for a time. Several years ago Mr. Keough was a drummer (not a travel- ing salesman) but finding managerial jobs to be had and not quite so monostonic as drumming, he "beat it" into the executive ranks and has remained there since. Jimmy Keough is known to practically every exhibitor of the Northwest and is one of the most popular showmen in the territory.

Notes About the Exchanges.

Louis Nathanson, a Minneapolis film salesman, has purchased the territorial rights to "Redemption" Evelyn Nesbit Thayer's feature which proved a splendid box office attraction at the Minneapolis Lyric and St. Paul New Princess theaters recently.

C. F. Regan of New York City has joined the local Vitagraph sales force and will leave for a tour of Northern Minnesota within a few days.

Manager E. S. Flynn of the Fox ex- change returned from the conference of Fox managers at New York last week and stated that he was glad to get back. Frank Thayer, manager of the Supreme exchange was on the same train that brought Mr. Flynn back from New York. Mr. Thayer expects to make an announce- ment regarding some new film acquisition- ships shortly.
Intense Heat on Coast Causes a Slump

Exhibitors in the Interior Tell of High Temperatures and a Decided Slackening of Business—Operators Are Scared.

By T. A. Church, North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

San Francisco, Calif.—Exhibitors from interior points who have visited the coast during the past week report intense heat and a decided slump in attendance. In most theaters attendance in all places airdomes were formerly used during the summer months, but the use of these domes has been discontinued for the present account of the daylight saving plan. A few have been opened, but darkness comes at such an hour that these are not proving a success. Some idea of the intensity of the heat may be judged from the fact that in Lodi, where temperatures at Red Bluff reached 110 degrees, while Sacramento was but 2 degrees cooler, Fresno escaped with 104 degrees, while San Francisco was comfortable with 72 degrees. At Needles, in southern California, the mercury rose to 122 degrees, and the century mark was passed at many places. In the large cities elaborate afternoon air conditioning plans serve to make theaters comfortable, but in smaller places where hot weather attendance suffers during such hot spells as the recent one.

While ideal weather has prevailed at San Francisco, business has shown a falling off and is well below normal. Even big attractions were suffering cards a few weeks ago, fail to appeal, and exhibitors are again looking for dramas, especially those with a touch of comedy. To add to the troubles of the theatre owner there is at present a marked scarcity of help and good ushers who are being trained at many houses. There is a scarcity of operators, a number of these having gone into the air conditioning business at air conditioning plants, where high wages are being paid, but with few learning the trade.

Harry Oviatt Goes to Atlast.

Harry Oviatt, manager of the local 1stathe exchange, but more recently with the Select Pictures Corporation, has joined the forces of the Atlas Educational Film Corporation as special representative and will devote much of his attention to promoting the distribution of the Devry projector. Sol L. Lesser recently purchased one of these machines for home use, and another operator has purchased one for the Liberty Film exchange.

Joe Cohen Returns to Honolulu.

Joe Cohen, head of the Consolidated Amusement Company, will sail for Honolulu in a few days, but plans to return to this city within a week or two, and report to the exchange for handling "My Four Years in Germany" throughout the Territory of Hawaii.

M. & R. Make Large Purchases.

The M. & R. Feature Film exchange has secured the California, Arizona and Nevada rights to "Eyes of the World" and all other pictures and products, and will handle "Mother" in this territory. Its management is continuing with increasing business. About 200 announcements are on file and show the Hoffman Fourquare, who is making a short stay here, and a deal may be completed whereby the releases of this concern will be handled.

Bruce and Kohn Visit Yosemite.

Robert Bruce, of the Educational Film Corporation, and Mark H. Kohn, of the Consolidated Amusement Company, which handles the releases of this concern on the west coast, recently returned from a trip to the Yosemite, where some fine scenes were made. Mr. Kohn plans to lead a visit to the Seattle branch shortly.

Exhibitors in Town.

Among the exhibitors who found it necessary to travel to business were: M. A. Richards, of the Tokay theater, Lodi.

San Francisco Briefs.

Considerable interest is being shown in the Outing-Chester pictures to be released through the Mutual, and a trade showing will be made shortly of the first offerings.

Sam Cohen, formerly of the poster department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., is now a booker.

Howard Sheehan & Lurie, is back from a trip to Eureka to inspect the new theatre to be opened the first of July.

Vernon R. Moore, for several years with the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., as publicity man, will sail shortly on the training ship Iris.

Edward H. Kemp, recently shipped a Moviograph projection machine to Shaffer Bros., who will use it in the Yosemite Valley during the vacation season.

"Intolerance" was recently brought back to the Fert theater for a week's run at 25, 35 and 60 cents.

A shooting affair occurred recently at the Bluff, the "Teen-agers" was booked, Gertrude Smith, the piano player, being shot twice by Harry Fornan, an admiral. She will recover.

News From Northern California.

Gridley, Cal.—Fink's theater is being enlarged and a balcony added. This house is conducted under the personal direction of E. H. Hink, and Fink's has never been run from high school. He is one of the youngest theater managers in the state.

Sam S. Hinchków, manager of the Grand theater, has been very ill, but is now on the road recovering.

The Hamblen theater, recently purchased by Sheehan & Lurie, is now in operation.

Oakland, Cal.—The Broadway Hippodrome Company has been incorporated with Nebraska and Iowa, exhibitors, and is a most successful publicty man as well. Mr. Holah is very popular with exhibitors both active and passive, and is a most successful publicty man for the Blank films controlled

Blank Enterprises Will Locate in Omaha

Des Moines Will Have Small Branch—E. C. Holah Becomes Manager and a Branch Will Be Opened in Kansas City.

By J. L. Shipley, 610 Locust Street, Des Moines, 11a.

Des Moines, Ia.—The big event in the current week was the announcement of the transfer of the A. H. Blank Enterprises, distributors of the best National Exhibitors' Club attractions and other state rights features, from Des Moines to Omaha. C. E. Holah, who has been with Blank enterprises in Omaha, and recently with the United Theaters Corporation, becomes branch manager of the Omaha branch. The Blank office will be continued in Des Moines, according to present plans, for the distribution of film in eastern and southeastern Iowa.

It is also announced that a Kansas City office for distribution in Kansas and Missouri for the Blank films controlled for these states will be opened shortly. Sam. Karchew will act as general author for the three offices and will look after the Des Moines branch. The growing business of the Blank film interests necessitated such a move, and it is believed that with the superior railroad facilities now available, a large number of accounts can be successfully served.

Assuming the management of the Omaha office Mr. Holah brings a wealth of rip experience in film circles. He has been associated with them both active and passive, and is a most successful publicty man as well. Mr. Holah is very popular with exhibitors both active and passive, and is a most successful publicty man for the new position.
Mr. Schwartz has been with the Blank interests since their inception two years ago and continues in a responsible position in which he is considered, and is more than equal to the added duties the new arrangement puts upon him. Mr. J. Hob. W. J. announced his sales force within a few days and General Manager Blank will be able to make a good report for the Kansas City office within two weeks.

Iowa Personal Notes.

Sam S. Schwartz is enjoying home life again. Since the pictures for the children have come on from Denver, where they have been making their home for the past few months, Manager Frankie, of the Rialto, announced that he has contracted for the Fox specials and the Sunshine comedies. Harry Watts, of the Palace, did big business during the summer with "Carmen of the Klondike," a cleverly arranged billboard campaign, backed up with good salesmanship in newspaper publicity, brought capacity business during the four days of the run.

W. L. Myers, formerly manager of the Palace in Des Moines for five years, during which he established himself as one of Iowa's foremost exhibitors, has recently purchased the Casino, Marshaltown, which J. E. Hostetler of Waterloo recently purchased. Mr. Myers has already put in underwire methods of publicity and has put the Casino back on the map with a vengeance. He also plans Standard and other high-class state rights features, many of which are copyrighted.

J. Jolly Jones, manager of Blank's Strand at Marshalltown, was a Des Moines visitor last week and returned to his home driven in his new car. Mr. Jones reports business good despite the hot weather.

Wm. Fraser, former manager of the Fraser theater, at Spencer, Ia., and who has been selected for one of the two theatres, Mitchell, S. D., during the past year, is about to dispose of his Dakota holdings and once more become an Iowa exhibitor. He has two locations under consideration and will close for one or both of them during the month, he states.

The drawing power of "Tarzan of the Apes," the First National attraction, was quite popular in Florida, says Mr. Mix, and the manager has purchased a key picture for the upcoming season. The picture is not named at this time.

Davenport Film Jottings.

By Joe Ester, Traveling Representative of Moving Picture World.

Quality Film Company Formed.

Davenport, Ia., July 2.—The Quality Film company has been formed at Davenport, Ia., under the name of the Quality Film Company, Ltd. C. B. Holmes and A. K. Swanson are the managers of the new concern. They will specialize on animated advertising along commercial lines and have opened an office and studio at 208 Iowa St. in Davenport.

Theater Man Go to Camp.

Among the men called to the colors from Davenport theaters during the past week:

Robert Hinchen—Empire Hippodrome, to Camp Gordon, Georgia.

George Augustine—Savoy theater, to Camp Gordon, Georgia.

Chester Wyckoff—Princess, Jefferson, Barracks, St. Louis, Mo.

Elmer Neece—Marble theater, Jefferson, Barracks, St. Louis, Mo.

Joe O'Neill—Quartermaster Department, to Camp Gordon, Georgia.

Harris O'Farrell, the well known composer, "Everybody loves a Soldier Boy" and "Soldiers of Fortune" of O'Farrell's dance orchestra, also Savoy, member of the Hill Jazz Orchestra have enlisted in the navy and are stationed at the Great Lakes Station. They expect to join the Great Lakes band.

Trade News Brevities from Portland, Ore.

Film Man Says Picture Prospects Are Better in Northwest than in California—Changes Among the Distributing Offices.

PORTLAND, OR.—The future outlook for the picture industry in the Pacific Northwest is much better than in California, says Mr. Hill, and Harry Hunter, manager and assistant manager, respectively, of the Portland Paramount. Business in the Northwest is better than in San Francisco, said Mr. Hill, and with Portland as a seat of the movies, the outlook for the theater man here looks most encouraging.

B. J. Sperry Again With Pathe.

J. Sperry, traveling representative for Paramount-Arcterra, Portland, has resigned that position with that company for the purpose, it is understood, of entering the employ of Pathe. Mr. Sperry was in Seattle at the time of this writing making arrangements with the Western United States office for the theater man here looks most encouraging.

With Northwest Exhibitors.

Houlton, Ore.—O. J. Carlson has rented the Holton theater pending the completion of the Woolworth Building in Portland City. This will be ready for occupancy in few weeks.

Battleground, Wash.—S. La Rouge recently showed "The Kaiser" to 750 people in one night. This town shows a census of 200. Business was such that Mr. La Rouge sent the Universal publicity department a report.

La Grande, Ore.—Don Meyers, of Meyers and Leiter, Arcade and Star theaters, has been called in the draft of June 24.

Riddle, Ore.—E. D. Stuller has sold his theaters at Riddle and Myrtle Creek.

Exhibitors' Club Moves.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon has moved its club room to the Commonwealth at Sixth and Ankeny Streets, and has installed its postal furniture. The new location is near film row.

Business Jottings.

Jesse G. Sohm, manager, recently completed a long tour through Oregon, Washington and Idaho with Robert Bruce and photographers of the Educational Films Corporation.

The Liberty theater organ was heard by the Portland public for the first time Sunday, June 5, with Henry B. Murtagh in charge. The organ is one of the Wurlitzer U. O. Orchestra type and was advertised as the largest instrument of its kind in any theater. In connection with the organ, J. R. McComb, "The Unbeliever," cooperating with the U. E. Marines and Manager E. J. Myrick used several stunts in bringing to the production public notice.

"Cleopatra" Returns.

The management of the Majestic theater, Portland, deviated a little from the usual run by putting back a picture for second showing. The picture was "Cleopatra" and it was shown for the week following and after its first appearance, enjoying good business in spite of the hot weather.

SPOKANE NEWS LETTER.

By S. Clark Patchin, E. 1311 11th Avenue, Spokane, Wash.

F. E. Montgomery Out of Titan.

POKANE, WASH.—Frank E. Montgomery has tendered his resignation as general manager of the Titan Feature Photo Play company and gave his reasons for his resignation in a lengthy letter to President J. Don Alexander of the company, according to his assistant, Mr. Montgomery announced that he was resigning because he was dissatisfied with the "violent and dishonest campaign conducted by the board of directors in transacting the business of the company." He objected to the financing of the Allied company in the Pacific Northwest by the Titan company and did not approve of the contract with C. L. Mayo, former manager of the theater, to advise the company.

"This is to advise you," states Mr. Montgomery in his letter of resignation, "that from this moment you are not to use my name or that of Pictures in any way as a representative of the Titan company or in the promotion of this corporation." He also asks the corporation, not to use the name of Chester Beecroft, the London representative, or Ernest Shipman as New York representative of the company.

The hand of the Alexander Electric company and the president of the Titan company gave out the following statement: "We have asked Mr. Montgomery not to deny absolutely the statement of Frank E. Montgomery regarding his resignation from the general management of the Titan Feature Photo Play company. Mr. Montgomery did not resign. The day previous to the writing of this letter he was again employed by the board of directors for good and sufficient reasons. His criticism of our management with the Allied company is entirely unfounded, as the contract was in effect when he came into the Titan company. Our investigation of the Allied company is an advantageous one for us. His objection to our former writing contract with Mr. Mayo is groundless, since it has been discontinued in favor of a more advantageous contract, and since he knew of its terms when he accepted the general managership. We are in no way interested in Mr. Montgomery's statement, as a director of national reputation, who has organized several successful film companies."

Capacity Houses for "The Unbeliever."

Not since "The Birth of a Nation" was first shown in Spokane has a picture theater have a more elaborate incidental program been arranged for a picture presentation. The manager of the Lyric theater is offering at the Auditorium for eight days, in "The Unbeliever," "J. Drummond, Seattle manager of the K-E-S-E service, which is handling the production has arrived and will handle the program here.

Lieutenant A. G. Gray of the state guard spoke for the four-minute men daily.

Mr. Drummond reports that "The Unbeliever" has shattered all records on the coast and in California theaters, where hundreds were turned away from every performance.

There have been capacity houses at practically every performance to date in Spokane.

Pictures That Pleased in Spokane.

At the Liberty, Spokane, in "Selfish Yates," W. & Hart is said to do his best dramatic work. L. W. Patten, in the new Hart role, and capacity houses witnessed each performance.

"Between Men," the new Hart offering at the Lyric, Spokane, and a new character of "The Palm," was a big hit. Tom Mix was featured at the Casino, Spokane, in "Ace High," a thrilling story of adventures in the Canadian northwest, and drew large audiences.
Form Washington Exchange Association

Recent Shift of Branch Managers Disorganized Old Body—New Officers Now Chosen and Active Work Begun.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Big things are afoot among the newly organized Exchange Managers' Association of Washington. This organization succeeds the recently extinguished Washington Society which died out but which died out when the recent big shift of managers occurred. The new corps of officers is made up of: W. H. Lust, president; R. B. Smelter, World Film Corporation, vice-president; Oscar A. Garelick, Exhibitors-Lasky Corporation, secretary, and Sam M. Siah, Metro Film Service Company, treasurer. The list of incorporators consists of S. E. Kent, Triangle Distributing Company; J. H. Cahill, Exhibitors Film Exchange; and Herbert M. Osborn, Pathe, Inc.

A number of matters of direct interest to exhibitors and exchange managers alike were discussed. The biggest project of the day was the proposal to get on the road a competent motion picture operator to instruct newly made operators. There has been great deal of complaint from the exchange managers in the manner in which films have been handled on the road. This has been with new operators put on the machines to replace old operators who had been called in the draft. These inexperienced men have been doing poor work on the machines.

The idea is to conduct an educational campaign all through the territory. Not only will the operators be told of better ways to handle the films, but exhibitors and others will be told how best to ship films so that they can be made to the active and delay the return of this film. A copy will be made to Washington with a minimum of delay. The express agents will be notified and the expressman will impress upon them the need for following shipping instructions to the letter. Various managers have been doing poor work on the machines.

Where it is found that a machine is reponsible for stripping films or otherwise damaging them the exhibitor is to be told of the trouble and asked to remedy it. There is little doubt but that they will be able to get along in this way. The first move is to get a copy of the Universal Film Company, will represent the interests of this company.

There was quite a discussion of the plan to present to former members of the motion picture film industry now in the service of the cigarette, tobacco and other similar industries. It was decided that the organization should go further and that what would as possible employment be found for depend-ts of the men-dead soldiers who were up to date, and such other relief as consistent with the aims and views of the organization.

The membership of the organization is as follows. Sidney B. Lust, Super Films Attractions; Herbert M. Osborn, Pathe; H. C. Lutz, Mayflower; Sidney B. Lust, Triangle; Abe Drecker, Exhibitors' Film; Herbert E. Elder, General Film; Oscar A. Garelick, Exhibitors-Lasky; S. E. Kent, Metro; R. B. Smelter, World Pictures; Mr. Wilson, V.L.-S.E.; Vivian F. Whita-

Building, Washington, D. C.

Need Full Address on Letters.

The failure of out-of-town exhibitors to place their orders at the correct address of the exchanges in Washington, D. C., for which such letters are intended, is resulting in a number of complaints and disappointment. Letters not having the street and number of the addressee are being returned to the shipper by the Post Office due to the heavy increase of poorly addressed mail.

There are about thirty or forty men in the local postoffice who do nothing but return letters. There are many thousands of newcomers in the city and this number is added to daily, with the arrival of many transients. The postoffice section to which such letters are referred is literally swamped and delays must necessarily occur. A number of exhibitors have been advised when sending orders for the booking of pictures that if they will take care to use care in addressing the envelope in which the orders are sent. They are told not to expect rapid treatment, but the exchange may be the best known in the city, yet the letter may come into the hands of some one who is not an employee (or someone who does not use common sense). It may be around the postoffice for many days before the searcher gets the proper address. No matter where the exchange is located, when a full name of the person or firm to whom addressed, the street and number of his or its location, and the city and state.

Newark News Letter

By Jacob J. Kalter, 25 Cranford Place, Newark, N. J.

Kridel Gains Control of Loew's.

M. KRIDEL, manager of the Goodwin Theater, 332 Broad street, Newark, N. J., has gained control of Loew's, theater, 99 Springfield avenue, and is now the manager. This change will be opened August 1st. Mr. Kridel is represented on the Newark branch of the National Motion Picture World that the theater will be owned by a company under the corporate title of J. E. Kridel. The J. E. Kridel, the name is none other than Herman F. Jans, president of the New Jersey Metro exchange.

The playhouse has heretofore been under the control of Marcus Loew, who used it as combination vaudeville and moving picture theater. The Springfield avenue house was Loew's only Newark interest, but he intends re-establishing himself in this city. In a communication to the theatrical editor of the Morning Ledger, Mr. Loew intimates that he is negotiating for the control of a large downtown house.

The theater, over which Mr. Kridel will preside, is of rather recent construction, and furnished with all conveniences. The seating capacity is 1,346. Mr. Kridel said that he had not as yet decided on a name for the theater, although rumor and newspaper talk report that it would be called the Globe. Frank Jeffryes, of Crestwood, N. Y., will be the resident manager.

Lyric, Newark, Closed.

The Lyric, 211 Market street, Newark, has been closed for the summer season. According to Dr. R. C. Tunison is the owner and manager of the showhouse.

Criterion, Camden, Incorporates.

Incorporating capitalization of $100,000, the Criterion Company has filed articles of Incorporation. Kalghn & Wol-verton, of Third and Market streets, Camden, are listed as statutory agents. The concern will conduct amusement places.

The incorporators include William E. Dar-man. Howard Knight and Harry E. Richman.

R. S. Clark With Pathe.

R. S. Clark, formerly with the General Film Corporation, is now in charge of the sales staff of the Newark office of Pathe, 6-8 Mechanic street. Bobby will cover the entire New Jersey theatre trade, thus mak-

"THE GIRL IN HIS HOUSE"
Earle Williams Appears in Vitagraph Photoplay from Machine Made Plot

Reviewed by Edward Weitze1.

SLOW action all through the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, The Girl in His House, offers to accentuate the machine made quality of the plot. Harold MacGrath, author of the novel, is too skilled a craftsman to put a lot of interesting material in his story, and the love interest will satisfy the most gossipy taste for romance. The action of the heroine's father in refusing ever to look upon her because her mother died and she came into the world and then of robbing his employer half his fortune so that the girl may live in luxury is rather too far fetched. The scene where the hero comes to get his mother's jewels which are kept in the attic of his own house and is held up at the point of a revolver by this same young girl who is living in this house and who has suspicion that the masked man is the engaging young fellow who has offered her hand and a fortune to her, somewhat strained. Love's eyes are supposed to be keen, and the marked mannerism of Earle Williams, who plays the part of the girl, would betray him at once.

James Armitage, having been jilted by Clara Wenda, who is reigning favor of an aged millionaire, turns over his estate to his lawyer and goes to Asia. Six years later he learns that the lawyer has not only fallen in love with the girl in his house, but has married her. Armitage has married the young man hastens home. Once there, he makes several discoveries: first, the strange young girl is living in his house; second, that his lawyer has used the power of attorney to rob him and sell his house, and third, that he no longer loves the rich widow. He also learns that his lawyer is the father of the strange young girl and that he (Armitage) is greatly smitten with her. The solution of the mystery is simple. For that. The picture ends with a bridal couple driving up to their new home.

Good judgment on the part of the director. Edmund Mills, surrounds the picture with a well bred air and the acting of the cast is satisfactory. Earle Williams has never done anything better than his performance of James Armitage, and Grace Darmond is sufficiently attractive as Doris, James Abrahams, Harry Lindale, Irene Rich and Margaret Allen act the remaining characters.

"SAY! YOUNG FELLOW"
Douglas Fairbanks Rattles Through His Latest Artcraf Picture at High Speed.

Reviewed by Edward Weitze.

JOSEPH HENABERY, who wrote and directed "Say! Young Fellow," the latest Douglas Fairbanks Artcraf picture, did not put very much speed into his story. The metronomic method that keeps it moving rapidly. One of the best features of the plot is the "bunch" that appears to the hero at the decisive moments in his career and, starting off with the words of the title, gives him sound advice. Excellent acting by the entire cast and skilful work by the director succeeded in making an ordinary story vastly interesting. The dashing, dashing finish is valuable only for the chance it gives Douglas to show his surprising ability to perform stunts and risk his neck without dropping any portion of his engaging smile. The love interest and the touches of real sentiment are convincing, and there are many laughs in the five reels.

Douglas Fairbanks, in the role of a cub reporter for the New York Herald, gives an exhibition of nerve and muscular development that the ordinary news gatherer could never possibly match. The regular man on the paper having failed, the cub offers to get an interview with a wealthy business man of the cutthroat type. He succeeds by climbing into the financier's house through the second story window and leaping on to him while the man of money is in bed. His next assignment takes him to a small country town, and when he leaves the place he has straightened out the business affairs and the love romance of a sweet old maid and a fine old manufacturer of the place, fought a gang of imported strong-armed cutthroats financier in an attempt to steal the business belonging to the old maid and her sweetheart, and secured the prettiest girl in town for himself.

The acting of the star is as spirited and full of ginger as ever, and every Fairbanks fan knows what that means. Marion Lorne, Frank Campeau, Eddy, a Chapman and James Neil are the representatives of the sweetheart, the villain, the old maid and the man she finally marries.

"THE VENUS MODEL"
Mabel Normand Is Excellent in Goldwyn Photoplay That Has Many Pleading Moments.

Reviewed by Edward Weitze.

IN HER latest Goldwyn picture, "The Venus Model," Mabel Normand makes it clear that a simple story about an everyday sort of girl can be very interesting when carefully acted and produced. For one thing, the story never gets out of its class. It starts in to tell of a bright little working girl who has brains enough to help herself up in the world and the picture never departs from its theme. None of the situations are impossible, and there is a pleasant, healthful air about "The Venus Model" that will hold for many friends.

As Kitty O'Brien, the young factory hand, Mabel Normand gives a clean-cut performance that is without a touch of extravagance. Kitty is employed by John Braddock, a maker of bathing suits who is on the brink of failure on account of not keeping up to date with his goods. The girl has a natural bent for designing and draws the model of a swimming costume that even her employer can see is smart and snappy. A pattern suit is made and Kitty offers to put it on and exhibit it in a store window. Two young men catch a glimpse of the new model and rush to the factory to be the first to place an order. Braddock is so overcome by the success of the garment that he has an attack of heart failure and is ordered away by his physician.

The new designer takes hold of the business with the help of the foreman and runs it with great success. Paul Braddock, her employer's son, has been expelled from college. When he comes to the factory to meet his father and find Kitty in charge he takes a position, under an assumed name, and is on sweeping out until the new boss promotes him to office boy. A handsome buyer who takes Kitty out to supper and a business-like young woman who has a number of compromising letters from Paul get in the way when he discovers that he is in love with Kitty. That quick-witted young man—a real natured office boy and he is installed at his father's desk when the older Braddock returns. Kitty also disposes of the toe-bustnesslike young woman and is made the life partner of Paul.

Rodin, playing as Paul, Abe Francis as John Braddock, Alfred Hickman as the buyer, Edward Elkas as Briggs, Una Trevelyn as Hattie Fenhaw, and Nadia Gary as Dimples are the prominent members of the support.

"HELL BENT." Universal Presents Harry Carey in Offerings of Strong Harry Carey and Jack Ford again prove themselves a good producing team in their Western concocion, "Hell Bent" made at the Universal studio. The entire six reels are full of interest, denote a certain familiarity of plot material. They have learned the value of staking picturesque locations and incidental effects, which they make the most of in this pleasing release. This presents another episode in the life of "Cheyenne" Harry, one of the best yet shown. He appears suddenly in the town of Rawhide, where he invades the dance hall, and proceeds to a room upstairs by thrusting, a man out of it at the point of a gun, and proceeds to identify himself as a member of the community. The town at the time is in a state of exacer-ment over the robberies committed by the Bean Boys, angers of desperadoes.

Cheyenne Harry makes friends with a girl who has entered the dance hall unwillingly, in the role of an entertainer. He saves her from rough treatment. Later it develops that her brother is a member of the Bean Boys and Harry saves him from disgrace.

There are any number of good riding scenes in this and certain big Western effects which are unusual. The situations on the desert in the final reel, during the sand storm, are also strong.

The cast includes Neva Gerber as the girl who enters the dance hall, and Duke Lee and Joseph Harris in other roles.

"THE EAGLE." Monroe Salisbury plays Leading Role in Bluebird Offering of Thrilling Type. Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

This five-reel Bluebird subject, adapted from a novel by Edna Ferber, is from a story by Ethel Hill and produced by Elmer Clifton, gives Monroe Salisbury the interesting role of a man of mystery. He appears among the residents of a certain Western town as John Gregory, but the same time is identified early in the story as a badly wanted outlaw, known as "The Eagle." The deceptions of "The Eagle" are all directed against a wealthy mine owner named Struth, whom he has repeatedly and during most of his career.

It appears later in the story that

John Gregory has a private grudge against this individual, who had formerly thrown his mother and himself out of the house. Gregory has been on an absence for personal gain, as he makes no use of the stolen gold, but is looking solely for revenge.

The development of this story has been most satisfactorily looked after considering the fact that the plot material is not new. Same splendid dramatic effects have been obtained, particularly in the court scenes, owing largely to the proper handling of suspense and to the fine acting of Mr. Salisbury. He has the faculty of getting the most out of the various situations and of always keeping within the character he is playing. In this instance he is well assisted by Edna Earle, who plays the role of Lucy, Miss Earle, after playing very quietly during the opening reels, fairly rouses the observer with her breakneck ride in the final scenes. She brings new thrills to the familiar "averted hanging" situation.

"HER BODY IN BOND." Universal Feature Presents Max Murray in Story of Emotional Type. Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

It would be hard to devise a more despicable form of villainy than is emyloyed by Harlan E. Quinn, the predatory male in this number. Having set his heart upon the wife of a vuldile performer, he gains access to the wife's letters from her husband and alters them in order to induce her to leave her husband Joe Tildon, has been sent West for his health and Quinn forges various requests for money in the letters to the wife. In the meantime stands ready to give her the money on request, at the price of her husband.

This is the main situation in this five-reel story of emotional quality, one of the strong points of which Max Murray has found expression for her particular style of acting. That the husband returns from the West, restored to health, in time to give the villain the punishment he deserves, makes an effective close to the narrative.

The subject, which was written by H. Sheridan Hickers and produced by Robert

Leonard, begins with a pleasing little prologue, introducing the leading character as a man and hero and Harlan

Quinn. Then comes the modern tale in which the principals play the roles of Joe and Peggy, and Max Murray plays the part of Peggy. He plays it so well, and Harlan plays the husband and Al Roscoe appears as Quinn. Minor roles are assumed by Paul McGuire, Mabel Harvey and Joseph Girard.

"YOU CAN'T BELIEVE EVERY-

SOCIETY gets a succession of vigorous songs andZapp in "You Can't Believe Everything," a five-part Triangle picture written by Norman Sherbrook and directed by Jack Conway. All the characters in the story are guests at a summer hotel, and a fine collection of "roters" was never gathered under one roof. Most of them spend their time in tearing one's reputation to pieces. The male beings are worse than the women, and the most heroines are in a sad condition among well-bred people, but there is no denying that the average spectator will follow the plot with close attention.

The heroine is a decidedly unconventional young woman and, either from pure curiosity or from the consequences, gives the goosus on the porch plenty of opportunities to engage in their sport. But the heroine is a young gentirnian in the most daring of bathing suits and is unfailingly indicient in almost everything. Her name is Patria Reynolds, and Gloria Carey in her role is likeable and lovable in spite of it all and is a fetching figure, whether in bathing costume of eye-arresting design or clad only in those intimate garments which are popularly supposed to be always hidden from the public eye.

Patria's excuse for appearing in this startling undress is the best in the world. The man she loves is drowning and she jumps into the lake and throws off her evening gown before plunging in and dragging her man ashore. Patria was in compromising her name, while the daughter of one of the gossips of the hotel brought in an affected air of shock. "Patria's finger puts a stop to all the talk and a bridal tour takes her away from thehotel. A novel situation of a "turning" party, with all the guests in bath-suits.

"You Can't Believe Everything" is well produced and the cinematography by Elgin Leisle, Darrell Foss, Jack Richardson, Edward Foss, George Hernandez, and Minna Shoemaker are the prominent members of the support.

"CLOSIN' IN." William Desmond Heads Cast in Triangle Melodrama of Regulation Western Type. Reviewed by Edward Weitzen.

The model for "Closin' In," a five-part Triangle melodrama, was many times in the writers for the script. Joseph F. Poland is the author of the story and is the author of the script. Directed by J. W. McLaughlin and photographed by Steve Markiewicz, the story is a study of the benefit of a good cast headed by William Desmond, and the general result is an entertaining play. Starting in a small town in the United States, the action shifts to a mining camp in British Columbia and all the gangsters and the lives of the untamed Northwest, with its half-breeds, Indians and hard-hatted workmen. girl is introduced and desperate fight is one of the thrills.

Jack Brandon, the hero, is told by his physician that he has cancer and may die at any moment. Jack is in love with his employer's daughter, and when he discovers that his employer has robbed the bank of which he is president the young chap offers to take the blame on himself, since he has only a few months to live and has determined to go away and die in secret. Jack's offer is accepted and Jack's sweetheart, whose name is Lillie, gets herself engaged after being assured by the company surgeon that her heart is now as sound as Jack's.

Banker Carlton having lost all his money through bad speculation, his son and daughter go to British Columbia when the news of big gold strike at Jack's camp. Burt, the Carlton boy, hates Jack for his supposed crime and will not speak.
to him when they meet. Barbara Carlton attracts the attention of a half-breed Frenchman, Judd, and considering to marry him for the sake of her parents. La Roche, the mine owner, is already married to an Indian, and Jack, who still loves Barbara, saves her from being deceived. Clear skies appear and the story plunges into the heart of the mountain, where the romance of crime, and a honeymoon for the pair is easily forecast.

The American capital as Jack. There has been a marked improvement in this actor’s work of late. He acts with greater conviction and is more convincing in every way. Maud Wayne as Barbara, Darrell Foss as Burt, Louis Durham as La Roche and Herbert Barry, are the important members of the cast.

"THE SCARLET ROAD"
Gladys Brockwell Picture Has Sordid Beginning, but Gets A Good Measure of Life.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

The Brockwell picture, "The Scarlet Road," has a brand new story which, while not very startling, is a backwoods and termed "Bohemian," too sordid to be deeply interesting, gets a touch of a real and well worth-while. Beginning the mid- dle of the story that is wholly delightful, because it seems true.

Maud Wayne is a fine real actress, and even with the rather heavy burden she is forced to carry by the unpleasant trend of the story, she accomplished the impossible through personality and art in the way of getting a sense of actual human beings out of the sordidness of the characters.

It is well supported by Charles Clary (in the heavy part) and some of the lesser characters which are fortunate in having Betty Shade as "Tiny," for that very attractive and thoroughly human character gives real life to the story in time to save it for the leading woman just before it is laid away. When one sees Tiny, one feels that she has been doped and betrayed all around. The story without Tiny and Miss Brockwell’s acting it is on a different plane wholly and has not only tragic human interest that cuts life to the quick, but charm and novelty. These lift it above the average offering and among the especially noteworthy films.

The script by Charles Kenyon exemplifies what is meant when they say the July is the July of all years. The truly sordid is one level deadness, and there is no appeal to one in the story. A touch of tragedy. The thing that weakens this picture is the heroine’s denial of real love for a man, Alton Franklin, who is interesting in his way, while the man whom she knows is disgusting. The mistake was in making us see that she knew it. This touch makes the author’s whole Bohemia unreal.

NEW MUTT AND JEFF CARTOONS
"Meeting Theda Bara" and "Mutt and Jeff and The 75-Mile Gun" Are Lauded

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

PROBABLY as amusing as any of this famous cartoon series is "Meeting Theda Bara," in which Jeff, after getting an inheritance, goes into the motion picture business with Mutt and they look about for a good vampire. Of course, Theda is the ideal, and while they want her, Mutt knows that she is under contract and is to be thought of. Jeff perseveres and Mutt gets a knockout when he is abducted and held to Theda’s friendly and taking dinner together in a restaurant.

"Mutt and Jeff" and the "75-Mile Gun.

Mutt and Jeff prove excellent camouflage, and dressed up as a hooker and a fun police man, are the create Prince, the Kaiser, Hindenburg and a troop of boches. Just how this is accomplished is more amusing than any description of it could be. It is good entertainment.

"ANNEXING BILL"
Five-Real Pathe-Astra Release Features Gladys Hulette in Light Comedy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McLiravy.

This five-real Pathe-Astra number, "Annexing Bill," presents an amusing and light frame in which Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale play the leading roles, with Mark Smith and Margaret Green in the supporting cate. The story was written by Edgar Franklin, directed by Albert Parker, and produced by Astra Film Corporation.

The plot material in this is of a slight but enjoyable sort. The humor is of a mildly amusing kind, and continues to hold up throughout the entire subject, giving the production something of the character of a breezy, well-written short story.

Gladys Hulette plays the role of Enid, a girl artist, whose character is made more interesting by her friend, Mrs. Frayne, on Washington square. Her lover is Billy Dow, a well favored young lawyer, who wants very much to marry Enid. But when he hears that she has just inherited a million dollars from an aunt who went down on the steamship Palamick, Billy refuses to ask for her hand. He does not believe in marrying for money. Enid arranges to turn her funds over to George Frayne to invest for her in the hope of losing both. Mrs. Frayne says he is bound to do. Billy in the meanwhile is arrested while trying to set a fire in which Gladys Hulette and Franklin gets. Then Enid’s aunt unexpectedly turns up and claims the million.

"TINSEL"
World-Picture Presents Kitty Gordon in Story of Smart Society.

Reviewed by Robert C. McLiravy.

This five-real World-Picture based on a story by Kay E. Thompson, and directed by Oscar Apfel tells an entertaining and strongly presented narrative of the amusing social type of character. The effect of the whole is artistic and satisfying, and the observer feels that its lesson is a valuable one to members and daughters, as the press sheers adver tise.

It is rather unfair to skeletonize the plot of this sort of a tale, for the reason that the setting forth of the plot in a few words gives the impression that it may not be worth while. While the motive is slight in this instance the good team work of an agreeable cast of performers holds the interest firmly.

Bluebird Presents Grace Cunard and Herbert Prior in The First Play Date Handling with After-the-War Conditions. A Gripping Story of What Will Come.

Cast:
Grace Cunard
Herbert Prior Directed by Joseph De Grasse.

The Story: The plot has saved from death at the hands of a German firing squad, believes that he owes his life to Captain Gerbeau, officer of the squad. Sometime later at a musical performance, Gerbeau sees Grace and her opera singer and boyhood sweethearts, and after the affair he learns that her great love for him prompted her to sacrifice her honor so that his life might be spared. In proof she shows him the child—her and Wetz's. Wetz also calls on Grace, and, in the young girl, is relating his story to him the wife of the German officer who had followed him and who had heard Gerbeau's story fires upon him and kills him. The law refuses to proceed against the avenger of Wetz's, wickedness, and when she expresses a desire to take the child all the barriers of the love of Grace and of Gerbeau are swept away.

Feature: Grace Cunard as Gerbeau and Edward Cecil as Gerbeau.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Woman's sacrifice for the Man She Loves Brings Redemption Upon Him Who Betrayed Her.

Stunt Suggestions: This story should be told mostly through newspaper and program. Do not attempt Gerbeau much of the story, but announce that it deals with the problem of what will happen after peace is declared, when we must face the results of war conditions. Do not suggest too sensational a story and real results. Treat it frankly as a consideration of conditions we must eventually meet after near-war years. “HELL BENT”
Universal Presents Harry Carey in an Unusually Vivid Story of the Hills and Deserts.

Cast:
Harry Carey
Bill Thorson
Vester Peg Beaux
Directed by Jack Ford.

The Story: “Cheyenne” Harry, becoming involved in a shooting affair, goes to the town of Roundable, where he protects Bill Thorson from the advances of Beau. Simultaneous with the discharges of Jack, Beau's brother, from the express company, Beau receives word that a bandit, Bill, is in the Roundtable city, and to raise money to pay for her parent's transportation she goes to work in the dance hall. Jack is persuaded by Beau to become a member of the gang. Beau abducts Beau, and “Cheyenne” has gone in pursuit, is captured. Beau, with Beau as his prisoner, starts for the Rio Grande. When Jack comes into the room where “Cheyenne” is a captive he is overpowered by “Cheyenne” and forced to change clothes with him. Dress in Jack's clothes “Cheyenne” escapes, and again goes after the robber. He catches him, and, refusing to kill him, suggests that they start on a fifty mile walk across the desert to the water hole. When they reach the water hole they find that it is dry, and Beau dies. Beau meanwhile informs “Cimaron” Bill, who rescues “Cheyenne.”

The Story: Betty Lansing, daughter of the late Senator Lansing, meets Congress-man Kent through the informal introduction of smashing his automobile with the car she is driving. Kent becomes interested in her. She also attracts the attention of Francis Oakland, a wealthy idler. Kent is led to believe that Betty favors Francis, thus he refuses her marriage proposal, but determines to plead his suit, and finds acceptance. Councilman Kent's political business he breaks an appointment with Betty, and in a fit of pique she goes riding with Oakland. She causes his horse to run away when he attempts to make love, but rescues him when she sees that he is helpless. The story gets into the papers and rouses the insane jealousy of Oakland's demented wife, of whom no one knows. She escapes and attempts his life, and a second time Betty comes to the rescue. Kent is also maneuvered by gambling papers and estranges Kent. Mrs. Lansing's devotion to bridge causes her to be denounced by Kent as a gambling woman. She returns and he devotes his political persuasions to use the charge that he frequents a gambling house to print his nomination as candidate for governor. For Betty's sake he is silent, but she learns of her husband's proposal, tells the story and carries the day for Kent and herself.

Beatrice Van Mune...Rosita Marsinti
Directed by Walter Edwards.

The Story: Richard Landers and Paul Boudeaux are partners in business. They are in financial straits, and Matilda, the wife of Richard, plans to get them out of their difficulty. Paul's rich uncle, Batiste Boudeaux, has offered to give Paul $50,000 to get away from the family name, but Paul is a woman-hater, and they all agree that Batiste will not come. When the uncle arrives for a visit, Matilda tells him that she is Paul's wife. Uncle Batiste finds that Paul is the woman lover he feared, and this promise about the money, and everything seems rosy, since he is scheduled to return home that night and Richard is also out of town. The complications arise thick and fast when the uncle decides to stay for a month or so and Richard also returns to his hotel that night. The situation is, of course, finally straightened out; Paul finds a girl who changes his attitude on the woman question, and even Uncle Batiste is paired off with an enchantress.

Perry..................J. H. Gillmore
Arthur Hallam..................William Davidson
Richard Brettner.................Robert Walker
Colonel Warren..................Warren Cook
Dr. Comyns.....................W. E. Williams

Directed by Alan Crosland.

The Story: Bella Cavallo, a decy at her step-father's gambling house, is much sought after by Richard Brettner, one of the patrons. He steals in order to buy expensive presents for her, and when his thefts are discovered and he is arrested and adjudged guilty, Judge Revertor, before whom he is tried, suspends sentence because of his youth and previous good record. Later, the warden is suspected of a murder of which he is innocent, but Bella's cleverness clears his name by rounding up the real murderer. Arthur Hallam, the neurotisic nephew of the murdered man. Through Dr. Comyns, who attests the alibi, Bella meets Judge Revertor, and eventually marries him.

The Story: In an American, invents a "ray rifle." Kremlin, a German spy, is able to get the plans, has his assistant, Hugo, kidnap him and his bride. When searched, Boyd discovers the plans are gone. It develops that Paula has them, and hides them in a shade roller from which they are stolen by Hugo. Paula confesses to the bride that she is not a German spy, but is in the espionage service with her man's house is surrounded by United States secret service men, and Hugo reveals the fact that he is also in the secret service. Kremlin is shot, and happiness comes to Paula and Hugo, who have learned to love each other and to the fact that each thought the other was an enemy.

Feature: Dorothy Dalton as Paula Harris, Dorothy Wilding as Hilda Boyd.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Mystery Drama Showing Hun Intrigue and the German Spies in America Forwards to Kaiser's Dirty Work Meet Disaster.

 Hun Plotting Outwitted by Clever Girl Who Placed Her Trust to Justice. Popular Story, "The Triple Cross." Brought to Screen Under New Name. Mystery Plot Developing Thrills as It Speeds to Surprise Conclusion.

Deep Mystery, Sudden Thrills, and Sensational Episodes Feature Great Melodrama.

Stunt Suggestions: In your newspaper work make what capital you can of the fact that this story is especially necessary since the title has been changed. This is a strangeдреск service work, and it is melodrama rather than propaganda (though it throws an interesting light on old methods), and should be advertised as such. If you can get hold of someone who can paint, a black man suit and an outsearch-light, paste an outline of the Kaiser on white papered fences and letter the title, house and playing date in white. For house art use an outsearch-light, paint a black horse and carriage on searchlight, paste an outline of the Kaiser on the lens, and place so that the shadow is thrown on the sidewalk. Invite your patrons to come and walk on the Kaiser's shadow.

"Let The Simplex Twins Draw Your Crowd"

If you christened a nigger-baby "Snow White" that wouldn't change the color of its skin, would it?

On the same principle, there's no use of adopting the name of some famous Simplex-Projection Theatre if you haven't got Simplex Projection.

The real name of your House is written on the screen by the Twins in the Projection Room.

If that name is "NEVER AGAIN" the Simplex Twins will put a better name there. They will beckon to the crowds to come again and again and then many more times.

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship
Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good clean entertainment... We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures.

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystalize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will live up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Concerning

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

4500 What? 4500 Paid Subscribers!
An actual, bona-fide, paid-in-advance, genuine, confirmable, sworn-to-by-affidavit, dyed-in-the-wool, glory-be-to-Jupiter, monthly circulation. In addition to these 4500 paid subscribers, add 1500 surplus copies to take care of our news-stand circulation in the largest film centers of Latin America and our local needs, and you see revealed thus before you that the healthy, vigorous, actual

Monthly Total Circulation of CINE-MUNDIAL is 6000

The enormity of Cine-Mundial's success is best reflected by comparison with other of the general Spanish and Portuguese export periodicals, none of which, though their total circulation may vary from 10,000 to 22,000, make any attempts to claim more than a meager proportion of paid subscribers.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN?
It shows that Latin America and Spanish-speaking Europe have been successfully penetrated by American-made film productions. It shows that Cine-Mundial and the New York film exporters know what they are doing. It proves that Cine-Mundial should receive the monthly advertising support of every wide-awake film concern.

Cine-Mundial takes this opportunity of thanking its many advertisers for their announcements in its coming July edition, now on the press.
Each issue of Cine-Mundial has been growing by leaps now for more than a year. But the jumps in advertising, editorial, news and service pages in our July, 1918, edition is more than a mere jump. It is a leap, a bound, a veritable vault.
Three months ago Cine-Mundial knew it was growing rapidly with 2,700 paid subscribers. In the last 100 days, however, 1,800 odd more subscriptions have been paid for—now 4,500—altogether 6,000—and STILL GROWING!

New York, March 23, 1918.

Attention J. C. Hornstein, Manager

Dear Mr. Hornstein:

We have just installed the VELVET GOLD FIBRE SCREEN at our Heights Theatre—181st Street and Wadsworth Avenue, New York City. This screen has replaced another Gold Fibre Screen and we wish to state that the screen you have just installed, together with the two Power's 6-B Cameragraph machines and special lenses, are giving us better projection than we have EVER had heretofore.

Very truly yours,

L. & B. AMUSEMENT CO., Inc.,

Bigger Today Than Ever Before

"The Kaiser"

"The Beast of Berlin"

With the smashing Italian victory, plus a million of our irresistible fighters on the battle-front, "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin," has doubled and tripled in value. Positively BIGGER TODAY THAN EVER, and admitted by thousands of Exhibitors to be the most amazing money-getter since picture-making began. There is

No Picture like it in the Whole World's Market

From every corner of the Nation—trade press, newspapers, critics and millions of people—has come an avalanche of praise of this huge masterpiece. As propaganda, it smashes every precedent—as thrilling dramatics, it will stand for years untouched—evidence that JEWEL accepts nothing but the very biggest in money-getting attractions.

"It's a Jewel Production"
SIMPLY amazing have been the receipts on "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin." Records of actual cash taken in on every-length runs of big productions, up to a week and two weeks, have been smashed, obliterated, annihilated, shattered into smitheresens!

Has put hundreds of Exhibitors on Easy Street
Hundreds of Exhibitors who have been only drilling along have suddenly made enough money with "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin," to put them on Easy Street. It has brought home a first bank-roll to scores who never dreamed that so much money could be netted on any picture. Many have already played it three times—and we can show you money records challenging credulity, yet every record is TRUE—with facts and figures to back it up.

"It's a Jewel Production"
PUBLICITY in staggering volume has flooded the Nation on "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin." Papers heretofore hidebound and conservative have thrown their columns wide open on this production. Publicity from quarters never heard of before has deluged the JEWEL Offices—advertising this huge triumph to every man, woman and child in the United States.

No picture Ever Produced even Begins to Approach the Publicity given "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin"

This means every word it says. Exhibitors who never dreamed of paying the price, have thanked us in letters of congratulation for insisting that they book it, paying the highest prices in the history of the business for a picture of this length.

"It's a Jewel Production"
IMITATORS, watching every move of JEWEL PRODUCTIONS, have tried in vain to copy this picture's points of pulling power. Copy cats, realizing the simply unheard-of cash business of "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin," are now offering the "Just-as-good"—"The nearly-like-it"—the substitute. Yet not one has come within miles of "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin." And Exhibitors have not been caught by the "just-as-good" conversation. To a man they still say that—

The Original still Stands
Supreme as the Most Amazing
Money-Getter of the Age

We have mountains of letters on the almost unbelievable sums of money taken in on "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin." Scores have played it two, three and four times—many, for a full week on REPEAT. Exhibitors themselves have even sold this production to brother Exhibitors. Your nearest JEWEL Exchange will tell you more—loads more. Wire today for booking—and demand repeat booking dates later.

"It's a Jewel Production"
That's the Date We're Thinking About!

WE are not concerned with next September. It is almost here. It's a year from next September that we are thinking about. We are planning far into the future.

On September 1st, 1919, Paramount and Artcraft Pictures must show a substantial year's growth in prestige, in artistry, in popularity with exhibitor and patron.

On September 1st, 1919, our organization must hold even more of the honestly-won good will of the exhibitor.

There is only one way to do this. We must devote all our energy toward giving the Service essential to the prosperity of the exhibitor, we must bend every effort to provide him with the moving pictures that will bring to him steadily increasing profits.

We have promised the greatest year's output ever announced by a moving picture producer. Now our entire organization is out to make good that promise.
Lila Lee

"The Cruise of the Make-Believe"

HERE comes Lila Lee, the newest sensation in motion pictures. Her first one will be "The Cruise of the Make-Believe," from Tom Gallon's joyous tale. She's wonderful, this dark-eyed little sprite, and the exhibitors who first show her pictures will share in the glory the public will shower upon her.
Goldwyn's decision to make in excess of fifty productions in its second year is due to the pressure of the nation's exhibitors.

The twenty-six productions of our first year created a bi-weekly Goldwyn standard.

Every second week—or for one, two or three days in every second week—the new Goldwyn production then released gave the theatre in which it was played a tone and quality that at once brought increased business to the box-office.

Exhibitors soon found themselves puzzled over filling in the "Goldwyn day" or days of the in-between weeks.

Their public patronage sensed the tremendous difference between Goldwyn Pictures and "other pictures."

No man has to be hit with the force of a pneumatic riveter to feel a truth that affects his own pocketbook.

Before Goldwyn had been in business ninety days exhibitors were making the demand: "Give us a Goldwyn Picture at least once a week as a guarantee of sustained quality and patronage for our houses."

Our Goldwyn exhibitor patronage grew and grew until now there are in excess of 5,000 active contract accounts in force.

In time of war, at the height of the greatest crisis in human history, at a time when business "jumps at shadows" and takes as few steps as possible, the inspiring confidence of the exhibitors of America has forced Goldwyn to double its annual output of productions.

Great indeed is the law of supply and demand!
Goldwyn is Not Content With Quantity—Quality Comes First.

The average motion picture viewpoint would be: "Oh, well, since the exhibitors want fifty pictures, we will give them fifty pictures."

Goldwyn has equipped itself to offer in excess of fifty productions next year.

Geraldine Farrar will have more dramatic and unusual stories than she has ever had before. We are avoiding the costume plays that the public taste now rejects.

Pauline Frederick will do the modern emotional dramas through which she won instant popularity when she came from the stage to the screen.

Rex Beach is doing for you what he has never done before—offering six Rex Beach productions in one year. Annually for five years his new picture has meant a profit-making festival for exhibitors.

Mabel Normand, with unrivalled talents and millions of admirers, will be presented in comedy-dramas, with chief emphasis laid upon the comedy.

Mae Marsh, having drawn tremendous patronage for exhibitors in "Polly of the Circus," "The Cinderella Man" and other big successes, will be starred again in emotional and romantic dramas.

Madge Kennedy, who won instant screen popularity, will greatly increase her appeal and drawing power in dramatic comedies like those in which she has proved herself a box-office money-maker.

Tom Moore has been made a star by you—the exhibitors of the country. His nation-wide success is assured in advance by the public's and your own liking for him.

Here you find no "deadwood" stars. Each of these personalities possesses the power to stand alone; each has challenge and a tremendous following.

And each will appear in productions of the quality and type that have made the Goldwyn name the best known name in motion pictures in the brief period of twelve months.

Think of having comedies for your patrons that are made on the same careful and lavish scale with which some producers make their big productions. Comedies with the fire and humors of life in them; comedies that are not thrown together in haste, but are built skilfully to appeal both to your sense of fun and your intelligence. The instant success both with large and small exhibitors of Exhibitor investments must be protected. This is essential to the future welfare of the industry.

Protecting the Exhibitor's Investment

Every wide awake exhibitor, be he large or small, must appreciate this.

Mr. Roth of the California Theatre in San Francisco, and Mr. Miller of the Lyric Theatre in Plymouth, Pa., are Co-partners in the Hodkinson Plan.

As far-sighted business men, they are convinced that the Hodkinson Co-partnership Plan offers them the only rock-solid protection possible.

When two men, whose investments differ greatly in size, agree so closely—exhibitors, large or small, the country over—should supplement the thinking they are now doing by action.

Little Talks with Foreign Buyers—No. 15

By

President

PLEASE don't be finicky because shipping restrictions threaten. Be calm and don't mind changes in the existing order of things. Adjust yourself to them. Remember that conditions aren't normal, that the world is in very much of an upset. A war, involving the lives and destinies of a billion human beings, is going on. And some folks expect "business as usual!" Reasonable persons expect nothing of the kind, and are willing to gladly bear hardships and restrictions as long as they can stay in business. And foreign buyers of American film are assured of enough American film to keep running. They have no reason for complaint, therefore! They mustn't gloom. The earth and American films aren't coming to an end YET! They must remember that America is fighting for its life as a nation—that it is fighting to WIN—and that what is inconvenience in normal times is all in the day's work now.

Which Would You Choose

A GOOD PRODUCTION OF PROVED VALUE? or AN UNKNOWN PRODUCT OF THE PICTURE MILL?

One of the things you have learned is that a good picture will always stand repetition, whereas a poor picture makes no impression at any time. Many well-known successes have been greater sources of revenue later than they were at the outset.

"THE BIG SIX"

give you a chance to obtain in one collection, under one agreement, independently of all other bookings, six of the greatest productions in which have appeared since they have been screen favorites—the six productions which more than 5,000 exhibitors have practically unanimously declared to be the pictures they most desired to show again.

BARA

"THE BONDMAN"
"A SOLDIER'S OATH"
"THE PLUNDERER"

FARNUM

"A FOOL THERE WAS"
"THE CLEMENCEAU CASE"
"THE TWO ORPHANS"

And no one who has looked over the remarkable casts but realizes, without being told, that here are players no one manager of today could possibly assemble; that in these BIG SIX are more famous and better actors than now are to be seen in twelve ordinary pictures!

Comparatively few of the whole number of persons patronizing picture theatres today have seen any of THE BIG SIX, and those who have seen them will set the pace in the direction of the theatre that advertises its intention to show them. No! even a boche bomb raid could keep people away.

This is the time to sign for a clean-up. SOMEBODY IS GOING TO PROFIT BIG FROM THE OPPORTUNITY WILLIAM FOX IS NOW OFFERING. It will either be you or your competitor, and your chance of getting in is as good as the other fellow's. If you'll wire or write to your nearest Branch Exchange, WILLIAM FOX WILL DO THE REST.
GRAB IT!

Twenty Reasons

FOR BOOKING

"THE BIG SIX"

1—5000 exhibitors have requested that they be released.
2—They are the cream of the Fox output during three years.
3—They established William Fox as a producer.
4—They swept the country by storm.
5—They hold all records for big box office receipts.
6—They are known to exhibitors and public everywhere.
7—All who have seen them will be eager to see them again.
8—Those who have seen them are their best advertisement.
9—They will attract millions who did not go to picture shows prior to this year.
10—Good pictures will always stand repetition.
    —They are new productions in every sense of the word.
12—They have been re-edited and retitled.
13—They have been shortened and speeded up.
14—New scenes have been added.
15—They are in 5 reels or about 4500 feet.
16—They have more famous actors than now are seen in 12 average pictures.
17—They are the biggest productions available for summer business.
18—They absolutely assure a big clean-up.
19—They can be sold to packed houses at advanced prices.
20—They can be booked independently of all other productions.

NAILED!

An Open Letter to the Committee on Ways and

Dear Sir: June 28, 1918.

On June 18th, 1918, Mr. Patrick A. Powers of the Universal Film Company appeared before your Committee as one of a delegation appointed by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

In appointing Mr. Powers as one of its delegates it was the purpose of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to lay before your Committee certain facts relative to the film footage tax. It appears, however, that Mr. Powers took advantage of the opportunity thus afforded him to misrepresent the relationship between Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Mr. William Randolph Hearst; and also to question the good faith of the Committee on Public Information in awarding to this Company the contract for the release of the ALLIES' OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW.

By reference to "the Pathe-Hearst Company" and "Hearst-Pathe," etc., and other clever insinuations, Mr. Powers apparently left your Committee under the impression that there is such a company or organization actually in existence. Mr. Powers also informed your Committee that Pathe is a French Company.

It is the purpose of this letter to correct any false impression which Mr. Powers may have given and also to make clear to you the circumstances under which the contract for the release of the ALLIES' OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW was awarded to this Company.

In the first place Pathe Exchange, Inc., is not a French Company. It is an American corporation, incorporated under the laws of the State of New York and has no connection direct or indirect, remote or contingent with Mr. Hearst or any organization with which he is connected, nor does Mr. Hearst directly or indirectly own or control one single share of stock in this Company.

Long before the United States entered the war Pathe Exchange, Inc., entered into a contract with the International Film Service, a corporation controlled by the Hearst interests, for the release of news items in motion pictures photographed by International. As one of the considerations for the contract it was agreed that the news weekly should be known as "Hearst-Pathe News." Under the terms of said contract this Company reserved the absolute right to edit, cut, interchange and title all pictures submitted to it by International for release, at its discretion, and this we have consistently done.

In other words, our sole relation with the Hearst subsidiary is to distribute films made by it in just the same way that we distribute films made by other producing companies.

Relative to the contract for the release of the ALLIES' OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW, I beg to say that this matter was first taken up with us in conjunction with the Universal Film Company and the Mutual Film Company, the proposition submitted being that the three companies should jointly release the official war pictures; and the amount payable by each of said companies was calculated in proportion to the number of positive prints of news reels distributed weekly by the respective companies. The terms proposed were accepted by a representative of each of said companies, the Universal being represented by Mr. Cochrane. The agreement was signed by Mr. Hart as Director of the Division of Films and also by this Company, and we have in our possession, at this time, the original signed agreement; the duplicate thereof being in the possession of the Committee on Public Information. When the time arrived for the final execution of the agreement by the Universal Film Company, it, for reasons unknown to us, declined to do so. Competitive bids were thereafter called for, for the release of the ALLIES' OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW and this Company among other leading film companies presented its bid. It did not seek to make any profit out of the transaction and in fact we named a figure which, as experience has shown us, will result in actual loss. We of course know nothing relative to the bids submitted by the other film companies, but the contract was awarded to this Company in open competition with others.

When Mr. Powers appeared before your Committee on June 18th Mr. Treadway asked him whether the Universal Film Company was prevented from procuring war films.

Mr. Powers replied that he could not get a war picture except from the Creel Committee and indicated that the Committee on Public Information had given this Company a monopoly, stating:

“He (Creel) has allotted to one concern the exclusive privilege of releasing these pictures on the arrangement he has made. I do not know what bid these people (meaning Pathe) made but I know they have secured the exclusive right to publish these pictures;”

and further that his Company was unable to secure any official war pictures: that such pictures could not be shown unless obtained from Mr. Creel or purchased from Pathe, and he even went so far as to state that he had endeavored to buy such films from this Company.

In the issue of the Motion Picture World (post dated) July 6th, 1918, the Universal Film Company carries in its advertisement the following extract from a letter from Mr. Charles S. Hart:

“Each week beginning June 3rd we will place at your disposal OFFICIAL WAR FILMS that we consider valuable to the news weeklies. You will be charged $1.00 per foot for each foot of the film used by you.”

I want to bring especially to your attention these two contradictory statements. Mr. Powers represented to your Committee on June 18th that his Company could not obtain official War Pictures. In his advertisement he quotes a letter received from Mr. Hart several weeks there-tofore agreeing to place at his Company’s disposal OFFICIAL WAR FILMS.

It is only reasonable to assume that Mr. Powers, as Treasurer of the Universal Film Company, had full knowledge of the facts stated in the advertisement referred to when he appeared before your Committee on June 18th, 1918.

I think it only fair to this Company to have the real facts in the case explained to you in order that any impression created by Mr. Powers’ insinuations to the effect that this Company has any kind of a monopoly or is influenced or controlled in any manner by Hearst or any of his interests may be removed. I am sure your Committee wants the truth and nothing but the truth and we court the most scrutinizing investigation for the purpose of confirming each and every statement herein contained.

Very truly yours,

The U. S. Government is employing this Motion Picture to render an accounting to the Nation

How America's fighting sons are spending their lives
How American labor is backing them up
How our Government is spending the National Wealth

These sub-titles tell its story

The world conflict takes upon itself the nature of a Crusade. The Crusaders were the efforts of a new world striving after a better ideal than that of piracy and fraternal bloodshed.

We go forth in the same spirit in which the knights of old went forth to do battle with the Saracen.

Notwithstanding the sacrifice we shall gain from it a noble manhood and a deeper sense of America's mission in the world. Thousands of parents are asking "why are we giving up our boys?" It is most essential that they see and know. The young men of America are going out to rescue Civilization. They are going to fight for one definite thing, to save Democracy from death. This mighty exodus of America's manhood to the plains of Europe may well be called The Eighth Crusade.

The German policy of "the broken word" in execution. Germany creeps upon her prey.

Belgium: Her feet are placed mid Death, Desolation and Ruin but Honor crowns her brow.

German arrogance casts its shadow over America when the Deutschland rises like a serpent in our harbors.

The Lusitania, the object of Germany's colossal butchery. But, if those perished shall have aided in saving Democracy, how glorious their sacrifice.

Plots, fires, strikes, agitations fomented by German agents to strike terror in our hearts have but fixed our determination to conquer at whatever cost.

America's answer. April 6th, 1917. President Wilson goes before Congress.

"the day has come when America is privileged to spend her blood and her might for the principles that gave her birth and happiness and the peace which she has treasured—God helping her, she can do no other."

Of her wealth America has already given five billion dollars, oversubscribing the first Liberty Loan by $1,617,532,300.

America puts her hand to the plow.

When America entered the war the Government became the largest business corporation in the world with its interests affecting practically every industry.

Ten million questionnaires were sent to the Provost Marshal General by ten million of America's manhood ready to pour out their life blood for the ideals of their country.

Finger prints of every soldier are filed for reference and identification purposes.

Thirty-eight of these National Army cantonments have been built in the United States. Over a thousand buildings to house 1,500,000 men.

For the enormous task of clothing two million men the Government had to install machinery to lay in long folds the miles and miles of khaki necessary for uniforms.

Sixty thicknesses of cloth are cut at once by the portable electric knife. Six hundred and sixty coats are in this one length of folded material.

It is interesting to note that every woman working in Uncle Sam's tailor-shop has a near relative in the service.

Five and a half million shirts and nearly eleven million pieces of underwear have been turned out for our soldier family.

Six million blankets have been made, compressed to one-third their original size and baled for shipment.

Eight million five hundred thousand pairs of shoes have been supplied to the army.

Here's the supply of meat for one camp for one day. Two million boys have six million husky appetites every day.

The army bakers turn out 500,000 loaves of bread every day.

Great shipyards have sprung up all over the country as if by magic. By autumn fifty ships will be turned out in these yards at one time.

When America calls the American workmen answers. Here is Labor swearing allegiance to the flag.

SHIP BUILDING

Mighty ships are being built in reply to Pershing's cry: "Build us a bridge of ships."
Every available wooden ship will help battle the German Monster.

An 8 inch Howitzer whose ultimate use is to shell the Huns out of the trenches.

These 14 inch guns are sixty feet long and weigh seventy-eight tons. They will hurl tons of American righteous anger into the Boche dugouts.

Here they are: Fourteen inch shells, every one destined to strike a blow for freedom.

The most dramatic incident in our participation in the war occurs when the Secretary of War draws the first number in the great lottery which created our National Army. An itinerant camp kitchen used at the front.

The national standby—beans. To see 'em every day makes a soldier so mad he could lick ten Germans.

Off for the day's training in the art which will help our Allies drive the Kaiser over the Rhine.

A practice advance. All must reach the enemy's lines at the same time.

Dear Sirs:

I will open The Symphony Theatre with your production of "The Unchastened Woman," a screen adaptation of Oliver Morosco's Broadway stage success of the same name, and in which Grace Valentine is starred.

My decision came after viewing an unusual number of very fine productions which were offered for consideration as the opening feature of the Symphony.

After twelve years in the producing field of the motion picture art, I am glad to say that your production is one that fitly exemplifies the dignified policy of the Symphony Theatre to give its patrons the very best obtainable.

Your screen adaptation of "The Unchastened Woman" is splendid. The story itself is unusual. The artistry of the star, Miss Valentine, is an histrionic achievement. The supporting cast was perfectly chosen.

All in all I consider it a great production. It is the very quality of picture that the Symphony wishes to continually offer.

Give us more like it.

Facts and Comments

More than ever are we astonished as time goes us opportunity for contemplation at the performance of the committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which went to Washington the other day to talk to Chairman Kitelin and the Congressional Ways and Means Committee. That committee was supposed to give the Congressmen some ideas regarding the way to tax the motion picture industry. A careful reading of the proceedings fails to reveal just what information, if any, was communicated. Several of the delegates hastened to assure the Congressmen that the industry wanted to pay its share of the national requirements, but in the next breath they went on record as being against increasing the admission tax. The Moving Picture World rises here to ask that if admission taxes are not raised who is going to pay the tax?

Everybody knows that if an increased tax is levied upon raw stock or the finished product the cost of a completed reel of pictures will be increased. Everybody knows that if the cost of making pictures is increased that the rental price will be increased. As the exhibitor pays the rental price any increase along that line will fall on him. If not, then who will pay it? Plainly there is no escape for the exhibitor paying the tax up to this point. This was made quite clear when the question came up last fall on the proposition to charge an additional 15 cents a reel on each release a week to cover the footage tax levied by the Government on raw and finished film. It is quite plain that any effort to place an increased tax on film will increase the cost to the exhibitor. It is useless to argue otherwise.

Now then if the exhibitor must pay additional rental, where is he to get the money? How is he to pass the tax along? Apparently the only way he can do that is to raise his admission price. Does the N. A. M. P. L. committee know of any other way? If it does the information would be gratefully received by several thousand exhibitors.

Another matter respectfully submitted to the committee from the N. A. M. P. L.: One of its members was interrogated by Chairman Kitchin on the question of footage tax in Great Britain. Mr. Kitchin made the statement that Great Britain imposed a footage tax on film, and the N. A. M. P. L. man admitted the statement to be true. If he had been at all conversant with the question he would have known that no footage tax is imposed by Great Britain on film made and used in Britain. The British footage film tax is on exports and imports; home-made film pays no such tax. Manufacturers of film there pay a high income tax and theaters collect an admission tax. If the N. A. M. P. L. can do no better than this something must be lacking in its service.

The latest indoor sport seems to be hectoring George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information. Several people have had their innings in the game, and now the motion picture men are taking theirs. On this branch of the committee's activities Congress has been induced to ask Mr. Creel what he is doing and what contracts he has made for distribution, with whom and what he is doing with the money. Bob Cochrane started the row, which may result in clearing up the situation. If there is a colored gentleman hiding in the wood pile by all means let him be smoked out.

Concerning the activities of the Creel committee the Division of Films wishes exhibitors to understand that official war pictures are being released by all the different news weeklies every week. This service began June 3 and has continued without interruption ever since. “Don't let anybody tell you different.” The Division of Films is releasing “Pershing’s Crusaders” through the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit, and “Allied War Review” through Pathé, Inc.
A Great Theme
By Louis Reeves Harrison.

OVER and over again it has been tried in story form, but it can be told in a thousand different ways, each unlike the others, all of profound interest to spectators of any class or condition.

The making of a man.

Ditmars has shown us on the screen that some of the lower orders of animal life care for their young only a few weeks—after that the little ones are self-supporting, some almost from the moment of birth.

Of all living creatures the most helpless during infancy is man.

Left to himself he would soon cease to exist.

From the very first he is dependent upon others for food, shelter and clothes, and the complicated organization of modern society, tending more and more to specialization of work, brings about an interdependence rendering each of us almost as helpless as we were in times of elementary need. Even such a simple requirement as that of water to drink brings about the tremendous construction of costly aqueducts. The individual exists as he is only through organized social effort.

As an intense individual he is usually in a state of revolt.

Society says he shall do so and so. He must conduct himself according to certain rules and regulations or expect to be isolated, perhaps condemned to punishment. He is thus obliged to keep his attention strictly in line with that of his group, unless he can command the attention and respect of his group long enough to start a revolution of common opinion. As a rule, however, he is a mere drop of water engaged in trying to alter the course of an entire river. He can only do that at some moment of flood, when he carries a mass of others along.

Each man of native power thus feels a sense of responsibility.

Native power he must have, but it will be wasted unless directed along lines indicated by high intelligence. Even his physical strength, great though it be by inheritance, must be nourished and trained, and that may depend upon the place where he is born and raised, the circumstances in which he is brought up.

Thus his story becomes one of environment.

It may be a brilliant and fascinating story, full of adventure and romance, yet show at every step the effects of his early training, his mental differences from other men, the effect of his associations, even of his religious views, or lack of them. The latter influence may be parental—an enormous number of great scientists, literary men, artists and creative geniuses are descended from ministers, deans and pastors. Then his social environment counts heavily.

But greatest of all is the effect of his education.

Very decided genius may be a substitute for education—the man may educate himself—but a very small proportion struggle up from a condition of neglected instruction, rarely one or two in a hundred. Some ninety-eight per cent. of the achievements in the world which count have come from men of well-trained minds. The logical necessity of a fine education, well-believed in here, can thus be enforced.

Here is splendid opportunity for some Griffith, Blackton, Porter or Ince.

Given a maximum amount or superior education in a community, even in a family, and we have the rich ground in which ability can best grow and flourish. While this purpose could be submerged, made subordinate to that of story interest and entertainment, it would show how education enables a man to select and successfully pursue a career out of the ordinary. It would be entirely practical to demonstrate that education is the determining factor of individual progress, so that all who grasp the story's meaning could cheerfully assent to improvement in our methods as one of the best and most economical of public measures.

In that question the whole human race is concerned. Why not give the leading roles to leaders of men? The inconsequential hero can never satisfy the public today.

Picture him a true man, self-doubting at times, yet overcoming difficulties through an education which is the "bread of his soul."

Let us see the making of a man.

The Scope of Screen Fiction
By Edward Weitzel.

THE screen produces fifty playlets or screen novels to every drama seen on the stage, but the scope of the older art is infinitely greater than that of the shadow play up to the present time. Screen fiction is now very circumscribed. Its serious drama seldom departs from the simplest and most elementary form; its aims to do the thinking for its patrons: to point out the right from the wrong much in the same way that a parent endeavors to instruct a child.

Vice is punished and virtue rewarded at the end of the fifth reel with such regularity that it is easy to forecast before the end of the first thousand feet the happy fate of the hero and his sweetheart and the unpleasant doom of the villain or his partner in crime, the simous but seductive vampire.

No argument can be advanced against the use of this formula, of course. It occupies an honorable place in popular esteem, both on the stage and on the screen, and has an influence for good that should not be understated. But it does not truly reflect life in all its phases.

A Higher Form of Screen Fiction.

A marked tendency among some of the producers of playlets, and also of one or two critics of the screen, is to decry anything that may stir the spectator deeply, the claim being advanced that people go to the moving picture to be entertained and do not want their feelings harrowed up by death scenes, especially where a little child is involved. This point is well taken in many cases—but the objection comes from the handling of the incident, not the incident itself. A perfect work of art never offended the sensibilities of a human being worthy the name, and the major portion of the men and women who attend the moving picture theaters is not deficient in right feeling when it knows that the anguish depicted on the screen is the natural outcome of the story. Who that recalls the death of Little Paul in "Dombey & Son" ever fails to realize its beauty and its chastening influence? The allusion already made to the class of fiction that very nearly dominates the screen, shows that it follows a form of stage drama that is not of the highest type. Commerciaally successful, like the drama of "Everywoman" with its obvious and crudely sketched types, these examples of screen fiction demand nothing of the spectator but a childlike faith and receptivity. He is taken by the hand, and human existence is shown him shorn of most of its sidelong and much of its truth.

The hero is without a blemish and the villain's soul is devoid of one decent instinct. Everything is symbolized and every precaution taken to save the spectator from using his own gray matter. Once virtue always wore a black cloak, while virtue attired herself in one of red. The screen innocence is soonest recognized by her modest white nightgown; infamy by the richness and dashing of her silk pajamas. This is not an artistic error—for the grade of art it represents. No art can exist without its conventions. But is it ever going to be worth while commercially for the screen to show life whole? There is no question of its artistic advantage. Galsworthy did it in "Justice." He did not take either side of an argument. He showed his audience a slice of life as it is, with all its complexity, its strength and weakness, its suffering and compassion, and left it to the man in front of the footlights to find his own moral. The play appealed to the brain as well as the emotions. It was successful in London and New York. It broke no records on the road, but in London it started a much needed prison reform, and in this country it gave a fine company of American actors an opportunity to achieve a signal success.

Will the same grade of fiction make a place for itself on the screen?

Moving Picture World Man Honored

F. RICHARDSON, who has for many years conducted the Projection Department of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and who is also editor of the Projection Department of Cine Mundial, the Spanish edition of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, is in receipt of the following communication:

Buenos Aires, Argentina, May 14, 1918.

Mr. F. H. Richardson, Cine Mundial, 516 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Dear Mr. Richardson: I have the honor to notify you that the Board of Directors of the Association of Moving Picture Operators of Argentina, at the meeting held on the fifth of the present month, voted to tender to you appointment as honorary general director of the society. All the members of the society approve said appointment, which enables us to include in the society so honorable a gentleman and one of such recognized talent.

Board of Directors Association Moving Picture Operators of Argentina,

By Bruno T. Tedeschi, Secretary.

The above named society is, we are informed, the largest association of its kind in all Latin America and even larger than any in Spain. The honor done Mr. Richardson is significant as showing how firmly Cine Mundial, the Spanish edition of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, is becoming entrenched in Latin America. It is pleasing that Mr. Richardson should have gained such standing with the Spanish speaking men in so comparatively short a space of time, particularly in view of the difficulties he encounters in his work in Cine Mundial. Mr. Richardson does not himself speak Spanish, hence it is necessary to translate communications to his department into Engish and then translate his reply into Spanish.

DEATH OF SOL J. BERMAN.

Sol J. Berman, manager of the New York exchange of Jewel Productions, Inc., died on Tuesday morning, June 25, at his home 801 West End Avenue, New York, aged 32 years. He leaves a widow and a daughter. Interment was made at Beth Alom cemetery, Cypress Hills, New York, on Friday, July 13.

The deceased entered the film business as an office boy for Clarke & Rowland in that firm’s Pittsburgh office several years ago. Mastering the details of the exchange business, he was appointed manager of the firm’s office at Des Moines, Iowa, to the frequently vacant position of assistant manager for the same company, but later went into business for himself. Then he was in the employ of the Mutual and eventually New York City to assume charge of the New York exchange of the World right after the death of Reginald Select before joining the Jewel organization. He had many friends in the business and his death will be felt keenly.

Loss of Gerhard Print Stirs Officials

Fear That Thief May Attempt to Use Subject in Neutral Countries to Disadvantage of United States.

The officials of the Department of Justice have been in hand the task of locating the missing prints of Ambassador Gerard’s “My Four Years in Germany,” which was stolen from the projection room of the Globe theater, at Fifth street and Fifth avenue, Brooklyn, on the night of Wednesday, June 15.

The disappearance of the film took place under suspicious circumstances, which has led the Brooklyn police and the Department of Justice to believe that the film was taken by the purpose of shipping it into some foreign country, where the print could be duplicated and exploited to the advantage of pro-German interests. For several days past all outgoing steamers have been zealously watched, but as a result of the rigorous rules applying to the shipping of films abroad there seems to be small chance of its getting past the Government officials.

There is however the possibility that the parties responsible for the theft of the film intend to smuggle it into Mexico and Central and South American countries. With this idea in mind representatives of the Department of Justice are now maintaining a sharer watch on the border.

It has been known for some time past to Ambassador Gerard and his film associates that representatives of German propaganda are highly desirous of securing a copy of the picture, it being their evident intention to try to use the same in such a way as to make the production appear to their advantage. If this were done in countries like Mexico and Chile, where pro-German influences are strong, there is no doubt the picture could be made a large financial success. It might also exert considerable influence favorable to Germany's war aims.

Whoever took the film from the Globe theater chose an unusually opportune moment to execute the theft, as Rudolph Sanders, proprietor of the theater, was taken home with an acute attack of appendicitis the day before the film disappeared and has been confined there ever since.

Operators Are Declared Non-Essential

Those Within Draft Age Must Secure Other Employment, Pittsburgh Delegation Is Informed.

Representatives of the Pittsburgh motion picture operators' union, who visited Washington last week, were informed that the members of their trade would not be exempted from the recently announced "work or fight" regulations promulgated by the provost marshal general. They were given an opportunity to confer with officials of the office of the provost marshal general, arrangements having been made by Congressman Garland.

The officials of the provost marshal general's office hold no general views on the matter, but feel that it is perfectly feasible, in the event that men not in the draft cannot be secured in sufficient numbers to replace the operators who must go into more essential industry, to send women into the booths of the theaters to operate the projection machines.

KUNSKY PREPARING FOR OPERATOR SHORTAGE.

With the possible shortage of motion picture operators due to the draft, Mr. Kunskey, owner of Kunskey Enterprises, operating ten theaters in Detroit, are planning to install a school for women and men who are over the draft age. George W. Trendle, secretary of the Kunskey Enterprises, believes the government will draft the operators into the war plants, and that it is up to exhibitors right now to start training women and other older men for the work. We are not going to wait until the worst has happened, but we are going to prepare for it," said Mr. Trendle.

Trends in '18 Schooling Berman.

In 1918, famed director Robert Berman not only capitalized on the growing popularity of silent films, but also made a name for himself as a visionary in the fledgling industry. His contributions to the field of film education were significant, as he had seen the potential in teaching the next generation of filmmakers. Berman's commitment to schooling was reflected in the dedication he showed to his work. His passion for the industry was evident in his own schooling as he poured over books and studied the art of film.
Players Ask for More Equitable Taxation

July 13, 1918

Point Is Made Before Congress Committee
That Large Incomes of Screen Actors Are for Few Years Only

DECLARING that the members of the motion picture industry were neither urged nor desired any reduction in the income tax, Grant Carpenter, of Los Angeles, Cal., assistant secretary of the Motion Picture Service Association, appeared before the House Ways and Means Committee in Washington last week to point out some of the inequalities and inequities of the tax law.

Mr. Carpenter explained that the Motion Picture War Service Association is an organization formed primarily for the purpose of unifying and concentrating the patriotic work of the 175,000 people employed in the motion picture business.

Among the officers of this association are David Wark Griffith (chairman), Mack Sennett, to enjoy Taylor, Cecil De Mille, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Lois Weber, Douglas Fairbanks, W. S. Hart, Jesse L. Lasky, Marguerite Clark, and William Fox.

"In order that there may be no misunderstanding of our purpose in this hearing," declared the witness, "we state positively and unequivocally that we neither urge nor desire any reduction in the income tax. The members of our association are not only willing, but eager, to bear their full share of the burdens of the war, and they consider it a privilege to serve our country in this crisis. We ask merely the opportunity to call to the attention of the committee that the results of the income tax will flow from a material increase of the present rates.

"Especially do we ask for a heavier tax on unearned income than upon earned income, adopting as a definition of 'earned income' the phraseology of the English law as follows:

"Income arising in respect of remuneration from any office or employment of profit or in respect of any pension or compensation given in respect to past services of the individual, or of the husband or parent of the individual in any office or employment of profit, and income derived from the exercise of a profession, trade, or vocation.'"

Compares Income from Art and from Dividends.

"Income derived from any other source, therefore, shall be deemed 'unearned.' This definition is obviously based upon a recognition of the difference between tangible and intangible capital, and income derived from each element, and that derived from cumulative effort. Permit us at this point to draw a comparison between the individual who derives his income from his capital, and the individual who derives his income from dividends on investments. I have in mind a woman in one of the art's who began only last year, after years of poverty and years of apprenticeship, to earn large sums of money. Her intangible capital is the experience and the knowledge of her art that has been accumulated, and upon which she has only begun to realize.

"The tax, as now applied, takes almost half of her earnings. In the nature of her business she can not expect, under the most favorable conditions, to increase the popularity that brings her this income for more than a few years at the outside—and the hazards and risks of her employment—a brief illness or a scar on the face may end her earning power at any moment. During that period she may be taxed anywhere from 25 per cent of all the earnings of a lifetime, and at the end of it her capital is gone.

"On the other hand, take a man with a similar income derived from dividends. This man's income would not be subject at all under the excess profits law, nor would he pay an income tax. But suppose, that, when the war is over, and the tax removed, this individual's capital would be unimpaired, and he would perhaps enjoy a larger income on the increased valuation of his property through no effort of his own.

Declares Industry Has Suffered Depression.

Mr. Carpenter was asked by Congressman J. Hampton Moore, of Pennsylvania, whether or not it was a fact that the moving picture shows were doing a bigger business generally since the war began than prior thereto. In answer he declared that the industry as a whole has suffered a depression; many theaters have closed all over the country, and in Los Angeles, where 75 per cent. of the pictures are made, a production of $240,000,000 has largely been cut, and the falling off of business has impaired the earnings of the artists and actors.

Several members of the Ways and Means Committee suggested that Mr. Carpenter give further detail as to the salaries paid to the well-known stars, but he gracefully avoided that. He was also questioned at length as to the extent of the business done in Los Angeles.

In order to show why the law should be changed with respect to the motion picture people, pointing to the case of Charlie Chaplin, who, he said, was taken to the music halls by his father when he was a child, and he suffered all the privations up to a very short time ago, and served a long apprenticeship. The witnesses then declared that many of the professions could be found where the members thereof had gone through privations in the early years of their profession, and there has been heard the same sort of argument concerning John D. Rockefeller, etc.

He was asked by Mr. Moore if he, or the profession which he represents, would object if there should be a release of the excess profits tax so far as salaries are concerned, that the income tax should be increased so as to meet so far as that proportion would help out the exigencies of the Government.

"I cannot say as to that," was the reply. "I think that the people who represent the players would like to see the tax is right as it is. And they want to bear whatever is their share of the burden, and not more. In the final analysis, that is what the committee will have to decide.

Congressman Says Industry Has Done Wonders.

Mr. Moore—"I believe that, thoroughly, and the representatives of the motion picture pictures have been here, and they have spoken with equal evidence of patriotism, and they are willing to be taxed, and we have a great deal of confidence in the moving picture industry, and the moving picture artists, have done wonders to contribute to the success of the war funds. Now, the President has issued a call for $21,000,000 more, and the Secretary of the Treasury has said, speaking for him, that we must raise approximately $30,000,000,000 of that by taxation. We must go into the pockets of the moving picture actors and artists, and others, and raise twice as much by taxation as we did last year, and the problem we have is raising more, and without any change, lowering the tax unless we have been properly charged with inequality. I state this to you in all fairness, because I know that you come here in good faith."

Mr. Carpenter—"All that we are maintaining here is the question of the division of profits and equal principles, and we believe that unearned income should be distinguished and differentiated from earned incomes.

"We are not asking for an exemption. We are asking that there is the right to be taxed. We can earn our money in the picture people who earn their incomes by their efforts be excepted from the operation of the excess profits law, because their earnings have no connection whatever with the war. On the contrary, the war has depressed the business greatly and has reduced the earnings of the business."

Congressman Green, of Iowa, stated that the Committee very likely would remove the feature that the witness was objecting to, but the people the representatives are likely to pay more, and the witness replied "We do not object to paying mor, if it is equitable."

"There is one thing I want to say before I close," said Mr. Carpenter, "just a word. I want to call the attention of the committee to the services of motion picture acts. We believe that the picture people who earn their incomes by their efforts be excepted from the operation of the excess profits law, because their earnings have no connection whatever with the war."

The Stoll Film Company, Limited, of London has appointed Arthur L. Fullman, 302 Broadway, its American representative.
The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Ochs Is General Manager of Exposition
Elected at Meeting of Massachusetts League—National League Going Ahead with Plans.

At a meeting of the Massachusetts branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League of America at its rooms at 127 Pleasant street, Boston, Tuesday afternoon, June 18, National President Lee A. Ochs was appointed general manager of the motion picture exposition that is to be held in Boston this July.

The object of the meeting was to discuss the plans for running the exposition without the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which voted to withdraw at a recent meeting held in New York. At just one-half hour after the New York vote was taken William A. Brady signed a contract for $750 worth of space for his daughter, Alice Brady.

Mr. Ochs addressed the exhibitors regarding the exposition: “At a recent meeting in New York it was agreed that there should be two expositions, one in the winter and one in the summer,” he said. “They were both to be held under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League of America and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The one in the winter was to be held in New York and the one in the summer, to be held wherever the league chose. For the summer of 1918 Boston was decided upon as the convention city. The dates were all arranged for the exposition. When only three and one-half weeks away the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry withdrew and left the Exhibitors’ League to run the exposition alone.”

“The Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League is going to run the exposition, and if they can get the stars to come to Boston they are assured of making it a success.”

Mr. Ochs make the hard work in getting the producers to allow the stars to come to the exposition. He said that they would lose from three to six days. The stars would not work the day before the trip, the day of the trip and the day after; therefore the producers had to send the stars to the convention city. The stars would only work one day at the convention.

Mr. Ochs stated that the convention would be an absolute failure without the stars and asked the branch managers of the different film exchanges to use their influence toward getting the stars for the exposition. It was the plan of Mr. Ochs to have the opening night an Alice Brady night and have as many other stars present as he could get.

At a recent meeting Mr. Ochs organized a company called the Motion Picture Exhibition company. At a conference with Mr. Berkamp, attorney for Charlie Chaplin, he received the assurance of Mr. Berkamp that Sidney Chaplin and very likely Charlie Chaplin would be at the convention.

Presence of Five Stars Pledged.
Mr. Ochs then gave the names of the following stars that he was sure he could get: Billie Burke, Marie Doro, Charlie Chaplin, Alice Brady and June Caprice. He said Mr. Zukor of the Paramount and Arcterra was against the exposition, but if the other companies went into it he would. Mr. Fox of the Fox pictures and Mr. Powers of the Universal made the same statement.

Mr. Ochs said when the exposition was held at Chicago all the boosters came to Boston and made their plans for the Boston convention. They told of the big things that they would do at their convention and “now it is up to the Boston film men to put it over.” Mr. Ochs said that he would always be in the forefront of the work and try to make the exposition a success, even if they did have to run it without the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry being the fifth largest in the world and people would expect them to make the exposition a success, even if they did have to run it without the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

He went on to say that he expected over 100,000 people would see the exposition in Boston and that they would have the support of every newspaper in the city.

Mr. Ochs was in Chicago last week the American rang me up at my headquarters several times in regard to advertising space and agreed to run several pages of advertising a week,” said Mr. Ochs. The national president said the people wanted to see the stars and would pay money to see them and without them they could not make the convention a success. “They do not want to see one or two stars but forty or fifty of them, and that is sure to draw a crowd every night of the exposition.”

Mr. Ochs then read a list of the following who had already bought space in the exposition: William Brady, for his daughter, Alice Brady, $750; William L. Sherry, $750 for his stars, Doris Kenyon and Catherine Calvert; World Film Corporation, $500; Simplex projection company, twelve to fourteen hundred dollars.

Ochs Named Chairman of Success Committee.
A motion was adopted appointing Lee A. Ochs chairman of a committee to get into the details of the exposition and make it a success. Those appointed on the committee were: Lee A. Ochs, chairman; Alfred S. Black, of the Maine branch of the league; M. J. Lydon, president of the Massachusetts league; Sumner and Rhode Island; James; P. E. Lydon, of Dorchester; Ernest H. Horstmann, of Boston; J. Laurie, of the Modern and Beacon theaters, Boston; B. H. Cornell, of Boston; Leon Dalmun, of the Atlas Film Corporation, and Fessers dedicated to World Film Corporation, Boston; George Fecke, of the World Film Exchange, Boston; Harry Wasserman, Samuel Grant, of Boston; Stanley Summer, of the Fenway theater, Boston; Al Somberly, of the Bowdoin Square theater, Boston; Joseph DePalle, of Boston; Norman Hoffman, of Boston, and Charles H. Ross, of the Lancaster theater, Boston.

Mr. Ochs said that according to the contract with the lessees of Mechanics’ Hall they could not begin to move things in until the 10th of July and they would have to work fast, as they would have only three days after that before the opening night of the convention. Mr. Ochs said “If we can pull this convention through and still make ten or fifteen thousand dollars we will feel very well satisfied with our efforts, but we must allow for the enormous cost of newspaper and street car advertising. A night will be dedicated to the city and state officials and the soldiers and sailors, for on those nights we will issue compli-
O’Donnell Elected Pennsylvania Head

Following Two Day State Convention Keystoners and Their Friends Go to New Jersey for a Frolic.

THE annual state convention of the Exhibitors’ League of Pennsylvania was held in Philadelphia on June 24 and 25, was supplemented by an outing in Westville, N. J., which was attended by the exhibitors, exchange men, and those employed in the industry, accompanied by their friends and families. The alternates, delegates and alternates occurred on the second day of the convention, the result of which was as follows:

Judge J. O’Donnell of Philadelphia, was unanimously re-elected state president; Fred C. Nirdlinger of Philadelphia, first vice-president; George L. Bittender of Plymouth, second vice-president; Charles H. Goodwin of Philadelphia, secretary, and A. H. Nace of Quakertown, Pa., treasurer.

A resolution made by Dr. S. Steinberg condemning the music tax law and urging a hearty support to the Government’s war plate was unanimously adopted by the League.

A motion authorizing the chairman to appoint an executive committee of five in addition to the state officers, and with the addition of one member to be placed on the committee as each local is formed, was seconded and passed by the body. A resolution to furnish ways and means of furnishing a state organizer to organize new localities throughout Pennsylvania was also carried.

There was a lively time at the picnic and many contests were indulged in by the men and the fair sex. The fat man’s race was won by Judge O’Donnell, while Dr. Steinberg won the fat man’s high jump. Steve of the Metro won the 100-yard dash in a race where there were over fifty entries. A hotly-contested tennis match was won by the exchange men, who defeated the exhibitors by a score of 7 to 4. During the evening after the crowd had partaken of the picnic luncheon many speeches were made lauding the newly elected state president, Judge O’Donnell, and many toasts were offered wishing his success as the next National President of the League. The final event was the dancing contest, which was won by Daniel Heenan and Sam Blatt.

Maryland Exhibitors Hold Meeting

Defer Action on Election and on Music Tax, but Choose Delegates to Boston.

The annual meeting of the Maryland Exhibitors’ League was held at the Lexington Hotel, 210 West Lexington street, on Friday afternoon, June 21. Frank A. Hornig, president of the League, presided, and the meeting was called to order at 3 o’clock. Several matters of importance to the Maryland exhibitors generally were taken up, but action was held over until further investigations are made of conditions. One of these was the scarcity of operators and the other concerned the tax on music.

The annual election of officers should have taken place at this meeting, but on a motion made by Thomas D. Goldberg that the present officers hold their positions until another meeting is called, this action was adopted.

Judge Rome made a motion that a crab feast be held in the near future for the members of the League and their families. This motion was unanimously passed. A committee was appointed to make arrangements for the affair including Louis Schlechter, Milton Caplon and William E. Stumpf.

Quite a discussion ensued when the question came up as to how the Maryland exhibitors should go about fighting the music tax, since the money that they have to pay or go without certain music.

The final decision in the matter was that they will hold off from any action until they know what procedure will be taken at the Convention which is to be held in Boston.

Delegates from the Maryland League to the Boston Convention were then elected, as follows: Frank A. Hornig, of the Horn and Royal theaters, chairman; L. A. DeHoff, of the New theater, and J. Louis Rome of the Broadway.

According to the usual custom of the League, a committee of two was appointed to audit the books of the secretary and treasurer. These were Eugene B. McCurdy and Charles Nolte.

TENXAS MEN CONVENE JULY 8.

When the cool gulf breeze blows over the island city of Galveston during the second week in July, Texas amusement men will be there. Dates for the 1918 convention of the Texas Amusement Managers’ Association have been fixed for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, July 8, 9 and 10, and headquarters will be maintained at the Tremont Hotel. Thus early indications are that there will be a full attendance. Texas moving picture fellows always have a good time when they get together, and when they get together, such as those who attend say, the opportunity is greater to learn some valuable things about the conduct of their business. E. H. Halsey, of the Queen and Old Mill theaters, Dallas, is president of the association, which is a two years old and will celebrate its third birthday in July. F. C. Levy of the Strand theater, Fort Worth, is treasurer and a member of the board of directors.

VIRGINIA STATE CONVENTION DEFERRED.

The special A. E. A. Virginia state convention, which was scheduled to be held at Ocean View, Va., August 25 and 26, has been postponed to a later date, after the national A. E. A. convention to be held at Chicago, August 20. Due notice of the Virginia meeting will be announced in these columns.

FRANK KEENAN STAGES BENEFIT.

Frank Keenan was the master of ceremonies at a benefit performance by the Stage Women’s War Relief on Thursday, June 20, at the Mason Opera House in Los Angeles. The Pathé troupe staged a vaudeville show at Sadler’s with Miss Maude Adams as the headline act. It was her first appearance in vaudeville. Other distinguished players were Fannie Ward, also a Pathé star; Nat Goodwin, Julian Eltinge and a host of others. The benefit was a complete success.

LANG OF NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY IN COLON.

Arthur J. Lang, export manager of the Nicholas Power Company, has arrived safely at Colon. He was well received and gave a column interview in a local newspaper, in which he didn’t forget to say that “Everybody in the States is right behind the President.”
Colonel Roosevelt's Works to Be Filmed

Frederick L. Collins Will supervise the Production—

Accruing Royalties for Benefit of War Charities.

In the belief that his action will materially help the American Red Cross and other kindred war charities to the extent of many thousands of dollars, Colonel Theodore Roosevelt has consented to the picturization of his various books and writings under the supervision of Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrie Picture Company. When seen at Oyster Bay regarding his important decision to permit the screen to visualize some of his most important literary works Colonel Roosevelt made the following statement:

"Several of the more important producers of motion pictures have approached me with plans for films based on the books that I have written, and any one of the offers seriously until recently, when it occurred to me that large sums might be realized for the American Red Cross or other war charities through the production and exhibition of such pictures. I have therefore consented to lend my name to a limited number of pictures to be produced and exhibited in accordance with a properly coordinated plan on the definite condition that all the royalties received by me during the war may be devoted to such war charities as I may designate.

"Knowing very little about the film business myself, I have placed my motion picture affairs in the hands of Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrie Picture Company, who at a glance saw wide interests in the motion picture field, and who is, I believe, in a position to produce these pictures or to secure their production under his supervision in a dignified and successful manner.

"I shall be very glad to co-operate in every possible way with Mr. Collins and his associates in the hope that a considerable sum may be raised and help meet the war needs. The outcome of the undertakings, of course, depends not upon me, but upon the consideration and support of the great motion picture public. Exactly to the extent that the motion picture public approves these pictures it will help to provide additional means for backing the men at the front."

Possibilities for Charity Convinced the Colonel.

Speaking of the decision of Colonel Roosevelt to consent to the production of his works in film under his supervision Mr. Collins made the following statement:

"It is true that we have at last been fortunate enough to convince Colonel Roosevelt of the desirability of adapting his books and writings to motion pictures. When the first broached to him he was not at all favorable to the plan, but since that time he has come to the conclusion that thousands of dollars for the Red Cross and other war charities would be raised by the production of such a series of pictorial pictures at this time he began to see the matter in quite a different light.

"The uppermost thought in Colonel Roosevelt's mind today is to win the war, so he has very generously insisted that he should have the privilege of designating certain war charities among which, no doubt, would normally go any dollars that would otherwise be raised by the production of such pictures. At this time he began to see the matter in quite a different light.

"My associates and I have not as yet decided whether we will produce all of these pictures ourselves or arrange for their production, under our supervision, by other producers. Probably the films based on one article of Mr. Roosevelt's, will be produced by a different firm. As we have not determined finally the order in which the pictures should appear."

Some of Colonel Roosevelt's more recent patriotic writings of a non-political character, such as "Fear God—and Take Your Own Part," "Put the Flag on the Firing Line," and "The Hun Within Our Gates," should certainly be among the first films to be produced, although a picture of a more general character, based on "Theodore Roosevelt—My Autobiography," may be the first production to be released. Every attempt will be made in the production and distribution of these films to dwell more particularly on the dignity of the colonel's position and with a full realization of the opportunity for patriotic service, which his generosity has made possible.

DORCAS MATTHEWS' INJURY BECOMES SERIOUS.

Owing to injuries received more than a year ago Dorcas Matthews, wife of Robert Mckim, a well-known member of the Thomas H. Ince players, will be confined to her home for about two months.

Enrico Caruso Becomes a Screen Star

Famous Players-Lasky Confirms Story of Great Tenor's Appearance Before Camera.

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has finally confirmed the report that Enrico Caruso has been signed as a Famous Player star and will begin work July 15, probably in the east. The negotiations were conducted through Julius Steger, vice-president of Famous Players, who is trying to induce the world-famous tenor to appear upon the screen. Confirmation of Caruso's engagement from Famous Players-Lasky Monday, July 1, although Mr. Steger had for several days before that insisted the deal was consummated, but always lacked Adolph Zukor's official O. K. "Pagliacci," greatest of all Caruso's operatic achievements, will very likely be the first picture produced for Famous Players. As customary, his deals for which celebrities are brought to negotiate screen engagements, "big money" is hinted at in the Caruso deal. In some papers it has been printed that the tenor will receive $200,000. From other sources the figure arrives at $100,000 with a percentage of the profits.

Julius Steger will personally direct Caruso's screen achievements, and it was with this understanding that the famous Italian operatic star signed the present agreement with Mr. Zukor. The International Film Service, Inc., where Mr. Steger is permanently associated, has consented to the arrangement.

Richard and Marion Davies production is under way, with Mr. Steger directing, and after the Caruso productions are completed Mr. Steger will supervise productions for the International in which Anna Case will be presented.

"The Finger of Justice" Turned Down

Anti-Vice Film Not Permitted by Commissioner Gilchrist

THE Rev. Paul Smith's anti-vice drama, "The Finger of Justice," which was reviewed favorably in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World, was not permitted to open at the Lyric theater, New York, Saturday evening, June 29. At the usual time for starting the performance the reverend gentleman appeared on the stage and read a letter from Commissioner Gilchrist, of the Bureau of Licenses, warning the Lyric Theater Company that its license would be revoked if it persisted in going ahead with the showing of the photoplay.

In the opinion of the commissioner "The Finger of Justice" is immoral, and the stand he has taken is based solely on that ground. The picture, it will be recalled, is the outcome of a vice crusade in San Francisco, which the clergyman conducted among the fallen women of that city. The women were driven out of their regular haunts and a delegation of over a hundred of them met Gilchrist and asked him: "What are you going to do with us?" The picture answers that question.

The matter has not been finally settled. The clergyman on Sunday night addressed an audience at the Church of the Strangers on the subject, and termed Commissioner Gilchrist "the Czar of the Movies." He also obtained an order from Justice Pendleton for the commissioner to appear before Justice Mullins last Monday morning and show cause. Decision went over until Tuesday.

At the Lyric theater Harold Bell Wright's picture, "The Eyes of the World," was shown Saturday night in place of the forbidden film. The next night William A. Brady's production of "Stolen Orders" was transferred from the Park theater to the Lyric for a run.

FAMOUS PLAYERS TO MAKE "THE SILVER KING."

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has purchased the screen rights to "The Silver King," one of the great successes of the English-speaking stage. This splendid old melodrama, first produced in the early eighties, will be made into the screen version by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which has been recognized as the most capable of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's directors, and will be one of the nine special productions to be produced during the coming year, commencing September 1st, under the Paramount-Famous Players studios.

ENDERT MANAGING SEATTLE FOR UNIVERSAL.

George Endert, one of the most popular exchanges in the Northwest, became manager of the Seattle offices of Universal Film. J. B. Meldrum, resigned. Mr. Endert was formerly manager for Pathé and Paramount in that territory. He resigned from the latter organization to come to Universal.
Fox Shows Government 500,000 Feet of Film Under New Ruling Film Company Has to Unpack and Screen Subjects Destined for Export n indication of the far-reaching effect of the recent Government order regarding film exports is given in a statement from the Fox Film Corporation that when the Government's ruling was received that corporation had to unpack and give a screening of 500,000 feet of film, which was all ready for shipment to all parts of the world.

When the order from the Treasury Department was received, the Foreign Department of the Fox Film Corporation had on hand cases of films ready to be shipped to Wellington, New Zealand; Australia, England, South America, and Canada.

At a moment's notice all these goods had to be unpacked, cut, and tagged official to the project of the Fox Corporation at 130 West Forty-sixth street, and then, for about a week, everybody in the Fox foreign department had to labor far into the night to get the shipments ready again. By dint of tremendous efforts the consignments were exhibited to customs officials, approved, and put back into their cases on time.

In addition to this there was a large quantity of Fox films in transit to various American ports for shipment out of the country. These for a time were threatened with delay at the hands of the Government's agents, but the modifications of the Treasury Department's original order, on solicitation of various film producers, allowed shipments in transit to go through without being censored by customs officials.

A brief history of the change in procedure will show how the sudden switch makes it more difficult for the exporter. Before June 1, the film exporter applied to Washington for an export license. After getting the license, the exporter was then in a position to ship immediately to the Allied countries without censorship and to South America after the film had been censored. Under the present system the exporter must first have the films for all countries, even Canada censored by customs officials. Then he gets his license. But he can get an export license only for the amount of film censored. Thus one of the most troublesome features of the whole change is that the exporter cannot tell how soon after he has had his films censored he can ship.

How much delay will be entailed by the new system cannot be estimated at this time, but it is not believed it will be a great deal. Even where the Fox people say they have been showing splendid co-operation and have been trying in every way to make things as easy as possible.

Goldwyn Starts String of Beach Stories

First of Half Dozen, on Which Work Begins Next Week, Will be "Laughing Bill Hyde."

GOLDWYN'S cameras will begin turning next week on the first of the six big Rex Beach productions that are to be the Goldwyn imprint next season. The first of this new series of Rex Beach pictures will be his popular story, "Laughing Bill Hyde." Goldwyn has done the unusual thing in this instance of enlisting the talents of Willard Mack in the preparation of the scenario from the Beach story and in giving the direction of the production over to Reginald Barker. This, in effect, means an all-star scenario organization, a star director and linking other identities with one of the most popular authors.

During the coming season, Goldwyn will provide exhibitors with six Rex Beach productions. It is quite likely that the other five will follow his previous success "Laughing Bill Hyde" will be "The Crimson Gardenia," "The Net," "Going Some," "The Silver Horde," and one other story as yet unnamed.

Those partially successful authors who are complaining all the time about their unsatisfactory relations with the motion picture producers might profit a great deal by emulating Rex Beach, whose experiences with the screen producers are at variance with those of nearly all other writers. Mr. Beach has never complained that his stories were unethetically produced or that the materialization pictures do not understand the successful writer or give him encouragement.

Primarily Mr. Beach himself is responsible for his tremendous success. The stories contain the essentials. There is never a dearth of dramatic material or action. The problem in the making of a Rex Beach story for the screen is to condense them into screen form—to get in all of the good stuff and get rid of the filler problems.

As proof of their success one has only to think of "The Spoilers," "The Barrier," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," "The Auction Block" and "Heart of the Sunset."

Carmel Myers Under Universal Contract

CARMEL MYERS, the star of many Bluebird screen successes, was born in San Francisco and remained a loyal subject of the Golden Gate until one day she was startled by the earthquake, when she left Los Angeles. Enrolling at the Los Angeles grammar school Miss Myers rapidly became popular, and started her dramatic career as Ellen in Scott's "Lady of the Lake." Later after a consultation decided that the part had best be played by the daughter of a school board she was slated to play the lead in the school play. The teachers after a consultation decided that the part had best be played by the daughter of a school board so Carmel quit school and fooled 'em.

In her father's library the gifted girl prepared herself for serious dramatic work. She read and studied and entered the films with a solid foundation of knowledge.

After some preliminary work with D. W. Griffith and under the Fine Arts banner in which she appeared in "The Heiress of Coffee Dand," "Nina, the Flower Girl," and other productions she went to Metro and starred with Harold Lockwood in "The Haunted Pajamas."

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, discovered her among the ranks of the extra players and immediately pointed her out to his directors as a film star. The result that Universal put her under two years' contract.

Her first picture was "Sirens of the Sea," a Jewel production, with Louise Lovely and Jack Mulhall. Then came two more successes, "The Lash of Power" and "The Wife He Bought," Kenneth Harlan playing opposite in both pictures.

"My Unmarried Wife" was the star's next success, and was rapidly followed by "The Girl in the Wine Girl," "The Marriage Lie" and "A Broadway Scandal," Miss Myers recently completed "The City of Tears," which was released on June 24.

In addition to her work before the camera Carmel Myers is the sincere Red Cross worker on the salvage committee, and is constantly echoing the President's plea: "Win the war."

PERCIVAL TO MAKE SCREEN DEBUT.

Walter Percival is the newest recruit from the ranks of musical comedy stars to "go and do it." In the role of Beauty Blair in Metro's production of "Our Mrs. McChesney," Miss Barrymore's first screen vehicle of this season, Mr. Percival is making his first appearance before the camera and is particularly fortunate in the fact that as he makes his motion picture debut in Miss Barrymore's new play and also as the part of Beauty Blair contains some of the best comedy in the play.

Mr. Percival is well known to lovers of musical comedy, particularly in New York, for he holds the unique distinction of having played eight years without a break on Broadway, and during that time at but three theaters, the Broadway, Knickerbocker, and Casino.

MACHINIST MARTIN DISPOSES OF EQUIPMENT.

I. M. Martin, proprietor of the People's theater, Athens, Oregon, now a machinist in the United States Navy, stationed on the west coast, was in Portland a few days last week on his way to Athena to arrange for the disposal of the fine equipment of his house there. S. H. Elliott, his partner, now in Lebanon, was with him in Portland.

Mr. Martin built up a successful business in Athens on practically exclusive Universal service, and left his business only to go into the service of the United States for the duration of the war.
Eight Affiliated Districts Elect Officers

Butterfield Heads Michigan Unit, While Lustig is Chosen To Head Northern Ohio.

HAT the exhibitors' booking corporations associated with the Universal District Corporation are losing no time in making operative the booking plan of the Affiliated was evidenced last week by the election of officers in several additional units. The officers elected in each territory and at New York were:

Exhibitors Booking Corporation of Michigan—President, W. S. Butte- feield; vice-president, Howard C. Weld; secretary, James H. Stallings; and treasurer, Percy W. Harbeck.

The booking corporation in each territory handling the product released through the Affiliated maintains offices under the supervision of the officers of each corporation. Experienced managers have been chosen for these offices. In addition to this manager and his staff a representative of the Affiliated is assigned to each territory at the expense of the Affiliated to operate in the sale of bookings in excess of the units' quota.

The physical handling of the Affiliated product is to be placed with one national distributing system in order to provide uniformity of service and to insure the greatest degree of efficiency.

N. A. M. P. I. Nominate Directors

All Classes Have Named Their Selections To Be Elected at Boston Meeting—General Division Meets.

WITH the meeting of the General Division at the offices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry on Friday, June 28, nominations for directors of the association were completed. These selections will be considered at the annual meeting, which is to be held at Copley Plaza Hotel, Boston, on Friday, July 19, at 11 o'clock a.m. The full list of nominations includes these names:

At the meeting of the General Division the Interocen Forwarding Corporation, Inc., and Reginald Ward, Inc., were elected as members of the exporters' section, and the following were elected as individual members: George A. Strader, Herbert S. Clark, Morris Ryskind, A. M. Botsford, Patrick Kennedy, Ralph G. Gladstone, J. H. Stimson, Frederick Gage, W. H. Jackson, Norris Wilcox.

A committee of three was appointed to make arrangements for a luncheon to be given on Wednesday, July 24. It was also decided that the Honorable Lyle H. Packard, who had gone into the service of the Government should be absolved from the payment of dues during their period of service.

Start Sunday Opening Campaign in Ohio

Meeting Held in Columbus and Committee Chosen to Raise Funds—Will Act as Did Baseball Men in Similar Matter.

A MEETING was held in Columbus, Ohio, Wednesday, June 26, to start a campaign to amend the Sunday closing laws of the state so that theaters may operate without legal technicalities on the Sabbath. The campaign for Sunday closing has developed of late and several small towns have been closed up by the ministerial element.

There were about fifty representatives from every part of the state at the meeting in Columbus. The first move made was the appointment of a permanent committee, one man from each section of the state, to solicit all exhibitors in order to raise a fund for carrying on the campaign.

The method of procedure is to work to have the laws changed similarly to the way the Sunday baseball folks did a few years ago.

UNIVERSAL MANAGERS TO MEET IN CHICAGO.

An event which may have a far-reaching effect upon the present producing and sales policy of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is scheduled to take place on Sunday, July 7, at Chicago, when the first convention held by the members of its sales organization in years opens for a three-day session at the Sherman House.

With the exception of the man in charge of the exchanges at San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland, Seattle, Boston, and in Canada, every Universal exchange manager has been notified to be on hand in time for the opening of the first session.

The delegation leaving New York will be headed by Carl Laemmle and Joe Brandt. Harry Berman, sales manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., will accompany the Universal officials for the purpose of representing his company at the discussion of plans scheduled to take place.

WILLIAM FOX BUYS "THE STRANGE WOMAN." For the last two years all the women stars of the screen have had their eyes set covetously on "The Strange Woman," the powerful drama of American life which was produced by Klaw & Erlanger and ran a full season in New York City. The author, William J. Hurlbut, however, would not yield with the motion picture rights of his play at figures offered. William Fox made a bid for the play and his price was high enough to satisfy Mr. Hurlbut. Now "The Strange Woman" will be produced on a big scale by Mr. Fox. The play was bought for Gladys Brockwell, and will probably be produced in California.

"To Hell With the Kaiser" Opens

Initial Showing of Metro Production Is Greeted by Enthusiastic Throngs at the Broadway.

THERE was a large and enthusiastic body of spectators at the Broadway theater Sunday night, June 30, to re-echo the sentiment of the latest screen classics presentation, "To Hell With the Kaiser." Written by June Mathis and directed by George Irving, the picture is a succession of punches that will make the average good American feel that he is watching the German emperor get just what is coming to him.

The story is highly improbable, but its spirit is cleverly calculated to catch the popular taste, and it was received with rounds of applause and hearty bursts of laughter. The heroine is an American girl, whose sister is assaulted by the Crown Prince and whose father is killed when he attacks the Kaiser's eldest son. Melodrama of the most successful sort runs all through the picture, and the subtitles are skilfully handled in assisting the story to spread hatred of the Hun.

"To Hell With the Kaiser" is shown in a literal sense. The Devil appoints as the Kaiser's closest advisor, and the last scene is devoted to his reception at the home of his master. Lawrence Grant's impersonation of the leading part is in keeping with the character of the photoplay, and makes the man of destiny. During the intermission the actor came out on the stage and proved that he was quite as able at speaking as at acting for the screen. Olive Tell as Alice Monroe, Betty Howie as her son John Sundown, Marion Brow for her sister Zearing, and actor as Professor Monroe are the other leading members of the cast. A review of the picture is printed on another page of this issue.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD July 13, 1918 187
Commission Amenities Explosives Regulations

Interstate Commerce Body Approves Changes as Submitted and New Rules Probably Will Be Effective August 1.

T HE assistant chief inspector of the bureau of explosives, W. S. Topping, under date of June 25, writes to Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of Motion Picture, outlining the amendments to the Interstate Commerce Commission regulations covering the transportation of explosives and other dangerous articles by express. These amendments were formally adopted May 27 and have been the subject of a special hearing. The regulations as amended will provide as follows:

Motion Picture Film No. 43 (a). Motion picture films must be marked as required for cargo containers with Specification No. 19. Not more than eight reels (approximately 1,000 feet each) may be packed in one such outside container.

(b) Each package may also be packed in outside wooden boxes complying with Specification No. 19, provided each reel is placed in a wooden case enclosed inside metal container. The gross weight of such a package must not exceed 200 pounds.

(c) Unexpended motion picture film in tight rolls must be packed in interior metal cans not to exceed five rolls (approximately 2,000 feet) in one inside can; the cover of each inside can must fit tightly and be held in place by a strip of adhesive tape or paper; the interior cans must be securely packed in outside wooden boxes complying with Specification No. 19. The gross weight of such a package must not exceed 200 pounds.

(d) Non-inflammable motion picture (cellulose acetate) films may be accepted without other restrictions when securely packed in strong packages of sufficient strength to carry to destination without rupture or leakage of contents; each outside container must be plainly marked "Motion Picture Films," and, in addition, must be marked "Not Discriminated," as proscribed by paragraph 24 (e).

(e) When non-inflammable motion picture films are packed in the same outside containers with inflammable materials, the outside container must contain at least an equal weight of non-inflammable material, and the total outside container must not exceed the quantity of gross weight permitted for inflammable films.

(f) Shipment of motion picture film with advertising matter attached to or bound with the film must be made only when approved, and Shippers desiring to include advertising matter with their shipments of motion picture film must place the same inside the outside box container in the film.

Note.—Shipping containers complying with Rule 43 (a), effective October 1, 1914, and paragraph 24 (e) of these rules, as applied for the shipment of motion picture films until December 31, 1918, provided the container is closed and properly labeled, shall be considered by the Commissioner as further that if fitted with telescopic covers the covers fit tightly against the shoulder of the box body.

Leather or webbing, if used, must be in good condition and tightly fastened.

Seal or rope must not be used.

Celluloid, fibreboard, pyralin, viscosoid, zylonite, etc., serar, including scrap motion picture films (cut or torn in pieces), must not be shipped by express.

Shipping Container Specification No. 32.—Metal cases or cans for outside containers must be made of sheet iron not les than 0.02 inch thick. The minimum weight of each case or can must not be less than 15 pounds. Each case or can must be marked "Shipping Container, No. 32," or, if so desired, this marking may be indicated by a symbol consisting of a rectangle as follows:

1. C. C. No. 32.

The letters in this symbol must be at least on-half inch high. The symbol may be understood to mean that the container complies with all the requirements of this specification.

(b) Each container must be permanently marked with the number, and two hinged covers, if they are to be slip covers, must be securely fastened together. The covers must be closed, tightly fitting, and the contents of each container must be identified by a label or tag.

(c) Each container must be securely packed in the interior container in at least eight pieces, and the container must be securely packed in the outside container in at least 15 pieces. Each container must be securely packed in an outside container in at least 20 pieces.

(d) The exterior container must be made of sheet iron not less than 0.02 inch thick. Each exterior container must be marked "Shipping Container, No. 32," or, if so desired, this marking may be indicated by a symbol consisting of a rectangle as follows:

1. C. C. No. 32.

Congressmen Inquire About Picturemaking

Chairman Creel Explains What Has Been Done by Government Agencies to Tell the Story of the War.

FOLLOWING the introduction of his resolution calling for an inquiry into the taking and disposition of motion pictures by the Signal Corps, Congressman Treadway of Michigan, chairman of the House Interstate Commerce Committee, before the House Commerce Committee, at which P. A. Powers, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, testified to the alleged monopoly given the Hearst-Pathé company for pictures taken by the Signal Corps men and others.

Mr. Treadway declined to discuss the actual testimony, but after the hearing called attention to the fact that these photographs were taken by Government men with the intention of giving them widespread distribution throughout the country. "Men of science," he said, "the public, before the public," said, "the fact that one concern has sole control over their distribution to the public, the general public viewing the pictures.

He recommended to be offered by George Creel when he appeared before the House committee on appropriate for the work of the Committee on Public Information, in which the committee's work would be taken over. "It seemed to me that the motion picture was one of the most important aids to our campaign of education and information," testified Mr. Creel, "as millions of people go to the movies, they are going to see what is going on. We worked with them in securing the best photographers in the United States. Those men went to France and made pictures there and the pictures were sent back to this country."

"Then we sent army and navy photographers around to the cantonments, to the factories and to the fields; we sent them to the training camps, and tried to make a photographic record, as far as we could, of the war. As far as we could and the people of this country are going to see the war going on. It was a psychological campaign."

PICTURE MEN ATTEND ROTARIANS CONVENTION

The convention of the International Rotary Clubs, which was held in Kansas City this month, had a Motion Picture division of which J. W. Farrell, of Orange, N. J., was chairman, and George Weida, manager of the Adfilm Company, Kansas City, vice chairman. A number of out-of-town film men who also are Rotarians were visiting the city.

Frank Newman, of the Royal and Regent, although not a Rotarian, gave valuable assistance to the members with regard to the exhibition pictures. He organized the Picture-men's committee which arranged for the taking of some pictures. The exhibitions included showings at Convention Hall and the local theaters. The distribution of reels to the downtown picture houses included subjects supplied by the government as well as subjects brought by different local Rotary bodies as a contribution to the convention.

ALICE BRADY ENTERTAINS SOLDIERS

Alice Brady is hard at work at the West Fifty-sixth street studios, on a production for Select Pictures. Miss Brady's evenings are given largely to the entertainment of men in uniform.
Goldwyn’s Eastern Managers in Session

Discuss Plans for Coming Year and Also Attend Entertainments Arranged in Their Honor.

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, in making announcement of its plans and productions for the year about to begin, adopted the procedure of holding regional conventions not only of its managers in its various zones, but of every Goldwyn salesman.

The meeting of the eastern division—the offices east of Pittsburgh and north of Washington—was held June 22 in the home offices of Goldwyn Pictures and Goldwyn Distributing corporations, and F. B. Warren, a vice-president of the latter.

Telegraphic reports from Alfred Weiss at Cleveland indicate an enthusiastic meeting of the men of the Central division there. In Chicago, under the direction of Nathan Ascher, Aaron J. Jones and Harold Bolster, the other vice-president of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, a hundred per cent attendance was established for that section.

The Goldwyn men from the east had the advantage over their fellow-managers and salesmen in one respect, at least: they were able to spend half a day at the Fort Lee studios of the company, meeting and being photographed with the stars who were engaged in outdoor studio work for the day and winding up their day with an evening party at the New York Winter Garden, accompanied by executives of the company.

The morning business meeting at the New York headquarters of the company was confined entirely to a discussion of the new stars and of productions for the coming season, this talk being continued at a luncheon in a private dining room of the Hotel Astor. Immediately after the luncheon the entire party went to Fort Lee to see the big Goldwyn plant in operation and there be received by Geraldine Farrar and Madge Kennedy, both of whom stopped work for an hour to hear directly from the men who sell their Goldwyn productions what the exhibitors of the country want.

Willard Mack, head of Goldwyn’s scenario organization, also gave up most of his afternoon to a conference with the Goldwyn managers, and after going over the plant, A. Lehr, the general manager of the studios, together with Mr. Goldfish, gave the entire party their first look at one of Miss Farrar’s first Goldwyn productions and also the Goldwyn production in which Tom Moore is to make his debut as a star.

Branch managers of the Eastern Division in attendance at the conferences were Samuel Eckman, Jr., New York; George A. Hickey, Buffalo; Herbert W. Given, Philadelphia, and R. Camp, Boston. George F. Lenahan, the Washington manager, was unable to be present, but sent in his stead Frank Price, Jr., head salesman of the Washington office.

Monte Katterjohn with Famous Players

MONTÉ M. KATTERJOHN, one of the best known of the younger scenario writers of the country, has been permanently engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a member of the scenario staff at the West Coast studios. Mr. Katterjohn has already written the continuity for "The Source" and "Broken Threads," two of the forthcoming Paramount pictures starring Wallace Reid. He is now at work on an original script for Lilac Lee, the new star of Paramount.

Mr. Katterjohn hails from Indiana. He began his career as a newspaper and magazine writer and also as a publisher. He in fact issued the first magazine for photo-playwrights.

In 1908 he began his screen career as a free lance and writer and later went to Universal as scenario editor; thence to the New York Motion Picture and later to Triangle. He is the author of numerous successful photo-plays, including "The Cloth Hopper," "Madam Who," "Carmen of the Klondike," etc. Besides many adaptations.

"I am happy to have become a member of the Famous Players—Lasky scenario staff," declared Katterjohn, "because it affords me the scope I have so long wished for. There is such a wide variety of stars that it is almost impossible to miss the mark in writing. If a story proves unavailable for one it may be exactly the thing for another. There is intelligent co-operation from author to exhibitor which takes in everything that is intermediate. The atmosphere is ideal for work of a creative character and the reputation of the Famous Players—Lasky for original pictures is such that it is a pleasure and a satisfaction to be affiliated with the organization responsible for the productions released under these brands. I have many ideas in mind for the various stars."

Mr. Katterjohn has a facility for substituting, a remarkably active imagination, a keen sense of dramatic proportions and balance and knows the picture business thoroughly. Thus equipped he may be expected to turn out his best work in the months to come.

CLAIMS EXEMPTION FOR GOWN TAXATION.

June Elvidge, World Picture star, has made application for a reduction in her income tax. This prayer for relief grows out of the enormous expense entailed on Miss Elvidge in consuming her roles in the dozen productions that she makes in a year. She contends that it is not alone impossible, but impracticable for her to use the same gowns in other productions—moreover, these gowns cannot be used in private life—and that the expense involved is absolutely necessary in pursuit of her profession and is just as essential as office expense to a business man, for which the Government permits a deduction to be made in his tax returns.

The outcome of Miss Elvidge’s application will be watched with great interest by the large number of moving picture actors who are similarly situated.

TAYLOR HOLMES SIGNS TRIANGLE CONTRACT.

H. E. Aitken for the Triangle Film Corporation has closed a contract with Taylor Holmes for a three years’ term with that company to make comedy pictures. It is the purpose of the Triangle to feature the well-known actor as a comedy star and present him in a series of program releases along the lines that made Douglas Fairbanks famous when Triangle introduced the latter to the film field about three years ago.
Charlie Chaplin Has His Picture Taken

Sits In for a Moment with Godowsky and His Family and Then Goes Back to Work.

The fact may not be generally known, but despite his acknowledged success as a screen actor Charlie Chaplin is one of the hardest subjects in the world to photograph with an ordinary camera. Publicity men innumerable have torn their hair because of their inability to get Charlie to pose for illustrations to accompany their stories dealing with various angles of his off-stage life and recreations.

The reason for this is that Chaplin puts every ounce of energy and interest into his acting, and when he has finished the day's work he wants to get as far away from the sight and sound of a camera as possible. He declares that when he is not acting, it is almost painful for him to have a camera pointed in his direction.

James J. Tynan, who recently succeeded Carlyle Robinson as personal publicity representative for Chaplin, has only succeeded once up to date in getting his employer to pose for his picture. This occurred on the occasion of a recent visit of the famous pianist, Leopold Godowsky, and his family to the Chaplin studios.

In response to the request of Godowsky Charlie took a few minutes off between the scenes of his second comedy now in process of making and sat for his picture. It is interesting to note that the comedian appears in his shirt sleeves, in the attitude of a man who has paused in the midst of real labor.

Definite news regarding the result of his industry will be released by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in the very near future.

Editors Respond to Universal Letter

Many Newspapers Publish Editorials, Setting Forth That Motion Picture Screen Is Essential.

Evidence which proves conclusively that the majority of newspapers throughout the country are in hearty accord with the stand taken by moving picture men that this is an essential industry is now pouring in upon Universal as the result of a letter sent out some time ago by Carl Laemmle.

As told in this publication several weeks ago, the head of Universal wrote a letter to the publishers of all newspapers, in which he outlined the reasons which made it imperative that the screen be allowed to continue the work it is now doing. That this plea touched a responsive chord is evident in the analysis that has been made of the newspaper clippings received at the Universal offices.

Typical of the spirit displayed by the publishers is the editorial recently published in the Evening Herald of Los Angeles. The arguments advanced by Mr. Laemmle in his letter were utilized by this hard-working writer, and according to film folk who make their home in Los Angeles an extremely favorable impression was made upon the readers of that publication. The article was entitled: "Keep the Theaters Open as You Would Keep the Nation Cheerful."

Copies of the editorial have been sent to all of the Universal exchanges, and it is Mr. Laemmle's plan to have the publicity men of these branches supply them to publishers of the newspapers in their respective territories.

Although prominent Government officials have placed themselves on record as favoring the industry it is considered extremely important by Universal that the campaign be conducted more vigorously than ever. Not a single statement advanced by fanatics, zealots and pro-Germans which cast reflection upon the screen's activities should be allowed to go unchecked, while unremitting vigilance should be exercised so that movements injurious to the welfare of the industry be checked in time.

At Leading Picture Theaters

THE RIVOLI.—William S. Hart in "Shark Monroe." His latest Artcraft picture, written by C. Gardner Sullivan, is the featured player at the Rivoli the week of June 30. Katherine Macnamara leads all the new arrivals. West Indies, a comedy and the Animated Pictorial were also on the bill. The soloists were Julia Beverly and Lieutenant B. C. Hilliam.

THE RIALTO.—Official Italian War Pictures were shown at the Rialto and shared honors with "The Claws of the Hun," a Paramount picture starring Charles Ray. The photoplay was written by Ella Stuart Carlson and directed by Victor L. Schertzinger. Jane Novak plays opposite the star. Annie Fosher and Carole Clark were also on the bill. A Chester-Outing scenic and the Topical Review completed the screen numbers. The Strand Soldier Quartette were on the musical program.

FORTY-FOURTH STREET THEATER.—Thirteenth week of "Hearts of the World.

SYM'PHONY.—"Ruggles of Red Gap.

BROADWAY.—To Hell with the Kaiser."

LYRIC.—Fifth week of "Sealed Orders."

Guy Standing Now a Commander

Herbert, His Father, Gets Word of Promotion and Decoration of Popular English Actor-Sailor.

Herbert Standing, for years a distinguished player on the English stage, and the father of seven sons, all of whom adopted his profession, and now a Metro player, is receiving congratulations on the double honor recently bestowed upon his eldest son, Guy Standing, by King George of England. Guy was raised from the rank of lieutenant commander to that of commander in the Royal British Navy and decorated with the order of the British Empire.

The elder Standing has heard from private sources that Guy, who abandoned the stage at the outbreak of the war to enlist in the British Navy and who served for three years in the danger zone, had a part in the recent exploit of the British Navy in bottling up the harbors of Ostend and Zeebrugge.

HEARST-PATHE WILL CONTINUE WAR NEWS.

The fact that the Hearst-Pathe News will continue to contain the same live up-to-date war stuff as before, now that Pathe is also to release the Allies' Official War Review, presented by the Committee on Public Information, is learned this week.

The war pictures which will be shown in the Allies' Official War Review are exclusive. This assures those who play both the Hearst-Pathe News and the Allies' Official War Review that all of the war pictures in these releases will be different.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT BUYS CAMERAGRAPHICS.

Through the Perkins Electric Company, Montreal, there were installed two Power's Cameragraphics in the Military Training Camp at St. Johns, P. Q. Also two machines each at Winnipeg and Calgary to the Government for educational purposes.

Miss Young to Build in Pasadena

Citizens of California City Vote Heavily in Favor of Allowing Producer to Make Enlargements to Studio

HARRY GASON, manager of Clara Kimball Young, announces that Miss Young will build her own studio in Pasadena and that the site for the studio is practically determined.

In response to Mr. Gason's recent proposal to the Pasadena Board of Trade to establish a large motion picture studio there met with much discussion, due to the fact that here-tofore all motion picture companies have been barred from the Pasadena area, the proposition was given much public consideration by prominent business men of the city, and when the proposal was put to the vote at a recent citizens' meeting 155 out of 175 votes were cast in favor of the studio.

It is believed that Miss Young will spare no expense to make her studio site one of the beauty spots of Pasadena. The various studio buildings will be drawn on the old mission style of architecture, and will include the installment of a proper-organ.

Miss Young will also build a permanent home in the fall, probably in Pasadena. Her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Kimball, purchased their home in Los Angeles last week.

Upon the completion of "The Savage Woman," which will be her next release, Miss Young will leave for New York, for the purpose of making a trip through the world, which will be started early in July. It is her intention while in New York to purchase an entire new wardrobe, consisting of gowns, hats, shoes, and all "trimmings." His company, "Cheat Cheaters," has been produced, and the matter of clothes and packing up settled, she will return at once to the West.

Elmendorf Signs With Educational Famous Traveler Makes Long Term Contract Whereby Harvest of Negatives Will Be Available to Picture Men

At last Dwight L. Elmendorf has decided to lend the public the use of his splendid collection of moving pictures, photographed during his years of travel all over the world. This he is doing through the Educational Films Corporation of America, with which he has entered into a contract for a series of his films. The signing of this contract places the Educational Films Corporation of America in the position of having signed, with one exception, all the great Nature directors in the field: Elmendorf, Bruce, Newman, Wright and Ditaros who are leaders in their respective fields.

Mr. Elmendorf was a pioneer in the fascinating field of exploring nature for the purpose of giving the public the results in the combined form of travel talk and motion pictures. He is one of the world's close-up photographers of distant objects by his use of the telephoto camera. His treasure of travel negative is now being looked over by President George A. Skinner of the Educational Films Corporation, and a sight for exhibitors' eyes the most timely scenes and subjects. These will include many of the locations of the present battlefields of Europe and of the great European cities that have been attacked by the Huns.

The first release of the Elmendorf films through the Educational will occur late in August or early in September, when they will appear at intervals of two weeks. Each subject is one reel in length, but if so desired five or six units of kindred topics may be shown together.

Schlank Opens Middle West Offices

Head of Capital Company Announces He Will Soon Come East to Open Exchanges.

The definite date for beginning to make its releases will be announced by the Capital Film Company within the next two weeks. The president and general manager, Mr. Schlank, has just returned to the company's executive offices, in Indianapolis, after completing a tour of the Middle and Western States, and has been superintending the establishing of exchanges and offices.

"Presently," he announced on his return, "I shall make a tour of the Eastern states for the same purpose, but, in the meantime, I have been assured by the men in the West, and from the exchange and appreciation of the exhibitors, that this company, as most exhibitors by this time fully understand, is dedicated to the making of one-reel, two-reel and three-reel pictures. Everywhere I have gone I find the demand for these increasing daily. We are preparing to satisfy on a large scale."

German Film Trust Carries Universal Title

Similarity of Names Causes Annoyance to Carl Laemmle and Associates—New Concern Seeks Film Control.

CABLE dispatches have lately created considerable annoyance among Universal's Famous Motion Picture Manufacturing Company because of the reported organization of a film trust in Germany carrying the title of the Universal Film Company. The word "manufacturing" is omitted from the Hun organization, but this fact may have been overlooked by persons who have confused the Laemmle concern with the German trust.

"The man who says Mr. Laemmle has any film interests in Germany is a liar," said R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, in an interview with trade newspaper representatives recently. "When Universal was organized the old Imp organization was the trust. In the consolidation of the trusts and distribution to Germany and other foreign countries Universal was designed to do a job."

The Universal Film Company of Berlin, according to recent cables, has been organized with the purpose of emerging from the war with Germany the supreme film power—if they can get away with it. The Deutches Bank, the Hamburger and American and North German Lloyd steamship lines and fifty individually rich Hunns have formed a $6,250,000 trade combine, with world control of films the objective.

Universal Has a Woman "Salesman"

Not Only That, But Miss Cross Is Traveling in the Mountain Country

TO Universal's Salt Lake office belongs the unique distinction of introducing to the film trade located in the exceedingly difficult "mountain territory" controlled by that branch the first "salesman" belong to the fair sex. This newest addition to the "Big U" sales organization is Miss Donzella Cross.

Miss Cross is no novice in the film business, for she had been connected with the executive organizations at Universal and had spent some time in Germany at the time of the consolidation with various other business enterprises in which expert salesmanship was necessary.

Miss Cross is a Salt Lake girl, a graduate of Northwestern University of Chicago, and also a graduate of the University of California; an accomplished musician and a skilled linguist, besides being "as clever as they make 'em."

She is making a trip through Utah and the adjoining territory and meeting with a success that makes Manager Hager feel his judgment was right when he selected her as a member of the sales force in Salt Lake.

CARLSON BUILDING HOUSE AT COLUMBIA CITY

The Houlton theater, Houlton, Oregon, has been leased temporarily from the proprietor by O. J. Carlson, who opened Saturday for a four-day-a-week run. Mr. Carlson is keeping his own business at Columbia City, and will be in charge of it in about two weeks.

CHAPLIN FILM MAKES NEW YORK RECORD

Records kept by Carey Wilson, sales manager of the First National Exchange, Inc., of New York, show that Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" has played in 535 theaters in New York City and State up to and including June 21. According to Mr. Wilson's calculations this record stands unique in the field of film exhibition during the current year.

HERRICK TO ADDRESS CITY EDITORS

Howard Herrick, publicity director of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, has accepted an appointment from Clinton P. Steen, president of the National Association of City Editors, to make an address at the annual convention of the association, to be held in Pittsburgh on July 6. His subject will be "The Work That Has Been Accomplished by the Division of Films."
Fight on Censorship Helps Abroad

Paul Cromelin of Inter-Ocean Shows That Films Critics Have

INTERNATIONAL FAULT.

MERICAN exhibitors do not realize that their combat-ning of unjust censorship here is reflected in the foreign picture field," says president Paul H. Cromelin, of Inter-Ocean Film. "Recently a very unpopular American censor was deposed and it will result in no censorship abroad. There is not a surplus of cense in foreign to-day, and what censors there are seem to be very fair. But just as the foreign film buyer looks to America for pictures, the foreign picture buyer looks to American censorship field for points. And they have been noting the growth of the censor-autocrat.

"Conversation with foreign buyers indicated to me that the American idea of censor-autocrat was due for foreign trial. So high are we regarded in film matters that whatever is good enough for America is good enough for a foreign country—if it has to do with pictures. If the censor-autocrat was good enough for us! Well, it had to come, said the for-bign buyers. And now they are sending with glee to their home offices copies of the Moving Picture World telling of the defeat of the autocrat. You may leave it to the men on the spot to get this good news before the proper authorities. The fall of the autocrat will have as sharp an effect on the foreign censorship situation, therefore, as on the local one, and I congratulate the forces who have brought it about."

Another side-light on this problem is reflected by recent correspondence received by the head of the Inter-Ocean from his London house, which proves that American assailants of the films have nothing on their British brethren in seeking of an entertainment they have never attained.

"Occasionally our own trade press," says Mr. Cromelin, "reveals the so-called 'singular' fact that some prominent enemy of the movies has never been to see them. I have read of a statesman of British cabinet and of well-known American reformers. But now a member of our London staff writes that he is just returned from the small English town of Carnoustie, where the Town Council was discussing the opening of cinema house next week.
He says that two 'reformers' by the name of Heggie and Pottinger were the chief foes of the local picture men, that they had reason after reason for denouncing the films.

And then in reply to a question, they both admitted they had never set foot in such dens of perdition."

Picture Company Organized in Sweden

New Concern Will Be the Largest in That Country and Probably Will Distribute Product Through Pathe

ACCORDING to advice received from Wallace J. Young, United States Consul at Gotchung, Sweden, the local press has announced that the memorandum of association for a new film company has been filed. This company will be the largest in Sweden and the next largest in Scandinavia to the Nordisk Film in Copenhagen.

The new company will do business under the name of Fimaktiebolaget Skandia, and the promoters are A-Bolags-gruppen Emissionsaktiebolag, Aktiebolaget Emissionsinstiitet, Aktiebolaget Investor, Hasselblads Fotografska Aktie-bolag, H. Mannheimer, bank director, and Nils Bouveng, director.

The company has a capital stock of $1,027,000 subs ribed for in full, divided into shares of 100 crowns ($26.80), and provision is made for its possible increase to $5,216,000.

The new concern will take over Hassel's Film House in the city for taking pictures here in Gotchung, and also Pathe Freres' branch business in Sweden. The new company thus obtains sole right to the Pathe Freres moving picture apparatus of 3 films for Sweden, Norway, and Finland, in addition to which the new company, in selling its products, can avail itself of Pathe Freres' selling organization. Further, Goteborgs Biografakstiebolag, Bi grafaflkebolaget Sveafilm and Aktiebolaget Sveafilm are to be fused into the new concern, in addition to which negotiations are being carried on with several similar companies, which will, in all probability, join the new enterprise. Thereby the latter will come in possession of a large part of the first-class moving picture show premises over the whole country, which will give an immediate market for the company's productions. Business abroad is expected to be made possible through the association with Pathe Freres.

The company expects to have under contract popular Scandinavian actors. The studio will be that of the Hassel-blad Company, at Sodra Liden (Goteborg). The present structure will be enlarged and modernized so that there may be production on a large scale. The new company will start producing in May.

Goldwyn Campaign in Foreign Markets

Arthur Ziehms, in Charge of the Export Department, Has A Varied and Picturesque Career.

T\n
O complete the initial phase of a world-wide campaign for the introduction of a new brand of pictures in a little over six months, a French company, has been accomplished by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

Goldwyn productions are being distributed to-day, on a contract basis, with local exchanges, in Great Britain and practically all the territories comprised within the British Empire—Scandinavia, in Argentina,
Uruguay, Paraguay,
Chile, Peru, Bolivia,
Ecuador, all of Central America and Mexico, and final negotiations are now in progress for France, Italy, Spain and Portugal, the Dutch East Indies, China and the Philippinos. In North and Holland.

Arthur Ziehms, the export manager of the Goldwyn company, and whose efforts are due to his directing the production of these trans-cations, has had a remarkable career, so much so that it could easily be mistaken for the scenario of a serial thriller. At the age of sixteen and a half years he joined the second regiment of the French Foregn Legion and served in the Province of Oran, in Algeria.

His first leg to fall before the last in ships of eight different nationalities, and in this way managed to travel all around the world. His first appearance in the Philip-mines, made some time later was as a member of the Sixth United States Cavalry, and under General Pershing's command he participated in the Moro campaign in 1916-1919.

After leaving the army, Mr. Ziehms took over the theatrical business in the Far East and was for six years connected with the pioneering activities of Pathe Freres in those territories. He opened and controlled the first up-to-date cabaret as well as the leading theater in the archipelago, the Cinema Savoy of Manila, which is still in business.

As vice-president of the Oriental Theatrical Corpora-

Mr. Ziehms brought the first American musical comedy company to the Orient, of which the now famous Roscoe Arbuckle and his wife were members. Later on he was instrumental in financing and managing the tour through Hawaii, Japan, China and the Philippines of the first American dramatic company ever presented on the. Mr. Ziehms, who speaks and writes half a dozen languages, has been with the Goldwyn company since the last September. In these strenuous times his experience in the army has turned out to be as useful as his knowledge of foreign markets. He is a sergeant and drill instructor of Company D of the Seventy-first Regiment of the New York Guard.

Brockliss Celebrates First Anniversary

Sidney Garrett Completing Plans for the World-wide Film Distributing Organization.

On June 25, J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., celebrated the first anniversary of its entry into the export and import film industry. Sidney Garrett, the president of this successful concern, is conceded to be one of the most energetic executives in filmdom. Born in England, he came to this country five years ago, and for a period was engaged in the export and import business of general merchandise. With neighboring Brockliss decided to open a New York office he began looking for an executive subject to whom he could place confidence and in complete charge of the Brockliss affairs. He chose Mr. Garrett socially, and was so impressed that he made him an offer to go into business with him. Mr. Garrett accepted and since then the house of Brockliss has been building a business reputation for itself.

A few of the manufacturers that this firm represented in the past year include the Rex Beach Company, Arrow Films Corporation, Rita Jolivet Film Corporation, Selig Poly-cope Company and King-Bee Billy West Company. Sidney Garrett is also exclusive purchasing agent for the Munson-Film Company of Paris, Clément Mason of Australia and the J. Frank Brockliss, Ltd., of London. These companies have their own hiring organizations. The following subjects sent there give an idea of the volume of business done: "Charlie Chaplin" (First National), "The Barrier," "Lust We Forget," "Billy Wilder" (RKO), "Eschel's Law," "The Submarine Eye," "The Whip," "Blue Jeans," "Revolution" and "The Cold Deck." Mr. Garrett's latest venture has to do with the Spanish and Portuguese speaking markets, in connection with which Mr. Garrett has been busy during the past six months on a plan that will place his firm among the export leaders covering all the neighboring republics.

Foreign News and Comment.

The control exercised by the Eastman company on the output of raw stock for picture printing is doing a lot to get-ting on the nerves of the French manufacturers. Henry Conant, the well-known cinematographic writer, reminds the French trade from the columns of the Paris Cine-Journal that all film producing enterprizes in the United States (he means to the particular concern that controls a large part of the raw stock sales) and of the fact that up to the present all attempts at competition have ended in failure. Mr. Conant attributes the Eastman supremacy to the fact that in the United States an overwhelming advantage over all competitors in the possession of the necessary ingredients that enter into the manufacture of raw film, and suggests that in this age of advanced scientific discoveries such adaptations it should not be impossible to devise, through chemical research, a practicable substitute that could be produced in all countries. Judging by the general trend of the French writer's statements, it appears that European countries, the United States and exporters have brought out the fact that the govern-ment officials engaged in the supervision of pictures destined to foreign markets have been instructed to bar the shipment of all goods containing an unknown material. As we presume, is only the first step, and an attempt will no doubt be made soon to prohibit their exhibition in this country, as they do more harm here than anywhere else by breeding senseless hatreds and antagonisms, besides serving encouragement to certain predatory interests.

President Wilson's message to Latin America, embodied in his speech to the visiting Mexican editors, is bound to accelerate a reciprocal current of good-will in all the southern republics. It has already produced in this country many beneficial effects, and one of them, the importance of which cannot be underestimated, will surely tend toward the im-provement of our relations with our Spanish and Portuguese speaking neighbors and markets. The conversations with producers and exporters have brought out the fact that the govern-ment officials engaged in the supervision of pictures destined to foreign markets have been instructed to bar the shipment of all goods containing an unknown material. As we presume, is only the first step, and an attempt will no doubt be made soon to prohibit their exhibition in this country, as they do more harm here than anywhere else by breeding senseless hatreds and antagonisms, besides serving encouragement to certain predatory interests.

Our Washington correspondent reports that under a new ruling of the War Trade Board, cinema films and photog-raphy goods will be licensed for export to European Hol-lond and Denmark proper for the near future, which will probably be permitted for export to Sweden. That country, how-ever, is not included in this ruling because of the new agree-ment just concluded, an announcement regarding which will soon be made by the board.

The board calls particular attention to the necessity of competing with the rules and regulations heretofore pub-lished with respect to obtaining import certificates and adhering to applications for export licenses with the appropriate supplemental information sheet.

Hiller & Wilk, Inc., selling agents for the foreign rights to "My Four Years in Germany," announce the disposal of the rights to the following countries: India, Burmah, Ceylon, Dutch East Indies and Philippines, to David 2. Howells. The Australian Film Film Ltd., have the same right for Australia, Hong Kong and Straits Settlements. Ambassador Gerard's picture has been shown in the largest cities of Australia to most enthusiastic audi-ences, and Mr. Howells feels certain the reception it will get in the Philippines, Japan, China and India will tend toward establishing America's position in the world war to the Oriental peoples. To insure proper showings he is planning to have the picture exhibited under government auspices in the various countries. This transaction leaves open the following countries for which negotiations are now pending: France, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Holland, Russia, Poland, Baltic States, Mexico, Central America.

S. S. Krellberg, of the Trans-Russian Film Corporation, reports that negotiations have been concluded on its behalf by H. O. Kosc, general counsel, for the film world's rights, exclusive of the United States and Canada, of "Mothers of Liberty," starring Barbara Castleton and Walter Miller. Through its London office, negotiations are pending for the disposal of Great Britain, France and Italy. Through the New York office, it has already disposed of Japan and the Far East, and is now in touch with im-porters of Scandinavia and South America.

Julian Ajuria, of the Sociedad General Cinematografica of Buenos Aires and Barcelona, is advertising Fox pictures in his main in regular American fashion. He uses many of the dailies for advertising purposes and in some of the trade papers is carrying as many as fifteen pages announcing Fox releases. By the way, Mr. Ajuria, who is in Buenos Aires at the present time, has declared in an interview published in one of the Argentinian papers that the Italian interests in Spain tried to stir a boycott of his American program among the exhibitors, and went as far as "to buy most the trade papers. This is a very serious charge—if he was quoted correctly.

Some of the Mexican papers that were running a novelization of the film "Bulls" in yesterday's chapter universal serial featuring Eddie Polo, suspended the publication when the part dealing with Mexican bandits was reached. One of the trade papers that took this action explained the affair in stating that, although there was no direct insult in the picture against the Mexican people in general, the tone of most of the last episodes could give rise to misinterpretations—and that the serial would not be shown in Mexico, anyway.

The Paralta program has been placed in Cuba by Leon Schlesinger, of the Inter-Ocean, and of World Pictures in the West Indies, by Ricardo Castro, manager of the Latin-American activities of the same company. The London and Paris offices plan a simultaneous drive on the European markets with the "Fulco" accessories, Inter-Ocean's latest acquisition.

Max Glucksmann, New York representative for Max Glucksmann of Buenos Aires, calls the attention of this department, regarding a recently published interview with Bernardo Herrera, to the fact that his firm has acquired the exclusive rights for the exploitation of "Damaged Goods" in Chile direct from the American Film Company, and have not disposed of them to any other house.

Vincente Blanco, member of the firm of Blanco & Martinez, arrived in New York about two weeks ago in search of new productions for his territory. He has already purchased the rights for Cuba on the serial "The Eagle's Eye." Most of the Spanish producing companies seem to be devoting themselves to this type of dealing with highlighted "Tragic Spain," a picture recently released in Barcelona, features Gallito, the famous matador, in the leading role.

"The Seven Deadly Sins" have been released on the Mexican market by one of the local exchanges. They are being distributed in serial form.

"The Submarine Eye" has been released in Mexico by Renau & Co., who operate one of the local exchanges.

TRANS-RUSSIAN SECURES "STOLEN ORDERS." S. S. Krellberg, president of the Trans-Russian Film Corporation, announces that after negotiations lasting two weeks, the company's general counsel, H. G. Kosch, has finally concluded arrangements with William A. Brady for the purchase of the rights to France and her colonies, Egypt, Scandinavia, China, Japan and the Philippine Islands, on "Houdini," a companion to "The Whip," and one of the successes of the year. It is understood that a record-breaking price has been paid for this picture. Prints will be immediately shipped abroad, and will open simultaneously in Paris, Copenhagen, Tokio and Hong-Kong.

EXPORT AND IMPORT GET ROLFE RIGHTS.

Ben Blumenthal, president of the Export and Import Film Corporation, has released that he has just completed negotiations whereby his firm has acquired the sole foreign rights to the forthcoming B. A. Rolfe productions.

The first release of this concern will be a sensational serial in the "Houdini" serial, and the "Kriz," whose name is familiar to theatergoers throughout the world and who has just completed an engagement at the New York Hippodrome, where his escapades have thrilled thousands at every performance.

Following this the B. A. Rolfe Company contemplates producing a series of special features in which Florence Reed will be starred.

A committee with all other releases of the B. A. Rolfe Company have been acquired for all the foreign territories by the Export and Import Film Company. The "Houdini" serial will be ready for release on or about the 15th of September, 1918, and we are informed that numerous offers have already been received.

Film Exporters Hold Fourth Meeting
Adopt By-Laws and Will Hold Election of Permanent Officers on July 11.

The adjourned meeting of the Film Exporters of America, Inc., was held at the Hotel Astor on Thursday, June 28, with Mr. Kosch June 23, as chairman, and Mr. Kosch June 27, as secretary. After the minutes of the previous meeting had been read and approved Mr. Howells, as chairman of the committee appointed to confer with the National Advisory Committee, reported that all the officers of that organization, owing to stress of business, had been unable to arrange for a conference. The committee was continued with instructions to report at the next meeting.

Mr. Kosch, as a member of the committee on cablergrams, reported that he had taken up the question of cables with the Federal Reserve Board and advised that all cable transfers of money would have to be used by all dealers and that all dealers would have to obtain certificates. Compliance with these regulations would facilitate all cables and mail.

The committee on by-laws, composed of Dr. Schallenberger, Mr. Thomas and Mr. Kosch, presented to the meeting a proposed set of by-laws prepared by Mr. Kosch, who has been acting as attorney for the association. These were discussed clause by clause and, with slight modifications, adopted.

Mr. Howells announced he had been informed that a decision declaring unconstitutional the one-half cent footage tax on films for export had been handed down by the United States Supreme Court. This matter was referred to Messrs. Howells and Schofield for investigation.

A committee on credentials was appointed to obtain applications for membership in the association, composed of Dr. W. E. Schallenberger, chairman; J. Wilk, L. Knocke, L. E. Thomas, D. P. Howells, and T. M. W. Schofield. This committee's report will be made at the next meeting.

It was tentatively resolved that the initiation fee should be fixed at $25 and the annual dues at $10.

The meeting was then adjourned to July 11, at which time the permanent officers will be elected.

Export Instructions Are Amended
Rules for Censoring Motion Pictures for Foreign Use Modified by the Division of Customs.

As a result of the visit of the committee of exporters headed by Paul Cromelin, the Division of Customs at Washington has issued a list of instructions to all others concerned the following circulars:

The instructions contained in Division of Customs Circular Letter No. 45 of May 29, 1918, are hereby amended as follows:

(1) The War Trade Board have granted R. A. C., license No. 5 for moving picture films exported to Canada, such films need not be submitted for censorship to the Commissioner of Customs, but they shall be immediately shipped to the Collector of Customs for comparison with the original. For purposes of comparison, copies of each and every print of the same subject to be projected, but only such number as he may require, as his representative copies are found to be identical with the original, all of the copies will be immediately shipped abroad, and will open simultaneously in Paris, Copenhagen, Tokio and Hong-Kong.

(2) The provisions of Circular Letter of May 26, 1918, do not apply to pictures received by the War Trade Board on or prior to June 8, 1918.

(3) When multitudinous copies of any given film are intended to be exported, only the original thereof will be censored, which, if approved, shall be sealed and retained in customs custody. After the original has been sealed, the censored copy may be submitted to the collector of Customs for comparison with the original. For purposes of comparison, copies of the same subject shall be projected, but only such number as he may require, as his representative copies are found to be identical with the original, all of the copies will be approved and sealed and retained in customs custody pending exportation.

American Film Company Outlines Plans
President Hutchinson Tells of His Policies in Distributing Concern's New Exhibitors

URING a visit to the plant of the American Film Company, the other day I learned from the president, Samuel S. Hutchinson, that an entirely new sales plan for the company’s product will be formally announced to those in the near future. This plan will be announced to all American producers from the program with which they have been associated for many years past has made a way for the new policy, which has been carefully considered and planned.

The basic features of this policy, which will soon be put in operation by the American Film Company, are:
1. Dealing direct with the exhibitor in the matter of bookings.
2. The placing of personal representatives of President Hutchinson in all required distributing centers throughout the country, and the placing in their hands, sixty days ahead of release, of every American production turned out, thus affording exhibitors the privilege of a showing before a booking is made.
3. The decision of the American Film Company to make no more program features and to confine the company’s entire activity to making multiple-reel, special features at irregular intervals.

“The announcement of our new policy will mark another milestone in the history of the American Film Company,” Hutchinson said. “American productions have long been famous for their photography, careful direction and the drawing power of their stars, but in the past we have been somewhat dependent upon the wishes of our distributing organization and so have sometimes been forced to speed up studio work to meet inessential demands for a picture on a certain date. Now, I am glad to say, all that is changed. In the future American will control the distribution of its films as well as its manufacture. We will make each picture as a separate unit, taking as long as may be necessary to handle the task properly.

Will Have Representatives in Every Center.

“Just as we have perfected our forces for the making of pictures we are now ready to build our distributing organization. I shall have personal representatives in every distributing center throughout the United States. In these representative offices we shall be there to render service. I do not mean that we aim to teach the exhibitor his business or show him how to run his theater, for we have no such thought. We know the exhibitor has problems of his own, which he himself is best fitted to handle; but the personal representatives of the president of the American Film Company will be right there on the ground, in close daily touch with the exhibitor, and making daily reports direct to the home office. It will thus be possible for us to establish a closer contact between exhibitor and manufacturer than probably any other film producer has yet obtained. We can thus be of real service in many ways to exhibitors who have not been thought possible before, and which will in no way antagonize the theater manager. I am frank in saying that we hope to gain much direct benefit from our close contact with the exhibitor.

“Our productions will feature such favorites as Mary Miles Minter and Marguerita Fisher, and in addition we shall aim to make an occasional picture with an all-star cast. Such pictures will likely base their drawing power on the story itself more than on the players. In addition to these we will control the releasing of the features made by William Fox productions, presenting the athletic star, William Russell, whose drawing power is already known to the exhibitor who has presented one of these features within the past year.

No special limit has been set on the length of our multiple-reel, special features, but they will not be longer than is in harmony with the best interests of the exhibitor. We shall begin releasing early in the fall. Directors Edward Sodeman, Henry King and Lloyd Ingraham are already well along on the first three productions.

“You will recall that about six or eight weeks ago we announced that we were prepared to pay anywhere from $1,000 to $25,000 for stories suitable for American production. As a result of that announcement we have received hundreds of manuscripts, several offers of moving picture rights to certain popular novels and to several stage plays. From this material we have already chosen a number of stories, which will, we believe, prove superior to anything that American has heretofore secured, and we still have hundreds of manuscripts to look over, as every mail is bringing in new ones. Many of the authors, I am pleased to say, are men and women whose names are well up among well-known American writers. I shall have more to say about these authors in the future.

Sales Campaign Will Start in July.

“We expect to begin our formal sales campaign some time in July, though none of the subjects will be released until early fall. In fact, the exhibitors will be given an opportunity to see for themselves every picture that we release about sixty days in advance of its first public showing. As rapidly as pictures are completed prints will be placed in the hands of my personal representatives in each territory, and these representatives will screen the productions for interested exhibitors. “These new feature American productions will be booked largely in the order in which exhibitors make application for them. Of course, exhibitors who have found William Fox productions and Marguerita Fisher pictures real drawing cards will want to file early applications, while those who have not yet had the opportunity of knowing the fine drawing power of these stars will probably give the matter consideration in order to add them to their box office attractions.

“All exhibitors should immediately get in touch either with the home office of American or with my special representatives in each territory. Until such time as we formally announce the name and territorial office of each personal representative exhibiting seeking early bookings on the forthcoming productions should write direct to the executive office of American Film Company, 627 Broadway, Chicago. Every exhibitor who addresses the home office will be advised by mail just when and where the first of the new offerings can be seen and booked; and, as I have already said, the bookings will undoubtedly depend largely upon the order in which the applications are made.

“I wish specially to emphasize the fact that the new American policy will aim at quality in its productions rather than at number.”

Goldwyn Branch Managers Meet
One Feature a Week Will Be Released in Coming Year—Number of Productions by Various Stars Announced.

A MEETING of the Goldwyn branch managers and salesmen of the Middle West was held in the Blackstone Hotel, this city, Saturday and Sunday, June 22 and 23.

Harold Bolster, vice-president of the organization, came on from New York to conduct the meeting, which was pronounced by him a great success. The new plant and policies for the near year, beginning September 9, were thoroughly outlined and discussed.

Starting September 9 Goldwyn will release one production a week instead of one every alternate week as herefofore, and the releases will be as follows: Six Geraldine Farrar features, six productions of as many of Rex Beach’s works which have yet not been adapted for photoplay purposes, the first two being “The Silver Horde” and “The Iron Trail”; eight in which Pauline Frederick will star, eight by Mae Marsh, eight by Madame Kennedy, eight by Mabel Normand and eight by Tom Moore. The first release, the title to be announced later, will have Geraldine Farrar. The new Goldwyn stars announced are Geraldine Farrar and Pauline Frederick.

Madge Kennedy was in the city during the meeting and afterward returned to New York. She has just finished "Friend Husband," which Mr. Bolster, during a brief interview, was enthusiastic in his praise of the branch managers and other workers in his organization. In his opinion they form the most efficient body of men of its size in the entire country. Mr. Goldwyn's second year, he announces, will be Goldwyn's "Success Year," although the first year far exceeded expectations.

Mr. Bolster gave a banquet at the Hotel Sherman Saturday evening to those in attendance at the meeting. He left for San Francisco Wednesday evening, where he made a stay of three days, returning to Chicago and then to New York. He will visit the Pacific Coast shortly afterward.

The branch managers present at the meeting were R. C. Robinson, Kansas City; W. Fox, Minneapolis; Paul Bush, St. Louis; and H. E. Bailey and W. E. Banford (assistant manager), Chicago.

Action on Amended Maypole Ordinance Deferred.

At the meeting of the judiciary committee of the city council, Monday, June 25, it was decided to postpone action on the Maypole ordinance until after the trial of Major Funkhouser.

Several women organizations attended this meeting and gave their approval to the Maypole measure on condition that the amendments were accepted. All of these amendments except one were accepted by Alderman Maypole. The amendment in question would give the second deputy superintendent of police the power to veto recommendations of the committee in case the vote on a picture was six to five. The censor board also would be given power to overrule the veto of the second deputy in case eight affirmative votes were recorded. Alderman Maypole withheld his decision until further consideration was given the matter.

The ordinance as amended would enforce the following provisions:

The censor board to be under control of the chief of police; censors to submit their recommendations in writing and the reports made a public record; the board to have power to recall and revoke permits; all censored pictures to bear the Chicago label, such as shown on pictures passed by the National Board of Review; permits for pictures to be held to run for at least six months; no permits to be issued while pictures are involved in court litigation.

The Funkhouser Trial.

The trial of Major Funkhouser before the Civil Service Commission, on charges filed by Assistant Chief Alcock, opened Monday morning, June 24, the first witness being the acting superintendent himself. He was on the stand all that day and most of Wednesday, June 26.

Concerning his testimony the Chicago Tribune has editorially commented that it seems impossible to have no doubt that Alcock is bent upon Major Funkhouser's official demolition, and that his animus is manifest. In brief space it charges that the acting chief's evidence up to the time of writing consists of very general statements and accusations, and expresses the opinion that as a matter of common justice the trial board should insist on the most detailed substantiation of his statements and accusations.

Nothing relating to the major's actions as a censor has thus far been touched by the whole proceeding, being confined to his actions as head of the morals department. A review of the trial so far, therefore, would have no interest for readers of these columns, as the testimony of witnesses from the red-light districts concerning the major and his aides would show.

One worthy lady—Miss Kate J. Adams, a former co-worker with the major in the vice crusade here—is much incensed against him. She is at a loss to know why he_spends a goodly part of the city money to have her shadowed by one of his men. The records in the suspended second deputy's office show that she was not shadowed until four days after she had closed her investigation, thus demonstrating that it was the general policy for the investigator to have checked on any of the reports made by her. Miss Adams, however, acknowledges her indebtedness to the investigator for the accuracy of his report as to her movements later.

Fuel Laws Must Be Rigidly Observed.

The executive committee of Chicago local, Illinois branch, M. P. E. L. of A., met Tuesday, June 25. The chief business before the committee was the consideration of a communication from Fuel Administrator Garfield regarding the extravagant use of electric displays in front of the theaters. He released soon after a week ago, declaring that conditions require the utmost economy in the use of fuel during the summer months. Members of the committee stated that quite a number of exhibitions were using electricity in the daytime, which was unaniomously declared an absolute waste. The committee therefore sent out a letter to every exhibitor in the city, irrespective of affiliation, drawing attention to this delinquency, and warning that stringent laws will be enforced against all offenders. The letter closed with the warning that lightless nights will return very shortly unless the strictest observance of light saving is followed.

In this letter the committee also drew the attention of exhibitors to the danger of using copyright music without license, as violations are now being rigidly prosecuted by music authors. The use of non-taxable music only was strongly urged by the committee.

Charles W. Taylor a Proud Father.

Charles W. Taylor, Omaha branch manager for Select Pictures Corporation, who attended the recent convention of the general officers and branch managers of that organization in this city, was one of the proudest men at the gathering. His unusual elation was due to the fact that a baby girl was born nine days before he left his home the morning of the first day of the convention. Both mother and baby were doing well, Charlie stated, and she sent a telegram, which was read at the Chicago meeting in the presence of Sherman managers and sheds, that Select men were present.

Mr. Taylor is well known in Chicago film circles, having been Chicago manager for several years with the General Film Company in the City Hall Square Building.

Select's Chicago Office Breaks Record.

Fred C. Aiken, Chicago manager of Select, made an announcement at the late Chicago convention which greatly enthused all present at the office. He declared that his office had broken all previous records during the week in which the convention was held, and both he and Ben W. Beadell, Chicago sales manager, received hearty congratulations from the general offices of the managers present.

Changes in Chicago Distributing Circles.

Merle E. Smith, formerly district manager of the George Kleine System for the Middle and Far West, was promoted on June 14 to the position of general manager of the entire system.

William H. Jenner, manager of the Fox Chicago office, resigned that position to accept that of assistant general manager of the George Kleine System.

H. W. Willard has succeeded William H. Jenner as manager of the Fox Chicago office. Mr. Willard formerly held the position of district auditor for Mr. Beadell, and afterward became assistant business manager for Triangle's Chicago office for two years.

Harry A. Scott, district manager of the George Kleine System in eastern territory, resigned that position June 15.

Metro War Picture Popular.

Starting July 7 "To Hell With the Kaiser" (Metro) will have a two-weeks' run at The Playhouse, on Michigan avenue. This strong Metro production is having great success in Chicago and seldom misses crowded houses.

"Sandy" (Lasky) in the last moment was substituted for "A Desert in Wooling" at Orchestra Hall for the week beginning Sunday, June 22. Assistant Manager Hill informed me that business was fair with this picture.

Charles Ray in "The Claws of the Hun" is the attraction for the week of June 30. This is a Thomas Ince picture.

Linick to Manage Chicago Office of Circle Film.

Fred Linick, formerly on the sales force of the Unity Photoplays Company, informed this office that he has been appointed manager of the Chicago office of the Circle Film Exchange, a New York organization, which at present is buying and distributing state rights features and single and complete comedies. The office is located at 112 North La Salle street, and the business in the states of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin will be handled from it. A. M. Gollos, formerly of the Photo Releasing Company, is the New York representative.
News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. F. HARLEMAN

Teachers' Meddling Disavowed by Weidner

Assistant War Savings Director Says They Acted in Defiance of National Committee's Wishes.

MOTION picture exhibitors throughout the United States will be glad to learn of the official ruling just obtained for them by Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of Metro Pictures Corporation, from the National War Savings Committee. It is to the effect that any one who advises school children, their parents, guardians, or teachers, to stay away from motion picture theaters during the war is acting in defiance of the wishes of the National Committee.

Recently in California several public school instructors told their pupils that, were they really patriotic, they would avoid going to motion picture theaters and devote the money thus saved by them and their families to the purchase of thrift and war savings stamps.

When they were asked for their authority for such statements, according to Mr. Engel, they construed the wishes of the National War Savings Committee as expressed by G. A. Davidson, state director of war savings for California.

While indigent meetings were being held in Los Angeles and other large cities, exchange checks, and producers affected by these wild statements, Mr. Engel called the attention of the War Savings Committee to the motion picture industry's tremendous financial activities in behalf of the military effort, and to the great revenue which naturally would be lost to the Treasury if the public were mislead into staying away from motion picture theaters.

Mr. Engel's letter bore valuable fruit; for it obtained from Perry W. Weidner, assistant state director of war savings for California, a letter which reads: "The question of whether the theater industry—executives, actors, directors, writers, etc.—theater ticket tax, contributed by the people, truly, but made possible as a result of the government, because it is not in any degree maintained despite the many handicaps under which it operates.

Surely an industry so whole-heartedly American, so enthusiastically minded to help win the war, so capable of preaching the President's stamps, democracy and anti-Prussianism—certainly such a business the pleasure of the people and for the people, should not be further hampered by asking children and their parents to abstain from supporting it.

JOSEPH W. ENGEL

Treasurer Metro Pictures Corporation.

In reply to Mr. Engel's letter the following official statement of the National and California State War Savings Committees' attitude and intentions was written by Perry W. Weidner, assistant state director for California, and Mr. Engel was authorized to give this official statement to the entire motion picture industry. Mr. Weidner's letter is, in part, as follows:

We greatly appreciate the information contained in your favor of the 14th instant, and while we know that the tax burden upon all sources of your industry ran well up into seven figures, yet we did not realize that it reaches nine figures.

Several sources have been advised that some people are telling the people, especially children, to avoid motion picture theaters as a plan to have money with which to purchase War Savings Stamps. Such a movement is unauthorized either by the National or State War Savings Committees.

By Perry W. Weidner, Assistant State Director.

In addition to writing this letter, so clearly defining the government's attitude, Mr. Weidner informed Mr. Engel that he was forwarding the two letters above quoted and all pertinent data direct to Mr. Weidner at the office in New York.

Shed no light on the fact that the government is not only not opposed to attendance at motion picture theaters but indeed wishes eagerly to encourage it.

Triangle Players at Bear Valley

Two new players have been engaged by Triangle for Director J. W. McLaughlin's latest feature picture, "Beyond the Shadows," in which William Desmond has the leading role.

They are Hal Roach and Dorothy Mackaill. They have been employed for the summer season to work at the heavy, and Bert Apling, who also has an important part.

The McLaughlin company is now at Bear Valley for exteriors and it is expected that the director will secure some wonderful scenic beauties in the vicinity of the historic story of the Canadian North-West Mounted Police.

Since the completion of the Triangle's big Culver City studios for the mountains it was expected that not more than a week would be required on the exteriors, but a rainstorm was encountered, which may give the players two weeks in the mountains. With Director McLaughlin are William Desmond; his leading woman, Josie Sedgwick; Ed Brady, Ben Lewis, John P. Wilde, Hugh Sutherland, Bert Apling, John Lince, Graham Fettie and Alberta Lee.

Hart Ends First Year of Artcraft Contract.

When William S. Hart returned from filming the final scenes of "Riddle Gawne" he completed the first year of his contract with the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, through which his productions are being released. The Artcraft contract calls for eight pictures a year, featuring the famous Western actor, and "Riddle Gawne" is the eighth. The contract, however, does not expire with the ending of the fiscal year, but continues for some time to come. The William S. Hart Productions, Inc., will continue to produce at the company's own studio in Hollywood, and the pictures will still be marketed through Artcraft.

Plans for the second year of the contract have been practically completed and several stories are ready for Mr. Hart to begin filming. Of the eight pictures which were under consideration, one is a change from the average Hart production, although it is a Western story, as it deals to a great extent with military affairs, and Mr. Hart, in part of it, will be clad in khaki.
instead of in the usual Western attire, with which he is identified. The plot, however, will not be of the regular "war story" variety, and will be laid entirely in the Western Untouched States. Where there will be but little scene setting, except in the well-known Hart battles, in which revolvers and fists play the prominent parts.

Regarding the completion of the first year under his new arrangement, Mr. Hart says: "The accomplishments of the last twelve months have been a source of great gratification to me. I believe that they have formed the brightest year of my career to date. I also believe, judging not from my own viewpoint, but from the viewpoint of the public with which I am familiarized through various sources, that the future holds far more than the past. My pictures seem to increase consistently in popularity and art, and I am going to continue to work with the idea that success is still to be achieved. No man is a success when he admits it himself, for then ambition ceases, and success without ambition is a gun without a bullet—you can aim at anything, but you can't hit it."

Fire at Diando Studios.

Valuable films belonging to pictures under production by the Diando Film Corporation were destroyed in a fire of unknown origin at the studios on Saturday, June 15. W. A. S. Douglas, president of the company, estimates the loss at approximately $10,000.

The fire started in the concrete film vault and was discovered by Studio Manager John English. He received burns about the face and arms in saving some of the films. The prompt action of the studio fire force in going into the vault, beating the fire out, saved many thousands of dollars in positive prints and camera equipment.

Upon checking up the films that were saved it was found that many scenes from the "Wolf-faced Man" serial and the Baby Mary film had been destroyed. The one most valuable scenes lost was a stunt performed by George Larkin for the serial, which required two hundred extras for atmosphere.

An investigation conducted by Mr. Douglas and Mr. Osborne, chief executives of the company, has failed to discover the cause.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Olga Grey, who was with the Triangle playing forces for a short time during which she supported J. Barney Sherry in a most unusual role picture, "Panaties," is again at the Triangle--Culver City studios, having been especially engaged for an important part in Director Christy Cabanne's new picture, the temporary title of which is "The Mayor of Filbert." Sam Landers, who has cranked the camera for Mr. Cabanne on many of his past pictures, will be responsible for the photography in this feature.

William Dowlan has been engaged by Triangle and is now handling the most unusual feature picture at the Culver City studios, "Allis Mary Brown," a screen version of the novel by Chasson Furgeson, and the leading role. Dowlan has been directing Mary Miles Minter until recently. Before joining the American forces he was a director at Universal. In this new film, E. Wagenhowere, Furgeson essay a dual role, that of a college youth who turns crook and works in the disguise of a pretty young stenographer.

Buff Jones, champion rope thrower and bronco rider, is no longer a member of Director Cliff Smith's western company, which makes triangle thrillers with Roy Stewart as the hero. Jones is now wearing Uncle Sam's "o. d." He has enlisted in the army and is employing his talents breaking horses and for Uncle Sam's officers at the remount station near Jacksonville, Florida.

Director Jack Conway, Earle Williams and a company of Vitagraph players have returned to Los Angeles after spending eight days on location near Santa Barbara, the exception of Earle Williams, who returned a day before the others, the entire company suffered from eye trouble due to working on location with artificial lights.

On Harry Carey, Universal's cowboy star, was conferred a signal honor recently by the Los Angeles Advertising Club, when he was chosen to act as grand marshal of the parade of club members from the Southern Pacific station to the organization's headquarters, staged in honor of the visit of Celestine J. Sullivan, special envoy from President Wilson to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. Sullivan brought to the Angeleno a message from the nation's Chief Executive urging every member to attend the convention of the associated clubs at San Francisco, July 7 to 11, inclusive. Carey with his band of Universal cowboys welcomed the official emissary with a fusillade of gun shots and a series of war whoops.

Mary MacLaren's second Universal special production has just been completed under the direction of Ida May Park. The photodrama is an adaptation of the story, "Bread," by Evelyn Campbell, who first achieved fame in the films by playing the role of Ophelia, in which Dorothy Phillips recently starred. "Bread" is the story of a young girl whose whole scheme of existence is changed by the entrance of a loaf of bread into her life. Included in the cast are Kenneth Harlan, Edward Cecil and Virginia Chester.

William Russell has commenced work on his fourth feature at the head of his own company, "All the World to Nothing." Henry King, who has produced all of the features with this star in since he formed William Russell Pictures, is again handling the directing end of the picture. Winifred Westover, who made her debut as leading woman for Russell in his last feature, has been held over to play opposite him in his present story.

With Carmel Myers as the star, a Bluebird phosphotography version of Margaret Wildderman's well-known novel, "Why Not?" has just been completed at the Bluebird's west coast studios. Thomas Holding and Philo Mcullough have the principal masculine roles. The production was directed by Jack Williams and was produced by Jane Williams. The story concerns a small legacy, who uses the money she inherits to make the dreams of those about her come true. The play abounds in picturesque California scenery, as Mount Wilson, Bear Valley, Seven Oaks, and Unknown spots of Southern California were used as locations.

Director Stuart Paton has taken the Diando serial company to Newhall for several days. A mountain side will be photographed, in which George Larkin and Betty Compton will be racing. Fifty boys are with the company and all of them are camping.

After an illness of several weeks Harry Pollard, best known for his direction of Margaritha Fisher productions for Universal, is back at the Bluebird west coast studios. Pollard started to direct "Which Woman?" starring Priscilla Dean and Ella Hall, but was taken ill early in the production, and the directorial megaphone was turned over to Tod Browning.

Edith Roberts, who first claimed film fame as the leading woman of the Lyons-Moran comedies, has become a full- fledged Bluebird star and henceforth will be seen in comedies of her own. She is the leading woman for her first Bluebird production, a screen version of Ethel M. Kelly's play, novel, "Turn About Eleanor." It was made under the direction of Tod Browning. Thornton Church, Hal Cooley, Lottie Kruse and Winifred Greenwood are prominent in her supporting cast. The script was written by Bernard McConville.

Lois Weber's next production, starring Mildred Harris, will be another story from the pen of Marian Orth, author of "The Price of a Good Time." Production on this new play has already started at the Weber studios in Hollywood, with a notable cast surrounding the clever star of "The Doctor and the Woman," "The Price of a Good Time" and "For Husbands Only." Lew Cody, who was seen in the leading masculine role in the latter named photodrama, will also play opposite Mildred Harris in this newest Lois Weber creation. "Orange Blossoms" is the tentative title given by the story, and it will be made at the Weber studios under that name.

ROUSSEAU GOES TO SPARTANBURG.

Arthur E. Rousseau, for three years secretary of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has resigned. Mr. Rousseau will go to Camp Wadsworth at Spartanburg for military training. He is conversant with the English, French, Flemish and German languages. Mr. Rousseau was born in Roulers, Belgium. He came to the United States in December, 1913, and a few months later entered the service of Pathe. In August, 1914, he became secretary of the corporation, which office he has held ever since.

Mr. Rousseau has been succeeded by Lewis Innerarity, a lawyer and banking authority of Baltimore.
Coming Year to Make Industrial Record

World Works Points Out to Exhibitors Great Opportunities to Capitalize Remarkable Financial Conditions

THE coming season will mark the biggest year in the history of the motion picture industry, in the opinion of World Pictures. This is not the hope born of desire but is the deduction based on certain incontestible facts. In the last issue of World Works, a house organ published by the corporation and distributed among its employees, attention is called to the fact that opportunity is crying in a stentorian voice; that she is close at hand and exhibitors should not neglect the chance of reaping the reward that accrues to the alert and industrious.

An enumeration of these facts follows:

- Farm Products. A billion-bushel wheat crop. The states particularly interested are those north of the Mason and Dixon line.
- The largest oat, barley and rye crop in the history of the United States. This will be of vital benefit to the northern states.
- The biggest yield of flax. Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Kentucky will cash in.
- A bumper crop of tobacco. Kentucky, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Missouri and Connecticut are the principal producers.
- All of these products will be sold at prices that insure a tremendous income to the farmer and makes him a creature of wealth.

Cotton and Corn—The United States crop forecast on these two essentials indicates an enormous yield. All southern states will profit on cotton. Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, the principal states of the corn belt, will reap greater than the proportion of the cereal.

Fruits—The reports for the apple crop show that New York State alone, as an example, will produce over 1,200,000 barrels, the largest crop recorded. Other states interested are Washington, Oregon, Missouri and Michigan. On small fruits the South, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, New Jersey, Delaware and New York are particularly fortunate, and first-class conditions existing insure large supplies.

Beet Sugar—Colorado, Utah and Wisconsin report large increase in first-class growing conditions.

Labor Conditions. Inasmuch as the demand exceeds the supply, this will result in absolute elimination of unemployment. The highest wage scale in the history of the world will be paid to industrial and farm workers. The inevitable relations existing between employer and employee insure a settled condition existing in permanency of employment.

Railroad Prosperity. The increase of freight rates that have just gone into effect means $700,000,000 additional income. The greater portion of this will be spent for rolling stock and other equipment, the manufacture of which gives employment to millions, at higher wages, and the entire United States will be favorably affected.

Cotton Mills and Products. Depleted stocks, both here and abroad, must be restored. Mills in New England and southern states will be kept busy.

Shipbuilding. The tremendous tonnage contracted for by the Shipping Board will make for banner business in not alone such communities as are affected by the steel industry allied to the order. Those states that are the center of the lumber industry will be favorably affected through the construction of wooden ships. This applies to Washington, Oregon, Maine, North and South Carolina, Virginia, Arkansas and Louisiana, all of which are timber states.

In view of the fact that over three million tons of new shipping is promised this year the new ship yards located in the states named and all others are being constructed in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, Texas, California, Oregon and Washington, together with the states bordering on the Great Lakes, will secure unprecedented prosperity because of the shipbuilding activity. The influx of labor to these shipbuilding points and the distribution of wages running into billions will be of tremendous moment to the thousand and one industries already in receipt of contracts.

Such states as producers of raw products as iron, coal, copper, lead and zinc will have their laps filled overflowing with wealth.

The sheep raising states will also participate in this wonderful prosperity. Wool commands the highest price known in the history of the world.

Munitions Manufacture—In order to relieve freight and terminal congestion the government has ordered all munition work scattered. This will send to the Central States tremendous contracts that heretofore have been given to manufacturers located near the coast. This is of particular interest to Indiana and the Dakotas.

And in all with bank vaults crowded with gold and rates of interest low, the desire for entertainment by men, women and children must necessarily become intense and the roofs, steeples, sliding down ropes and otherwise emulating a circus acrobat in his initial Paramount picture, 'Under the Top,' under the direction of Donald Crisp. Mr. Stone works with a will, likes it and has made a splendid impression by his democratic manner and pleasant personality.

'Lisa Lee, our new 'find,' has just arrived and will start work immediately.

'Ethel Clayton will also start on her first picture as soon as Robert Vignola returns to the studio. Mr. Vignola was on his way East, in fact he had already reached Albany when he received his 'sailing orders' to return.

'George Melford has almost finished the Wallace Reid picture, 'The Source,' Cecil B. De Mille has practically finished cutting 'We Can't Have Everything.' It was shown recently in the projection room, and although not presented in finished form, was unanimously voted a positive success by those who saw it. It is full of laughs and big scenes and presents a novel story.

The property, construction and scenic departments have been very busy of late with the various sets for the new stars, Fred Stone's story, in particular, being a cinematic joy. Calls for many novel effects that are uncommon to the film studio, such as tents, cages for wild beasts, the animal themselves, vast throngs of extras, performers for the circus and so on. Mr. Stone is a remarkably cool performer. Various other stars and companies are already in the midst of great activities for the summer and on the whole our studios will easily establish production records on the West coast in the coming months.'

MANAGER NAT BARACH JOINS THE COLORS.

Another star has been added to the service flag of World Pictures. Nat Barach, manager of the Indianapolis branch of World Pictures, left June 20 for Spartanburg to enter the ranks of Uncle Sam's boys to take up the fight to make the world safe for democracy.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD 199
Baxter of Denver's Isis Early on the Job
Stays on It, Too, Right Up to the Closing Hour, With Open Ears for Comments of Patrons.

By a Goldwyn Executive.

A MAN, woman or child cannot walk out through the doors of the Isis, saying "I like this show" or "I don't like this show" without coming into instant contact with S. L. Baxter, the owner of the Isis, for, from early morning until the hour "goes dark" around the business in person instead of by proxy. He has seen too many absentee owners of picture houses go to the wall through incompetent management to risk having anything happen from similar causes to his own profitable and splendidly managed Isis.

If the departing patron has said, "I don't like this show," Baxter goes after him with even greater certainty than if the expression was favorable, saying: "Would you mind telling me what things you didn't like? I own this theater and am trying to present in it the things you—and two hundred thousand other "yous" in Denver—like. If I cannot have here at the Isis at least three—and maybe four out of five—of the things you like, then I am going to lose your patronage after a while; and that is just what I do not want to do."

One is correct in the surmise that thus approached the patron invariably reveals the source of his dissatisfaction. It is correct, too, to assert that the patronage of Baxter's Isis theater comes very near picking its own programs for that house.

Five-Cent Admissions Now Only a Memory.

S. L. Baxter has a twinkle in his eye in surveying the era of advanced prices in the present day Denver as compared with the midnight, seated prices that existed when he became the exhibitor of Colorado's chief city. So firmly on the five-cent scale—indeed only for that period, but seemingly for the future as well—that when the houses were ten cents some of the newspapers of Denver made vigorous outcry against the admission of the people of a democratic amusement at a democratic price of admission, and invited the grand jury to take action against the early kings of the local cinema.

Baxter is one of the pioneers among Western exhibitors; a man who sat in at the beginning, kept ahead of competition for many years and stands at the forefront in picture presentation in this modern era, in which showmanship has developed to a point where it is rated as being 50 per cent. responsible for the success or failure of a production.

"The things a veteran exhibitor must guard against most of all," says this alert exhibitor, "are getting out of touch with what is going on in the city. Neither of these things will ever happen at the Isis, for I drive myself too hard. I know the newspaper business from long association and friendship with newspaper men of all types. I have been absorbed in the absorption of a newspaper paper point of view. I have sat at a newspaper office and seen the news arrive over the desks of the news and cable editors that it has always been a passion with me to watch imagination, if not knowledge, of the editor whose hands the dispatches fall. The success of a newspaper is determined by the originality and power with which the editors or owners invest their news."

A Showman Must Create an Atmosphere.

"Exactly the same thing can be said of a motion picture showman. He must create an atmosphere. He must know angle. He must have vision and imagination. If he possesses these things, he has a chance to strike that is an adequate 50 per cent. in quality he can increase the percentage of power of the picture as high as ninety or even ninety-five per cent."

"But my greatest interest lies in knowing my patronage, not merely by sight as they pass in or out of the Isis, but by name and address. I am the man that the patron of the Isis, by his own volition, self talk with each other. For years my programs at the Isis have been hand-picked by my audiences in conjunction with the programs. This is left to chance or accident. The same time of error in selection rarely ever happens a second time in the Isis, because there are too many of my patrons ready to say, 'Mr. Baxter, I don't like that feature and here are my reasons.' There are even more of the Isis patrons who say, 'Mr. Baxter, this is the kind of picture we want at the Isis.' There is a distinct Denver taste in pictures and we have catered to it."

Baxter a Liberal Advertiser.

Mr. Baxter is the Goldwyn first run in Denver and has had fine success with the Goldwyn stars and productions, thus duplicating the records made by Goldwyn exhibitors throughout his territory. He is a liberal advertiser in the daily newspapers of his city and receives excellent editorial co-operation from the publishers of Denver.

At the present time the Rocky Mountain News and Times seem to be giving the advertisers of their city the most liberal and intelligent co-operation through the medium of well-developed motion picture departments. But the powerful Denver Post brings tremendous results for its amusement advertisers and rates as perhaps the finest of the papers, as it is making friendships with everyone in the industry in Denver, from Francisco Messrs. Tannen and Bonfield are shown members, the owners of a circus for many years, operators of varied amusement enterprises and the employers of the late F. W. White. One of the great drama writers of the country, who on each Sunday for years published the most distinctive theatrical article in the entire field of American journalism.

"Pershing's Crusaders" Widely Used Term.

That the term, "Pershing's Crusaders," which is the name given the first United States official feature film, is rapidly becoming a phrase of national significance is evidenced by scores of press clippings being received daily at the publicity office of the Committee on Public Information's division of films.

Not only do newspaper reports reveal the fact that "Pershing's Crusaders" has become a national byword, but it also has been found that the phrase is being used repeatedly in scores of advertisements directed to friends and relatives of soldiers and to the fighting men themselves.

An official of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, through whose exchanges "Pershing's Crusaders" is being distributed, ascribes this highly interesting development to the tremendous popularity of the film "Pershing's Crusaders" and to the nation-wide publicity that the picture has received.

TWO MORE MONTREAL EXHIBITORS FINED.

Two more exhibitors of Montreal, Quebec, have been found guilty of permitting unaccompanied children to see moving pictures, as a result of the continuation of the campaign by the local police authorities to enforce the law which prohibits the admission of unaccompanied children into a theater. The two exhibitors, Harry Poulos and George Gladianos, were found guilty by Recorder Semple and each is sentenced to pay a fine of $50 and costs each. A few days before their conviction, "Pershing's Crusaders" was shown in Montreal for the same offense, and before that another group of local theater men were similarly accused and found guilty. There are not many more exhibitors in Montreal. The theater trade has created a film censorship board and has tended to discourage Montreal exhibitors in their efforts to continue in business despite war taxes and other heavy assessments.

INFORMATION COMMITTEE MAKES STATEMENT.

An impression prevails that the Government is not supplying any war film to be used in the news weeklies issued by the motion picture companies, due to the release of the Allies' Official War Review.

Charles S. Hart, director, states that the division of films is supplying material to the news weeklies regularly. The Allies' Official War Review is an entirely separate release, issued weekly by the division and distributed through Pathé.

SERGEANT GILL WOUNDED AT CHATEAU THIERRY.

Sergeant M. Gill, of the United States Marines, who played the part of the Bible reading sharpshooter in the trench scene of George Kleine's patriotic picture, "The Unbeliever," was among the severely wounded in one of General Pershing's casualty lists. It is assumed Sergeant Gill fell in one of the attacks at Chateau Thierry. From the mimic to the real warfare was but a short step in this soldier's life.
Reversing Old-Time School Proverbs

Present-Day Educators Not as Enthusiastic as Their Forefathers In Using Old-Time Proverbs.

By Rev. W. H. Jackson

IN THE good old school days when writing was taught by means of “copy-books” and a two-fold lesson imparted by always using a proverb as the writing example, wisdom was instilled into the young mind while learning to write. It is not surprising that one who learned to write by copying “Procrastination is the thief of time” say a hundred times, finds it hard to forget the wisdom forced upon memory’s eternal tablet. Equally difficult is it to forget that other helpful piece of wisdom, “Strike the iron while it is hot,” for this was another of those precious truths written upon the mind and the paper at the same time. After many years, how often have we been thankful for that foresight in the days of practice, when finding such a happy method of forcing home a truth while teaching a practical need; how many a time have these well-learned lessons come to the aid of the scholar in after years and proved helpful in a day-and-age-antic world even when the most essential need of those wise times. This same method of teaching is unfortunately now no longer common, indeed if it were the scholars would be horrified to find that their teachers were often practicing the very contrary to the teaching of the precept.

In a recent issue of this paper it was necessary to point out that the evil which occupied our attention with an undue effect to the loss of the time stolen, but it was further deliberately applied to the theft of the educational advantages now so needed by the youth of the land. Although the article in question was written as a result of positive experience gained among teaching authorities, it was never for a moment supposed that a school journal would, through its editor, stand for such a reactionary policy, yet, strange to say, the writer has a letter before him in which the Editor of a School Journal informs us that he is an advocate of waiting until “after the war” policy before giving the scholars the immediate benefits of the unlimited powers of the moving pictures; though he believes that the necessity of procrastination or the benefit of “striking the iron while it is hot,”

The Essential of Moving Pictures.

The war has not been all misfortune; along with many other benefits following in its train, we can only be concerned here with the fact that we have learned that the moving picture has become an acknowledged essential. In the last issue of the Moving Picture World, Secretary McAadoo, George Creel, H. A. Garfield and Herbert Hoover have given their testimony to the essential nature of the moving pictures; there are at the present time no four men in the world whose opinion and word is of more importance or value, and why? All of these men believe that it is both wise and timely to “strike the iron while it is hot,” put their belief into unerring practice.

These men, each in his own way a national leader, found that the moving picture was the greatest teacher in the world. One found that for nation-wide publicity the picture gave him the best results, another seeking to advise the nation on matters of food conservation turned to the moving picture for both precept and example. Another and perhaps greatest of all, when seeking to raise such a vast amount of money wherewith to finance many nations, found the moving picture his first and greatest helper.

Tens of millions of people were taught the fundamentals of the principles on which they were based, all without ever the knowledge of the scholars. No school teacher, whose profession is to teach and use the best teaching agencies think differently, and are going to wait “until after the war,” they don’t believe in the truth taught by “striking the iron while it is hot,” they prefer procrastination. What an absurd position! Suppose Secretary McAadoo had said, “Wait until after the war,” where would he have gotten his millions of dollars? Where would the Red Cross drive have been but for the enthusiasm of the pictures? Suppose Secretary Garfield had said, “Wait until after the war”; it makes one indignant to be called upon to deal with such narrow views, and this indignation is the deeper when we have to think that people with educational interests entrusted to them are the leaders in procrastination, and will allow the iron to chill before they will strike even a very tardy blow to mould it into shape; there is evidently something beneath the surface which is hidden for very shame, in the hope that the time between now and “after the war” will give it occasion to pass away or else to appear in a less discreditable form. The great glory of the moving picture lies in the fact that when given the opportunity it has always proved itself an educational tool, and in the non-extensive vision of the leaders in school thought. It is, as it were, a new beginning. It is now a government acknowledged essential. From this we are bound to fear that school teachers dread the fact that when given full scope in the school it may become the essential all the more does it not really wish to have it—yet we have some idea of it.

The Passing of Narrowness.

Another great lesson taught by the conflict and strife now raging is that many of those narrow ideas of but a few years ago are passing away. In politics, religion, in all ways of strong partialism there has been such a coming together that many of us have found it difficult to place their parties. Men are now nearly as discreditable; men have grown tolerant and broad, and in their growing have grown great; breadth is greatness, narrowness is always small, narrowness is not half as good as the narrow. The passing of narrowness, if it is not beneficial, is a rut always a narrow gauge road, the greatest misery is that this growth in principle has not yet reached our public school system, not because of the hindrance of the public but because of the non-extensive vision of the leaders in school thought. If further proof were desired it can readily found in those schools where more wide awake leaders have put the pictures to the test and have found them helpful to the well-being of the young people; the enthusiasm of these men is unbounded and they are among the first to lament the lack of progress among their own class.

Contrasts Between the First and the Last.

The President of the United States at the break of the war sent for a leading moving picture man and asked him to organize a Red Cross Moving Picture Bureau. The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States sought the help of the moving pictures to educate the people along those necessary lines which would lead them to such an understanding of the occasion that a great financial drive might be successful. At the present time the government is maintaining a moving picture bureau for the purpose of bringing from the war an educational message which might be published under governmental direction for the perfect instruction of the people of the United States. These leaders of the nation are first to know, and to use their knowledge of the unlimited powers the pictures, their first knowledge has been vindicated not only by results but by their written testimony. Leaders of scholastic thought, however, think differently; they are last thinkers; for them “after the war” is time enough; the scholars might know too much and too soon; they must be guarded and protected lest they make too much progress; to learn too quickly may be not for good for their nerves; they must go slowly, for school is taught slowly and they must hew close to their traditions. In all the camps and cantonments the moving picture is the first thing installed for teaching purposes, governmental instruction by moving pictures is commanded, everything is taught by means of the pictures;
how thankful we ought to be that our cantonments are not in the hands of those who are going to wait "until after the war" before using the pictures for teaching purposes. It is true that this kind of neglect is needed to better describe this crime against the youth of our schools, it is a compliment to call it ignorance because it more nearly approaches willful and criminal neglect. To those of us who are daily able to see the governmental and other pictures in this New York center of advance picture teaching, there always comes a feeling of sadness that there are thousands upon thousands who cannot enjoy the privileges which are ours; this feeling naturally inspires the efforts to do all in our power to have other multitudes share with us this great blessing. Who then can describe our feelings if we approach those through whom this result can be best obtained they answer "not yet," "we are too busy with less important things which we prefer to do."

Latest From Robert C. Bruce

Regions Covered by Noted Photographer Include Wyoming, Montanas, Idaho and California with One Great Shot in Redwood Country.

Robert C. Bruce, whose beautiful sceneries of the Great West are eagerly awaited by Rialto and Rivoli patrons in New York and by the patrons of many other first-run houses throughout the country, has just emerged from the California wilds, where he has been filming Yosemite Park, as well as the forests of giant redwoods and the Mount Shasta range in the northern part of the Golden State.

Mr. Bruce writes to the Educational Films Corporation that so far this season he has obtained about 12,000 feet of exceptionally good film and he feels exceedingly pleased with his progress. From now on—he is working in Oregon and Washington—he must "jump very fast," as the forest fires are starting earlier than usual and these cause an atmospheric haze that interferes with the best photography. Among the Bruce subjects which will be released late this summer are "The Tenderfoot," "The Logging Drive," and "The Tides of Yesterday." The last named is a poetic idyll on the order of "A World o' Dreams" or "The Trail To The Sky." It is founded on Longfellow's poem, "The Tide Rises, The Tide Falls" and is a picture symphony of the sea in daylight, twilight, darkness and sunrise.

"For three years," Mr. Bruce writes, "I have been trying to get a good logging picture—not the fake stuff but the actual smashing of a log jam and the drive of the giant logs down the roaring current. I believe I have at last achieved this in my new picture, "The Logging Drive," which will also give a vivid presentation of logging and lumbering among the redwoods."

Besides expeditions to the Teton Mountains, Wyoming; the Montana mountains; the Priest River and Shoshone Falls country in Idaho; the Shasta range and Lake Tahoe in California, Mr. Bruce and his party have completed an extensive scenic study of the Yellowstone National Park. The human and animal crew included a cowboy guide, two helpers, a raw recruit from the film colony of San Francisco, a great dane, the wire-haired terrier Buddy, and the usual horses and pack animals. The film friend from San Francisco obligingly posed for Mr. Bruce in the role of "The Tenderfoot," the title around which Bruce has grouped one of the reels. The theme is said to enable him to combine his well known humor and gay insouciance of spirit with the grandeur of the magnificent Yosemite subject.

Recently the supply of Bruces available for distribution by the Educational has been running rather low, so it will be good news with the advent of the Nature director's art that he is practically ready with another series.

"Making an American Cheese" (Universal).

In the 7th issue of the Screen Magazine will be found an interesting and well-illustrated story on the making of American cheese. The milk heated in vats to 86 degrees Fahrenheit is treated to the proper quantities of vegetable coloring matter and rennet extract, after which the milk coagulates frequent tests are made for the thickness of the curd. With wire grids the curd is cut fine to drain out the whey. As the curd grows thicker it is molded into small strips for salting, after which it is packed into forms in which it is pressed for eighteen hours. Good cheese should be about one third butter fat we are told, and each batch is tested to prove this quality. The full process of manufacture takes 24 hours, but it is months before the cheese is cured ready for eating.

"Britain's Bulwarks No. 9" (Pathé).

This instructive subject pictures intimately a visit of King George and Queen Mary to the French front. They visit the hospital at Etaples, meet the Prince of Wales, Sir Douglas Haig and King Albert of Belgium. They also inspect aeroplanes, tanks, flame throwers and study other things included under the general heading "the black arts of war."

"From Nature's Curiosity Shop" (Universal).

An interesting collection of curious little animals mostly of the lizard family are shown in the 7th issue of the Screen Magazine. Among them is the Peruvian Tegu, very strong for his size, and also very fat and fond of chickens. The Gila monster, whose bite is very poisonous, is shown. The Mexican Horned Toad we are told is also really a lizard, and has an ingrowing disposition. The Zonure, a spiky resident of the African deserts and first cousin to the American lizards, is introduced in a slightly peevish condition. The last of this interesting group is the shingle-backed Australian lizard.

"Schematography" (Paramount-Bray).

An interesting example of the advancement of American universities in the preparation of the millions of young men and women who each year enter their doors for the purpose of acquiring an education, is shown in the 126th issue of the Pictograph. This picture, made through the courtesy of Teachers College of Columbia University, shows how the physical welfare of the students is kept constantly in sight by a system of charts. On entering the college each student has a schematograph or outline photograph made which shows the exact contour of body and limbs. By comparing this with the outline of a normally developed person the differences are immediately apparent. These are corrected by exercises.

"Basse Terre, Island of Guadeloupe" (Pathé)

A Pathé film recently shown at the Rivoli theater, New York City, was more than usually attractive as a number, and was entitled "Basse Terre, Island of Guadeloupe." This island is a member of the West Indies group and has, since its settlement by the Caribs, been a haunt of the Caribbean Sea. Terre Basse is a quaint old town in which are to be found most picturesque spots, century old buildings and bridges, and native types plying their daily round of business. An old man can point to the corner into which the sugar cane is being industriously fed by natives is one of the interesting features of the picture.

THE latest of the L. M. Glackens animated drawings for the Bray Studios, Inc., appears in the 126th release of Pictograph, and is a unique study in animation showing the development of bird life from the reptilian state to feathered songsters of the present day. His illustration, which is intensely interesting, also traces the basic principle of the flying machine to a close study of the bird structure.

It is a well known fact that during the early period of the earth's history there were no birds. The earth was almost entirely submerged beneath a shallow sea of water in which reptiles of all kinds and sizes lived. As the waters subsided, these reptiles, by necessity assumed new habits and new forms and it was from these that the bird-life originated.

The first flying reptiles were strange, scaly creatures that glided rather than flew. Gradually however, their wings became of greater importance until they reached a stage of development that in 1824 was achieved by the bird with its power of flight than on their speed on the ground. Nature then gradually changed their structure to aid them in their new surroundings, by replacing their scales with feathers; their webbed feet with hollow bones and their long tails with broad feathery appendages.

Man's mastery of the air was made possible by close study of birds and Mr. Glackens shows how similar are the feathers designed after birds. Starting with the ill-fortuned Langley airplane, the development of the heavier-than-air flying machine is traced to the wonder machines that are now used over the battle fields of France.

"A Baseball Review"

THE first installment of a series of pictures taken by Mr. W. J. Hammer, in which all the stars of the Big League will appear, was exhibited at the Rivoli during the week of June 16. The subtitles for these series were written by Arthur ("Bugs") Eber of The New York Evening World and contain considerable humor. The baseball film, and this means no doubt at least two-thirds of the nation, will, to use a slang phrase, "eat up" these delightfully familiar studies of their favorite experts of the ball and bat. The picture also takes a fair enough shot at individualism; nor does it forget to remind us of the numbers of the Big League members who are now directing their famous curves against the Hun. Marty McHale in the making of this series has established a screen record of American athletes which may later prove invaluable.

Bray Contracts for New Series

W. L. Finley of the Oregon State Fish and Game Commission to Contribute to Pictograph—First Number Introduces Wild Babies.

THE Bray Studios, Inc., have contracted with W. L. Finley of the Oregon State Fish and Game Commission for his year's output of animal studies. Mr. Finley is now engaged in making a fresh series of pictures the first of which appears in the 126th issue of the Paramount-Billy Murphy series. This particular number demonstrates how wild babies take care of themselves while their parents are absent hunting dinner for them. The series includes grizzly and mountain lion cubs, fawns but a few years old, and a whole family of tiny deer-mice.

Mr. Finley has spent a life-time among the creatures of the field and has, to a marked extent, caught their habits as few men have. His work has taken him into every nook and corner of the great state of Oregon where wild life abounds, and he has been unusually successful in filming the life history of the children of the forest and mountain.

"Mount Lassen in Action"

An American Volcano in Eruption Constitutes Feature of Recent Release of Educational Films Corporation of America.

ON JUNE 16 one of America's most remarkable sights was presented in photographed form to the public. This picture owned by the Educational Films Corporation of America, was shown at the Rivoli, New York City, during that week, and it is a revelation to those unacquainted with the activities of the Sierra Nevada, the most formidable member. Northern California is the fighting ground of Mount Lassen. The release of "Mount Lassen in Action" through the regular exchanges of the Educational Films Corporation of America will take place the second week of July.

"Mount Lassen in Action" is indeed a remarkable picture. It shows the eruptive activities of the home-made California volcano that discharged its death-dealing stream of hot lava upon a large area of the Northern part of the Golden State in 1915, causing both loss of life and vast injury to crops.

One of the most impressive things in the film is the solid wall of lava two score feet high that stopped abruptly in front of a peach orchard. Later on, the tops are shown of fruit trees almost engulfed in the white hot flood which is now solid stone; and under the great lava bed itself are remains of human habitations and habitats, submersed crops, drowned orchards and petrified animals.

J. J. Hammer, a free lance photographer of Red Bluff, Cal., took the pictures. There were weeks of watchful waiting on the part of the patient cameraman to catch old Lassen in action, many times his efforts being thwarted by the drifting clouds across the Vulcan face of the quaking monster. Finally, on a clear day, he "got" Mount Lassen, billowy vapors, black furnace emanations, eruptive energy and all.

In and around the mountain are such charming motion picture locations as Tartarus Lake, Devil's Kitchen, the Steaming Fainpot, the Cinder Cone, the Boiling Springs and apparently many other locations. There can be seen hidden inside spits, sneezes, snorts, hisses, growls, and thunders. Every once in a while, too, he entirely forgets that he is in polite, civilized U. S. A. and disgorges the liquid wrath of the crater like Aetna or Kilauea.

A PICTURE WHICH MAY BE SHOWN ANYWHERE.

One of the commonest inquiries coming to the educational department of the Moving Picture World concerning any picture is “Can this picture be shown anywhere?” By anywhere” the writer usually means a school or a church; the common and natural idea being that if a picture can be shown in an educational or religious institution it is all satisfactory.

Recently a film has recently appeared a good picture which puts this “anywhere” theory to a peculiar test. "Hit the Trail Holliday" can be shown anywhere. We doubt, however, if it will be so freely shown; the “anywhere” in this instance may mean the local church, the corner theater, or places of a somewhat opposite character will have to hesitate about showing this film. It is doubtful if this picture will be allowed anywhere where liquor interests are in control; it will certainly be a ban when the church is in session, neither will it be shown where there is any dependence upon the young men of the land to furnish the next generation of drinkers—no, this picture will not be shown in the "anywhere." The inquiries we will say that this picture may be shown in any church where "Billy" Sunday would be allowed to speak; it ought to be shown everywhere where it will be helpful to young men; yes, and even young women. It will be helpful to show how a young woman was helpful in becoming the mainstay of her father in a crisis. "Hit the Trail Holliday" is one of the best pictures to “point a moral or adorn a tale.” It is full of humor with pointed wisdom, its logic is irresistible, its convicting powers are sure, victory for higher and right living will prevail wherever shown, it is the best picture of its kind and the educator advises all its readers to use it. A review of this timely picture appears on page 1756, June 22, 1918.

Items of Interest.

Rev. Paul Smith's seven-part anti-produce campaign "The Finger of Justice" for which the State rights are being sold by the Arrow Film Corporation is eagerly consumed and the building by educators. This picture which was reviewed in our issue of July 6, is one which should be given wide exhibition. It is entertaining as well as serving excellent propaganda in the nation-wide anti-produce campaign for which the Rev. Paul Smith is instrumental in starting are said to be authentic. The Web, an evil resort around which the propaganda picture area on the Mexican border symbolize the famous Barbary Coast. A series of propaganda pictures are now being planned by Mr. Smith and his associates.

An enlightening series of views taken at a modern poultry plant are included in the Universal Screen Magazine No. 81. One of the things in which the amateur poultryman will be most interested is the trap-nesting of the hen, the marking of eggs from the stand-nested thoroughbreds, and the method of keeping each hen's eggs separate in the incubator. This issue also contains interesting closeups of chameleons, showing one changing his skin; and of the manufacture of concrete.

An Official War Film, entitled "Following the Flag to France" was exhibited at the Lexington Theater, New York City, on the evening of June 24, under the auspices of the Liberty Film Committee. This film which is being released by the D. P. Wace on Public Information is composed of stirring scenes including the reception of General Pershing in France, and of the American soldiers. Scenes along Fifth avenue during a parade of our boys on their war leave to be seen as well as inspiring views of portions of the American navy.

Beginning Sept. 1, the Educational Films Corporation of America will release a series of Dwight L. Elmenford pictures. These pictures are a part of the vast collection of a number of years of travel made by Mr. Elmenford in various parts of the earth, and should be of great interest to exhibitors and others concerned in the educational value of the screen.

Alaska to Have Fine Picture Theater.

Captain Lathrop to Build 600-Seat House in Cordova, the Fifth in His Chain.

CORDOVA is to have the finest theater building in Alaska and one of the finest in the entire northwest. The new theater is to be built by Captain A. E. Lathrop, who already owns a string of four theaters in Alaska and has a controlling interest in a great many others, has returned from Seattle with all the contracts for the building and equipping of a reinforced concrete building which will house a 600-seat motion picture theater, several stores, and a number of up-to-date apartments. On account of the need for steel in war industries the reinforced concrete is being used instead of the regulation steel construction. The plans for the building call for three stories in front and five at the rear. Everything about the theater is to be up to the minute, including lighting, projection equipment, furniture and musical equipment. Pipe organ will be installed. Entertaining film service is also assured, for Captain Lathrop controls the distribution in Alaska of Paramount, Metro, Triangle, Mutual, and Pathé productions, and also owning the rights to several big specials, such as "Cleopatra," "The Last of the Mohicans" and several religious pictures.

The actual buying of the pictures from these companies was the solution of the Alaska film problem which Captain Lathrop and W. H. Code, of the Code theater in Nome, worked out. It made it possible for the film to go and come from the interior and northern towns of Alaska for the rental of them to be profitable to the Seattle exchanges; so it looked as if motion picture theaters, which would be a blessing to the community as the only means of entertainment and a good business enterprise for their owners, were not to be opened, until Captain Lathrop and Mr. Code got together and worked out this plan of running a string of theaters and a motion picture exchange for Alaska as well. After being shown at the Lathrop theater and at E. C. Code's house in Nome they are booked to other exhibitors throughout the territory.

The motion picture business is only a hobby with Captain Lathrop. He has many other interests in Alaska, and it was only a few years ago, after having already made a big business success, that he bought his first theater. He did not at that time intend to go into the business in the wholesale way in which he is now interested, but he saw a good "bury" in the fish house and also of raising fish. So he did, and found the business so fascinating that I didn't want to leave it after trying it. I soon saw that, owing to the difficulty in getting film to Alaska, there was no chance for the man with only one theater. In my present situation I began to think of the four houses that he owns are in the towns of Anchorage, Seward, Valdez and Cordova. Capt. Cordova is one of the most prominent citizens of Alaska, being a director of the leading bank and also owning the Cordova newspaper.

Rothstein Opens Tulsa's Majestic.

For Twenty-five Miles Roundabout He Posts 24-Sheets and Advertisements in Dailies—Gears Crowd.

T HE new Majestic theater, Tulsa, Okla., one of the handsomest playhouses in the Southwest, was formally opened week before last with Mabel Normand in her first film "Goldwyn's Gold." Capt. Cordova was the first attraction. Due to the alert advertising and clever showmanship methods of B. F. Rothstein, energetic manager of the new theater, the initial presentation at the Majestic has brought them an average of 500 persons in every show. Tulsa beside hundreds of people from the small towns adjoining.

Weeks in advance of the opening date, Manager Rothstein had a large force of bill posters at work plastering Tulsa and surrounding villages within a radius of twenty-five miles with attractive twenty-four-sheets on "The Venus Model." And Mr. Rothstein was just as liberal with the two newspapers in Tulsa. For ten days preceding the Majestic opening, half page ads on the beauty of the new playhouse and the entertainment given were given prominent positions in both papers. As a result the Majestic received liberal publicity on the Goldwyn play and its star.

Manager Rothstein also made the most of the exploitation possibilities of his picture. He engaged a beautiful girl to pose as "The Venus Model" on a float fitted up to represent a bathing house at the beach. The float was stationed in the Tulsa business sections and viewed by thousands of patrons for two days before and all during the four-day engagement at the Majestic. The lobby also was transformed into a scene of bathing beach splendor.

The New Majestic represents the last word in theater building. It has a seating capacity of 1,300. There is an orchestra of ten pieces and a $20,000 organ which was built for Manager Rothstein by experts brought from the Coast. Patrons of the Majestic are complimenting the manager on the beauty of the new house.

Reel Tax Nets $30,000 in Montreal.

That Is the Sum Inland Revenue Department Expects to Collect Annually From Sixty-four Houses. In collecting the tax of 15 cents a reel for every day that a picture is shown in theater, the Inland Revenue Department in Montreal, Quebec, which levy has just been arranged by the Federal Government of Canada, the local office of the Inland Revenue Department is expected to collect more than $30,000 per year, according to estimates. These estimates are given to us by Government officials. In Montreal and vicinity at the present time there are sixty-four moving picture theaters in actual operation. There are others which have recently closed their doors.

At first there was a little difficulty with some of the exhibitors in explaining the operation of the new tax, but as soon as the matter was demonstrated these men readily submitted, it is declared. The exchange companies are required to provide statements of the receipts and all these lists are checked by department officials with information coming from the theaters and from other sources. In the case of a five-reel feature a run of three days is counted as fifteen reels, it is explained, and the Inland Revenue Department collects accordingly.

The new source of revenue is expected to produce about $600 a week in Montreal or more than $30,000 in a year.
Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Working All Angles.

Advertising is not merely the announcement of films you have to show. It should be worked from all angles, and every effort should be made to give the house its full share of publicity. Too many managers trust the house to speak for itself. And there are many little things which can be done to make stronger advertisements than film announcements, if only you keep your eyes open. Ralph Ruffner, of the Columbia, Portland, Oregon, found that he could photograph himself in a panel mirror near the entrance. It must be some job to judge from the worried look upon his face, but he did it, as the illustration shows, and then he invited all the amateurs to come down and take a try. Many did, and, of course, each photographer took considerable time over the job, serving as a free ballyhoo for the house, and, equally, of course, every time the photograph is shown the explanation is added that it was taken in the mirror at the Columbia theater. It keeps the house name before the public, and makes for some merely advertising. There are a lot of things that can be done in the same way. Many houses have not only worked for the Liberty Loans, Red Cross, and enlistment, but they have loaned their lobbies for service, and have become identified with the movements. It all brings reputation to the house at little or no cost. Along the same lines Ruffner has changed his painted advertising boards. Instead of changing each week to announce the current film story he has repainted them to advertise the happenings at his newspaper and other work to get the titles over. It cuts cost, and at the same time we think the advertising value is as strong as before. Make them think of Columbia when they think of a theater, and they will be apt to turn to the house when they want to see a clever exploitation is a thing to shun, they will continue to lose business they might have.

In sending in some advertising examples for the Dayton Theater Co., the correspondent remarks that he does not recall having seen anything from Dayton in this department. We're sorry, but it was up to Dayton to show that it had something beyond cash registers in the town. The Dayton uses a catchline, "The Theater Dominant," but it does not really impress very strongly because it does not get over. It sounds like saying something just to be saying something. It means something if you study it, but "dominant" is not a word in such common use that the average reader "gets" it at first glance. The advertisement is rather unusual in form, a double full-length column set with rule like a capital I with a bulge in the centre. The cross pieces and the bulge all carry the house name and catch-line, the bulge cutting off the last half of the week from the opening four days. At first flash it does not look like good make-up, but it really is two good advertisements with the bulge well displayed to give proper emphasis to the point of moment. It will not work well much shorter than the full column, but it makes a good layout for a two-program advertisement. The reproduction merely suggests the shape, but it will be seen that the choice of black lines is well made. It is about the only well-laid advertisement in a number sent in for various houses. Most of them are far too full of type. The Strand is about the best of the other examples, but it is trying to advertise four titles in three sizes, set to about 8½ deep. The Orpheum is completely filled with talk of The Whip, apparently a leaned cut that has been used by other newspapers. The玉和The Alhambra have not a clear and must be studied out. The Columbia uses straight type composition, but uses entirely too much six-point. The Strand, the New Alhambra and the New Globe, not to mention the Old Glory for a change, all take two columns 1½ inches deep, hardly enough for a decent showing. The Alhambra sets even the names of the films and stars in eight-point and trims to get Mary Pickford, a Keystone comedy and the scale of prices all into four lines. It would have been better to have followed the Globe and at least have made some sort of a shout for the star. The average for the town is pretty poor and we do not altogether wonder that Dayton has not been represented before this.
the others so that it might be sealed with the mailing stamp, one page being reserved for the address of the subscriber. The folder was on gray stock, printed in black, and presents a neat appearance. All persons over sixty were invited to a special matinee of "Mother o' Mine" one afternoon, which was a happy thought.

Growing.

Number 25 of the Revue, the house organ of the Empire theater, Tientsin, and the Pavilion, Peiking, is twenty pages and cover and larger pages than the original form. It has grown into a really readable sheet with a good showing of local advertising and as much text as the average weekly. It is registered in the post office as a newspaper and seems to be entitled to such a registration. It is coming right along. More power to it. It is a credit to the picture business.

Why the Comparison?

In some flimsy emanation from the Goldwyn offices an official of that company is made to in-dorse the action of an exhibitor in billing Miss Rixdon, the star of "The Mann-Man," as "The English Mary Pickford." Why? Miss Rixdon is a capable player and should be permitted to stand upon her own feet and not be identified as the seeming imitator of another. It is no compliment to some originator. Let it be assumed that the player has a personality of his or her own sufficient to win success.

Save This for October.

It's too late for the third Liberty Loan, but make a note now for use on the next issue for the address of the Theater Louisiana. Haten Rouge, gave a two weeks' pass to the first hundred persons to prove possession of bonds of the third issue.

Still 100 Per Cent.

Gordon F. Fullerton sends in his campaign for "My Four Years in Germany" for the Coliseum, Seattle. It forms a nice study in efficient work. There are all sorts of displays and advertisements running from one column to a page, and yet the basis of the pictorial display is seven drawings. Five of these are black and whites shown in the first illustration. They were used as single column displays, as shown here, being scattered through the paper. They are also used as the basis of a full page display advertisement, not shown here, and are enlarged to double column width for a two eighteens. They are also used to make up a set of two fours, as shown in the second cut. Always there is some striking speech taken from the story, and this is changed with each change of placement. The other two illustrations were these white silhouettes, used also as one-column cuts. Here, too, there is always a change of copy, for the white spaces are mortised to let in type and, when used as single columns, carry the title, while the house name runs at the top. The last example shows one of the blacks enlarged to form the basis of a twelve-inch cross page display. There is ample variety to the work, and that it pulled is shown by the fact that the film was held over for a second week, the first instance in the history of the Jansen and Von Herberg houses. And yet the illustration cost was merely the price of seven simple drawings and the cuts made from these in various sizes. There is none of the war atmosphere that marked some displays, yet there is something stronger than this. The illustrations catch the eye, and the extracts from the story get the attention and arouse the desire to see the play. Mr. Fullerton always does good work, but we have not seen a better planned campaign than this. It is efficient and compelling, and the simple illustrations probably pulled much easier than a more involved display might have done in this case. The last illustration shows the opening for "The Unbeliever," earlier shown. The house was darkened, and marine buglers in the lobby sounded the assembly. At the call the boys rose above the sandbag barricades, there was some firing, and then the orchestra played the Star Spangled Banner. Between shows a private who walked from Portland, Oregon, to New York... to enlist made a recruiting speech. One hundred and twenty-three enlisted at the house, and the recruiting station also reported an increase in registration. Saturday the house was taken over to the marines, who sold tickets, and the entire proceeds were given to the tobacco fund. To help along the sale two sham battles were staged by the marines in front of the theater preceding the matinees and evening performances. Throughout the week the marines were on duty at every show, and very materially helped to increase the patronage.

Old But Still Good.
F. W. Boll, of the Majestic, Stillwater, Minn., has been working the old junk idea to good results. The junk idea is worked on the lines of clean-up week, a prize being offered for the child bringing the largest string of tin cans to the theater, and an invitation to everyone bringing in a specified number of cans. It cleans up the back lots and the old metal has a distinct value these days. Mr. Boll took the advertising and directed the collection over to the Red Cross. The cut shows the collection before it was removed, and Mr. Boll did not get an unusually large supply of cans at that.

Doing It Well.
The Film Forecast, the general organ for the Rowland and Clark theaters, Pittsburgh, got out a special cover design for the Red Cross drive, a really well-planned front. And then it got its advertising patrons to do their bit, and the advertisements fairly bristle with red crosses and Red Cross slogans. It was good work all through.

For the Propaganda.
The Cambria theater, Johnstown, Pa., uses a half page for the Gerard My Four Years in Germany. Possibly this is a stock cut, since it follows the twenty-four-sheet, but it is a good layout, whether original or borrowed, and it stands out well in the paper. It gives a good attractor, one in keeping with the subject, tells its story briefly and well, and gets the big facts down so that may be seen at a glance. It will be noted that in the small town the film is selling at a fifty cents top. It is one of the best advertisements for this film we have seen yet.

Improved.
The Grand theater, Kokuk, Iowa, has changed from a one-page to a four-page program, pages 5½ by 9. It is a big improvement, there being no confusion in every way on the one-page program mentioned in our issue for April 27th. The four pages give a better program layout, and the other three pages range up taken by the house for chat and announcement, save the lower third of the last page, which is printed up for the address with a post office permit, making it a self-mailer. It has only gone two numbers in its new form, but it looks like a veteran. For one thing, they supply enough copy so that the items do not have to be spaced out until it stops looking like a regular, and for another thing, the editor has something to say when he uses type. He knows how to talk, but nothing he says is better than this extract:

"If you’ll just learn to read our ads, trust us in us, and take our tips, you’ll be in position to get the most pleasure out of motion pictures. We tell the truth and we will not disappoint you.

That’s the way to talk, if you are willing to back talk with deeds. Get the confidence of the public, cherish it, and you can get a big house without an excess use of superlatives. The Grand has made a change much for the better and gets into the list of regulars.

A Tip for Tarzan.
The cut shows a window display of the St. Paul Book and Stationery Co., for Tarzan of the Apes, outschild by Theo. L. Hoyt, manager of the New Garrick theater. There are several of the Tarzan books and the display can be made more varied than the usual window devoted to a single title. More than this, the books are still good sellers, and live book stores will welcome the use of stills with which to make a display. If you are in a small town and your dealer does not care to stock a windowful of books, he can get the paper covers to place on other books to round out the display.

Festivals.
The Victoria, Buffalo, announced a recent week as Festival Week. That listens well, and the attractions back up the sound, but it is about an average Victoria bill at that, and the festival is merely a peg to hang some new talk on. But it reminds that there are a lot of special weeks that can be used with a little thought. Think some up, make a special noise and a little lobby decoration and you’ll get extra business without letting your patrons realize that the special is just advertising and not something extra good. It will seem extra good because it has been well advertised, and imagination will do the rest if you have a reasonably good program. You cannot make bad films seem good with advertising, but assuredly you can make good film seem better by praising it up a little—which does not mean superlatives.

Stamps For a Title.
The Hill theater, Newark, changes from a mailing card to a throw-away to get over an offer of a reward with a black type display of these lines:

R — E — W — A — H — E

On Monday, May 27, and Tuesday, May 28, we will show a picture of a famous MURDER STORY.

At the "HILL" Theatre.
This picture has no "name" or "title," and has just been imported from Russia. The most appropriate "name" or "title" we will give a full card of THIRTY STAMPS EACH EVENING.

It adds that it is "all picture—no words." We would like to see a picture with such a scarcity of subtitles. The show must be with any picture provided that the subtitles are not also lettered with the main title in the corner, and you can work up a surprising lot of interest in the alleged content. For another evening they announce the personal appearance of Edna Goodrich in connection with her picture, "American Maid." You have to hustle for business when you tire your patrons with ten-reel shows as most of the Newark theaters do.

Has a Photoplay Page.
Trench and Camp, the Y. M. C. A. paper published by the Atlantic Constitution for Camp Gordon, has a photoplay page. One feature is a schedule of the films shown in the various Y. M. C. A. bivouacs at the camp. It gives readers the current attractions and a little filler along with a couple of pictures of the stars.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising
By EPES WINTROPO SARGENT (Director of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

Notice!

Questions relating to the writing of photoplays and photoplay synopses will be replied to by mail where a return envelope is enclosed. All answers will be given on the understanding that no letter will be answered by more than one letter in any six-month period. No manuscript will be returned unless accompanied by stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Poor Stories

A BOUT the hardest work we have to do is to read the stories of the current releases in synopsis as sent out by the press agents of the various companies. It is irritating to handle story after story to try to make a photoplay which has no foundation. If the deserted wife did not kill herself, the story could not have happened, though from all angles the bride was not of the suicidal sort. If the innocent man had not run away when unjustly accused of murder, the story could not have happened. Most of these stories are studio made and would not be passed by the editor or director did they come in from a free lance, yet editors and producers continue to remark that they have to look to their staffs because they cannot depend upon authors. We must have better stories before we can consider going into business; write the proper sort of stories under the conditions in which they work. Real authors must be encouraged to write for the screen, and must be helped to an appreciation of the screen needs, as contrasted with straight fiction needs. At present they are told to write the idea and the staff will fix it up, then they see themselves blamed for some monstrosity on the screen and decide that they will write no more.

The film game is no place at the present time for a practiced writer who kicks because some minor printer's error changes the sense of one of his stories, for he will find that the entire sense of his story. And yet we need the work of practiced writers: as we never have before, and each writer who is coaxing in now to write a two-reeler, and often he who is trying to get his works more accurate the filmer's work. The filmer Merwin is working under ideal conditions in London. He writes his story and explains to the director how he wishes it to be cut. The director then intends the rough rehearsals and then Mr. Merwin steps in and gives the final touches that ensure his ideas being carried out. This is what he has to do in the interests of the producer, and the director, he who is able to write practicable stories, scene by scene, and should, if possible, be permitted to supervise the final rehearsals. Then we shall have more of the story and less sameness in method.

Knowing the Market

This seems to be the week for repeating that no one can tell you much about the market. You must learn them for yourself. We are getting tips all the time, but the entire trouble in the industry is lack of unity in the market, all the companies, and in the same day we are told that a company is and is buying, just as they happen to impress the individual. And the company itself cannot say that it is or is not buying. Most of them dare not say that they are and do not like to say that they are not because they may lose some good material that way. The only thing to do is to offer stories until you are ready to suit a market, and then the question opens anew whenever you see that there has been a change in editors. Keep posted on the changes in staff, stylists, margins, direction, etc. This is all news, you should read the trade journals, and it is the companies, and above all learn to distinguish the news from the press agent bunk. Usually the newly appointed Director General or whatever he styles himself, who announces that a certain company is going to pay "the highest prices" for worthy scripts doesn't know a continuity from a synopsis and cares less which, if I am talking for effect. On the other hand the four-line announcement that John Smith now has charge of the script department of a company may mean that the company is in the market at fair prices. The important point is whether the company is buying or not, whether it will buy from you. You may not write well enough or you might not write their style of story. It does not matter which if an offer is your personal answer.

Putting on Weight.

Learn to "feel the heft" of your picture. Know how much it weighs. If you line up in front of a penny-in-the-slot weighing machine you will probably find a table with labels showing of what certain stature should weigh. It is not always an exact guide, but people of that height who weigh about the indicated number of pounds are likely to be healthy. If they are thinner before it is apt to be fat and a handicap, and if they weigh less they are probably weak. It is the same way with a story. It may be too thin or too heavy. It may not have enough fat or carry too much, but if it carries just about what a five-reel story should, then it is proper weight and apt to make a far better production than it would were it too thin or too fat. It may seem to you at first to try to make what used to make a good five-reeler, and it may seem that you need six reels or cannot do better than four, but with practice you can make your stories worth just about five reels just as the syndicate writer can grind stuff to his syndicate's wants. You learn to add a little or to take a little out and in time the habit becomes automatic and you have to give it no particular thought. It is the same with a synopsis as it is with a continuity. You can think just about five reels of idea and then if the reconstructs goes wrong it is no fault of yours, who sent it in and the editing shows through you assuredly are to blame if you sell it for a five-reeler.

Writing in Psycholgy.

Several have sought to endorse Cecil DeMille's opinion that the story of the future will contain more psychology and less vivid action. The objections are almost wholly based upon the argument that psychology is mental, and mental states cannot be shown in action. In the "Whispering Chorus" Mr. De Mille supplied much of his own answer. Psychology is mental, but the reflexes of a mental state may be shown. For there is no such thing as a state of mind. The phenomenon is intelligence rather than the whims of the director. In "The Whispering Chorus" he uses the man's conscience as the motive rather than a sudden change in motives. The story is not retracted, but the long continued self-accusation comes with it a permanent mental change. It is by no means the complex matter it seems at first to be it is a matter of the psychological elements once you have mastered the trick, but you must study and master the idea and learn how to explain through action, but little aided by leader, why this or that impulse is followed.

Plausibility.

In spite of all that has been said, we still get far too many plots that are dependent upon their acceptance for success. If you can accept as fact the incidents related the plot is a good one, but generally you cannot. The incidents are such a matter as the past few months many designs have been offered for a new fifteen cent coin, but we cannot imagine anyone paying ten cents for such an object on the grounds that it might later be adopted by the government. And yet to try and sell fifteen cent pieces now is no worse than offering editors a plot that is good if they can believe it. And as pointed out yesterday the plot is not the trick to sell the story. It must be such a happening as can be accepted by everyone. Last summer one of the cents of the Maine volunteers at Augusta was struck by lightning. One man was killed and another merely hit, his boots stripped off by the fluid. That was plausible, because it is known to most persons that lightning performs such freaks. But this was the second time the same man had undergone precisely the same experience. The fact was well established in its own circle, but it would be difficult to get persons unacquainted with the fact to accept as plausible a story wherein a recurrence of the accident was the essential point in the plot—as for instance the restoration of the man's sanity lost in the terror of the first accident. The plot has been found out in advance. The man has been taken on, and therefore it is just as wildly improbable as the suggestion of a man being blown to the moon and back again. It is not content with the knowledge that every man knows that your facts have been upon fact. A convincing invention is far better than an unaccepted truth. Offer stories that will be accepted without question instead of trusting to strange truths for your novelty.

Sympathy.

A recent comedy trusted largely to the actions of a mild lunatic for its humor. Its introduction permitted the use of some laughable leaded- screen, fire-engine, and one of pity for the unfortunate. It is a mistake to suppose that lunatics, inebriates and similar unfortunate are a source of mirth. They may seem funny at the moment, and under certain effects such as alcohol, very amusing. The misfortunes of a pompous, overbearing man are humorous to see, but not so to hear. When the temperamental man kicks, he kicks it and pleases us to see his pseudo dignity crushed, but he has brought his troubles upon himself. The lunatic suffers from an affliction that makes life unbearable for him and his condition cannot be used for a rule. Though there are some exceptions to this, as the polite lunatic in "The Belle of New York," if you remember that far back.

Missing.

What's become of those near-authors who used to write in for a good collaborator to do all of the hard work and take a third of the receipts? We have not heard from one of these in a long time, and surely they cannot all be dead.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost) will receive carbon copies (no inky) by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first one-half and the second half of the number are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the address given at the head of this paper. Orders are now live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

I stopped in Pittsburgh on my last trip with the purpose in view of visiting the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company's plant in East Pittsburgh, which employs a matter of 25,000 or 30,000 people. At the direction of Ralph Freeman, Business Manager, Williams, Financial Secretary, Pittsburgh Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local Union 171, extended the hand of welcome; also L. C. Van Oordt of the Independent News of Pittsburg, in reply to a visit of past eighteen months. No arrangements had been made to address the Pittsburgh men at the time of my visit, so we enjoyed a pleasant chat and they learned of the interesting matter for which Pittsburgh is famous, after which it was the hay for ours.

The Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company's Works is located in East Pittsburgh, twelve miles from the city. It is an enormous institution. I have visited most of the large institutions of this kind in the country, but none have a greater interest than the East Pittsburgh Works, which boasts the largest manufacturing plant under one roof in the entire world. I was particularly struck with the great number of women working in this plant. The Vote-for-Women contingent rides in the thousands. They are assigned for the most part in armature winding, coil insulating and clerical positions; they are largely used in the small assembly department. In fact, there are so many points of interests in this huge plant that if I went into an 100 room, a whole page of the paper would be easily consumed. At the plant I met both Mr. Freeman, President of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, and Mr. J. F. Freeman, Manager, Department of Sales, and A. L. Atherton, Manager, Department of Advertising.

These gentlemen also gave me a case of celloidinized stock, showing me around the plant. In going, for instance, from the Rectifier Department to the Generator Department, one instrument is installed almost along a grip and some extra clothing, his hat and an umbrella; this, of course, being due to distance. Distance, my boy, is entitled to respect when one is in the home of the Westinghouse.

The company is now ready to place on the market a new type mercury arc rectifier for motion picture work. This rectifier has a number of characteristics which will interest both the exhibitor and operator. It is very compact, occupying small floor space; also it is only 3 feet in height over all. It is to be made in 30, 40 and 50 ampere capacity. The bulbs are of special design, so made that for a given capacity they possess heat radiating properties considerable in excess of the regular bulb of that capacity. This has the effect of doubling the life of the bulbs, and other work is being done to meet the necessity for the purchase of an excess size bulb, which has been the general practice in the past. The bulb fitting arrangement presents one radical difference from former procedure. The bulb normally, when not in use, rests in a tilted position, as shown in illustration, with the mercury bridged from the main mercury pool to the mercury pool in the starting arc box. When the current is turned on, the bulb is tilted to upright position, thus breaking the mercury bridge and starting the arc. This possesses no particular advantage from the standpoint of construction, makes the construction cheaper. It is, therefore, a distinct advantage from the exhibitor's viewpoint. The rectifier has the necessary arrangement for accommodating various line voltages and the necessary switches to change from direct to alternating current at the arc.

I am authorized by the Engineering Department that the bulb be painted black, and that matter is under consideration. The painting of the bulb black will have the advantage of eliminating the highly objectionable light from the arc. The instrument is installed in the operating room, and its elimination will be accomplished in the best possible way.

And now here is something that will interest the exhibitor. This machine, which according to the claims of the company, has all the characteristics of former rectifiers in equally good form, will sell at a list price of $150 for the 30 ampere rectifier and $250 for the 50 ampere size, which is a horizontal reduction of approximately 50 per cent, in addition to which the new machine has a higher electrical efficiency than the old one. I have not myself examined this machine, but Mr. Atherton, Designing Engineer of the rectifier, claims an electrical efficiency of approximately 72 per cent.

The fact that the machine is put out by the Westinghouse Company is sufficient guarantee as to its mechanical excellence. At the time of my visit, there were no machines completed in their permanent form. It is my intention to, as soon as the machines are finally completed, give complete data on both the new Westinghouse Mercury Arc Rectifier and Westinghouse Motor Generator Set.

The Westinghouse Motor Generator Set for motion picture work is of the horizontal type, very solidly constructed, with heavy rotor, armature shaft. It occupies a floor space of about 8' x 24'. The height of the machine itself is approximately 24'. The machine is equipped with a switchboard carrying all necessary controls. Particulars with regard to method of change-over, etc., together with illustrations, will be given at the time of my next visit to Pittsburgh. I might add, however, that the Westinghouse Motor Generator has had a very thorough try-out during the past three or four years, and has met with favor among the part of the users.

Looks Promising.

This department is in receipt of a communication from the "Indiana Trade News Service" which describes what seems to be a promising invention. The T. N. S. S. says in part:

Raymond C. Schull, projectionist at the Grand theater, Kokomo, Indiana, has patented (presumably he is the inventor—Ed.) a signal attachment for projectors. * * * With Schull's device attached to a projector the operator will receive a signal that the reel is about to end. The device, which is adjustable, works after this fashion: When the last seventy-five feet of film is reached a buzzer sounds a signal, warning the projectionist that a clay electric lamp will soon begin flashing. In a few seconds the flashes begin, and the projectionist knows the point where the idle projector should be started is near. A few seconds of flashing and the light grows steadily, this being the signal to start the next projector. Schull has his device on both projectors at the Grand, and says they work perfectly. He says they may be easily incorporated in new projectors, also may be attached to old machines at small cost.

The device works as follows: 10 in the patent office drawing is a felt pad which is presumed to drag on the film roll, and that much of it will be readily seen that when arm B drops far enough to form contact with strip 19 (there is an adjustment screw, 21, on end of arm) an electric circuit will be established, and the buzzer will perform or the lamp light, though just where the buzzer and flashing lamp both come in I do not quite see, or even the flashing lamp, unless Schull figures on all reel bubs being out of order enough to cause contact to be broken. This is presumed to occur at the right distance from the end of the film to start the lamp of the idle projector, at the same time moving switch arm 20 to contact 28, which, as you will see, breaks the circuit and extinguishes the lamp or puts the spell of silence upon the buzzer until strip 19 is bent enough by the lowering arm to touch strip 17, whereupon the light or buzzer performs again, and that is the time to start the second projector.

The thing seems to be entirely practical, but I seriously object to anything dragging on the film. It might injure any film, but would be pretty certain to scratch a good first-run. The two-signal idea is one we have advocated in this department, and it seems to be put into practical form here. Pin 8 should be very close to the top of block 5, so that the housing may fit close to rod 9, since thus the fireproof magazine will still be just as fireproof as it ever was. Given a half-bearing wheel made like a toothless sprocket to run on the film edges instead of hubs, this department would be interested in examining the mechanical construction of this device. If that part is satisfactory we would recommend it to the projectionists for consideration.

Reducing Motor Speed.

Joseph Grasso, New York City, New York, presents the following:

Will you kindly help me out? Am running Power's 6-A, pulling it with a small, very high speed motor (2750 R. P. M.) formerly used for a pianola. Current, A. C., 69 cycle. Have very small pulley on motor shaft, but projector runs too fast. Belt runs direct from motor pulley to pulleys on projector, which is say about what I can reduce the motor speed by using a lamp in series, as is done with D. C. motors? If so, please advise, giving sketch of wiring.

New here is a good brother who asks wiring sketch and does not tell me size, type, or make of motor. There are several types of A. C. motors; also there are single, two and three-phase motors. I could not offer intelligent advice as to how to reduce the speed of the motor without at least knowing what kind of an animal it is. But I don't think I would advise reducing its speed. It probably is very small, and if you reduced its speed materially it might not develop sufficient power to do the work. I would suggest that you get two more pulleys of different sizes and put them on a short shaft, with suitable bearings to carry it, belting from the motor to the larger pulley and from the smaller shaft pulley to the projector. You will have to calculate the necessary sizes of the jack-shaft (that is what we would call the short shaft) pulleys. You can call up any belting house, and they will give it to you. You will have no speed regulation, of course. I would suggest that, if there is a name-plate on the motor, you write the manufacturer every bit of information that you have and asking how its speed can best be controlled; also you might make a speed controller as per Fig. 119, Page 279 of the Handbook.

A Genuine Relic.

A. H. Cobb, Jr., manager Hartville Amusement Company, Hartville, 4th, sends in photographs of a genuine curio, and with the following letter:

I noticed some time ago in the projector department a photograph of one of the first Edison machines made. With the idea in mind that further photographs may be interposed if you herewith two of the complete machines, which will show method of threading. The film was all in 50-foot lengths, its ends being looped around the countershaft, and the cutter being as large as the belts used for driving machinery. The machine shown was sold in 1896. I have the original bill of sale from the factory in Orange, New Jersey. It certainly is interesting to compare this projector with late models of modern machines, also to compare the films. The action in the old fifty-fooeters was so slow and methodical. It is really amusing to run some of them. I have about 1,500 feet of them, assorted subjects, and have run them several times for amusement. It certainly would be a remarkable exhibition to place the old model beside the new. Trust the photos will be of interest to your readers, and I am glad to tender my kindest personal regards.

You bet they will "be of interest." I did not know there was still one of the old spool bank projectors in existence, much less film in runtable condition. Some steps should be taken to preserve this relic of the past for all time to come. Will our readers suggest what they think should be done with this projector, always providing Friend Cobb can be induced to part with it and its films under conditions which will insure its preservation. You are looking at the old spool bank machine of which you have doubtless all heard, and now have the privilege to see. We thank neighbor Cobb cordially on behalf of thousands of readers for the favor of the photos.

An Improved Reel.

M. F. Walker, Cadiz, Ohio, has submitted to the department for examination and possible approval an improved or "tell-tale" reel for which he has patents pending. He describes it as "positive and exceedingly simple." It may be made in either the ordinary small-hub reel, or as a five-inch hub reel, the latter form being, however, best for the purpose. Friend Walker says he has used the device for almost a year, and that in all that time it has not once failed of its purpose. Cost of the tell-tale reel will not, he says, exceed the cost of present high-grade reels, also there is no possibility of injury to the films. Walker expects to have the reels on the market within a short time.

The reel, which I have seen in both the ordinary and five-inch hub forms, is just like any other reel, except that there is an addition, as follows: In the five-inch hub reel it consists of a bell mounted inside the hub, where it interferes with nothing; also there is a striker connected with a steel wire in which is a coil so arranged that pulling the striker back puts a tension on the coil, causing it to bring the striker down on the bell with considerable force when the striker is released. On the inside of the reel and suitably hinged to a metal plate, which folds up tightly against the reel side when not in use. The operation is as follows: Suppose it is decided that the change-over signal should be given to the projectionist ten feet, or thirty feet, or whatever it is desired that the device perform. Now who ever is rewinding the film rewind that number of feet of film (easily judged after slight practice), whereupon he stops the rewind, pulls down the metal lip, and proceeds with the rewinding. The pulling downs of the lip locks the bell striker back under tension. Now when the film is projected and the point is reached where the lip is reached the film automatically raises the lip, which action releases the striker and the bell sounds. The foregoing is about as plain as I can make it. The thing sounds a little complicated, but really is quite simple. The small reel, a five-inch reel, is hinged to a plate which is fastened to a metal plate inside the hub so that it does not interfere with anything; the metal lip is held in such a way that when released it snaps up against the side of the reel quite hard, thus sounding the alarm. Above all careful explanation, the use of the attachment should not be practical. With such an alarm there would be no need or possible excuse for film-punching; also the projectionist would have a positive signal by which he could depend. Moreover the tell-tale reel could be so made that two signals could be given, one at say 100 feet from the end of the reel as a signal to light up the Idle lamp, and the other at the exact time of change-over. The device is cheap to manufacture. Against it is the slight bother of resetting the trigger when rewinding and the difficulty of introducing a new reel to the trade. I would also suggest that the make of the tell-tale adjustable as to distance would help popularize it, though it might add too much to the cost. It is not a thing the projectionist can very well get and install himself. It must or at least should be an integral part of the reel itself; that is, if it is to meet with any great success.

Best Results He Has Obtained.

W. L. Henderson, Clinton, Iowa, orders question booklets, and remarks:

Wish to say that the Speer Airermo carbons produce for me the best results that I have ever been able to obtain with alternating current.

Let the good work go on! It is just such encouraging reports as
As Others See Us.

The following is from the Canadian Film Digest, an excellent little paper published in Toronto, Ontario, devoted to the motion picture industry. The following is reprinted with an unbiased opinion of the work we have been trying to do, for one trade paper is not apt to raise the work of one of the editors of another trade paper unless it has real merit. The question of reviews of films is an old and too long to restate in entirety. I have therefore omitted some sections.

RICHARDSON VISITS TORONTO—DELIVERS POWERFUL NOTED Projection Expert Elks Straight from the Shoulder in Talk to Operators.

"He came; he saw; he conquered," this, in brief, sums up the visit to Toronto of F. H. Richardson, editor of the projection department of the Moving Picture World, of New York, and unquestionably the greatest authority on projection upon the American continent.

Mr. Richardson delivered a powerful and inspiring address to local projectionists last evening. He was at the Wednesday night at Young's Cafe in this city, and, although he talked until the wee sma'll hours of the morning, his hearers were loath to have him discontinue. His address, delivered with the characteristic earnestness and punch that has won him a continent-wide reputation, was a rousing appeal to operator, exchange man, and exhibitor. Probably never in the history of the film business in the city as a whole, the entire province of Ontario for that matter, was there such a gathering of men very much interested on o'clock Wednesday night to hear Richardson. All branches of the film trade were reasonably represented. He showed that the recognized expert on projection had a message for—one; that one thought was to bear—one that was worth losing sleep over in order to hear. The object, he declared, was to instruct. Richardson said he had delivered the goods. He put over his message in a manner that was apt to be forgotten for a long time by those who were fortunate enough to hear.

The man Richardson has a habit of telling the truth—and the truth hurts sometimes. He hits squarely from the shoulder and tells some truths that are not always pleasant to hear. He is a master at the art of being direct, constructive, and therein lies his great power.

For nine long and weary years F. H. Richardson has been fighting the battle of film projection business. Today his efforts are bearing fruit throughout Canada and the United States. Wherever projection is discussed the name of Richardson and the work he has done and is doing is discussed. The projection end of this business owes to him a large debt of gratitude for bettering conditions.

The exchange man was not overlooked, either. The speaker jumped on him rough-shod, and told him a few things good for his soul. He informed the exhibitors that trouble originating from faulty film will be directly traceable to the hair of Mr. Richardson. If an exchange man, or anybody else in the business gets blamed for the exchange man's own carelessness. He urged closer and more intimate cooperation between these two branches of the trade.

Then the exhibitor. The exhibitor, the man who has often been termed "the backbone of this great industry," certainly got his backbone rubbed and massaged with closed knuckles by the capable Richardson. He did not hesitate to tell therein the exhibitors of both Canada and the United States were at fault, too.

In closing Mr. Richardson paid a high compliment to Toronto men, which he did at the meeting which brought them, and their projection and other equipment. He had enjoyed his brief visit to the utmost, and hoped to again come to Toronto in the future.

I am proud of this particular indorsement of my work, because, as I have said, even the most skeptical cannot but admit it be unbiased. I also desire to thank the Digest for its unselfish act and generous praise of my humble efforts.

What Is Best Screen?

H. Hitchcock, Painesville, Ohio, writes:

Have a theater 47 feet wide, which begins to narrow down 60 feet from the screen. It causes in places a very narrow 90 feet, until it is only 15 feet wide at the screen. Front row of seats is 25 feet from the screen. Can you advise as to what screen you would be best. Am using a calamine screen at present, but think a different screen would improve results. Use 50 amperes D. C. at 125 foot throw.

That depends on what you mean by "improve." Your calamine screen will do in public speaking, but not for a projection as you will be able to get, but it will NOT give you as bright or brilliant a picture as you can get; also brilliancy is had at considerable expense, as compared to a semi-reflective surface. Under the conditions named I would suggest a rather "bright" surface and Ambroixi ray filters. By this I mean that a non-color (don't let 'em talk you into gold or other tints in your screen) metallic screen surface of some approved type, and an Ambroixi ray filter, which latter you can get from William D. Warner, 760 Wyandotte St., Detroit, Mich., for $3.50 each. Any reputable screen manufacturer can advise you as to just what screen surface will best suit your condition, but you should insist on a write guarantee to last the life of the screen. That does not mean that it will remain in good condition. By this installation you will get increased brilliancy at considerably less expenditure of electric power. You can also write manufacturers from our advertising columns. If I were I would write them all, setting forth with exact conditions screen to work under. Frank H. Richardson, Shelbysville, Indiana, also specializes on supplying screens for cases of this kind.

A Large Improvement:

The good which comes from or is expected to come from the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has its foundation very largely in the various papers read at the meetings of the society, and the discussion of those papers after they have been read and published as a discussion is, as a matter of fact, the main thing, since the paper usually expresses and can express only the ideas and opinions of the man who wrote it. But when it has been read before the society it then is open for discussion by the members in attendance, and through this discussion we are usually able to sift the wheat from the chaff and arrive at pretty near a correct conclusion.

That is to say we would arrive at pretty nearly the correct conclusion if the paper could be fully and intelligently discussed. This has not been done, in a very large way, for the reason that none of the membership knew in advance what any particular paper would contain, hence it was quite impossible to examine the matter in advance and bring to the meeting all the available knowledge on the subject under discussion; also, unless the reader of the paper is interrupted, it was impracticable to remember very important points, especially if the speaker went on to topics which were not coming up for discussion when he came for discussion the members were unable to recall all those things which they might wish to call upon, comments, etc., for. This has sadly harmed the work of the society in the past, but it is in the present. We will be able to discuss the various papers fully and intelligently. Given this, it will be in a grand way, if a body of men such as attend these meetings cannot get at the kernel of any nut presented, and I make bold to predict that largely by reason of this change the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will be able to fulfill its mission and become a power for good in the industry.

Six Reels to a Trim.

W. H. Sheppard, Davenport, Washington, says:

With regard to the article, "A Warning," March 25 issue, while I don't like to make the brother out a prevaricator, still, I, myself, projected six reels with one trim of carbons, and would be doing it yet if had not friends who endeavor to persuade me to manage Power's. In fact I have run as many as eight (8) reels with one set of carbons. Am trying to take the subject seriously and wish we didn't have children. Might consent to send you one when finished. Depend on how nicely you ask for it.

M. C. C.

I'm advancing, of course. When aforementioned photographs are finished kindly order friend husband to mail me one forthwith. Now, Mr. Man, wadda y' goata say, huh? And I'll schitch on you if you obey the man. As to those film-card-carbon sets, that would be largely governed by size of carbons and amperage. If you can run six reels (8,000 feet) of film at normal speed with one trim I would say you are using pretty large carbons for your amperage. Even allowing 70 feet to the minute, 8,000 feet would last almost two hours, and I have never seen two projection carbons burn that length of time if working up to or near normal capacity. Of course, if you're only 20 per cent, for instance, use 30 amperes and ½ inch carbons then you doubtless could do it, but it would be at the cost of some considerable efficiency. I think the man who runs a Trim and has his carbons near the candle must inevititably diminish its brilliancy. Just how far one may go in the matter of excess in carbon capacity without encountering light loss I do not know, but intend to find out lest it's too late.
Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

The Proper Presentation of Pictures Musically.

"Seated one day at the organ, he was weary and ill at ease,
And his fingers wandered idly over the NOISY keys,"

H e was playing the pictorial, not with it but at it. The changing scenes showing the news of the day had little interest for him, and he hanged away on marches and waiters, some firing by acci dent, while others using themselves as people expected something from the scene. So he continued his crazy hanging, and the patrons became "weary and ill at ease" also. Shortly after this wonderful display of talent he lost his position, and today while the theater can get along without him. We beg to state that from the latest bulletins we are informed that the theater is still doing business at the old place, and this musical luminous larynxes at large "seeking whom he may devour."

This method of fitting the topical review is obsolete. There was a time when the orchestra leader selected a couple of marches and three waiters which he made do for the pictorial. When the May Festival was shown he started a bright waltz intermezzo, and when a thirty second scene showing the funeral of one of our noted members of Congress was flashed upon the screen he continued the number right through it because it was so short and the scene following portrayed the interior of a famous artist's studio. The incongruity of it was passed over lightly in those days because of the ignorance prevailing regarding musical settings.

Through the consistent and constant efforts of those musical directors who are striving to uplift the pictorial music we have arrived at a stage where every picture must receive a suitable musical setting. Patrons have become familiar with the art of picture fitting through attending those theaters where large orchestras are maintained and high priced collecters interpret the pictures. No abolish methods will be tolerated any longer by those that pay admission to see and HEAR.

Fundamentally there are no set rules for fitting the animated magazine, and for that very reason many directors have used what scenes must be fitted. It is not always wise to run the pictorial in the shape that it is received from the maker. Frequently by chang ing the prihces in the time allowance a better musical setting is procurable. This means that the orchestral leader and the house manager should confer on the matter, and often the operator can be of valuable assistance in giving new suggestions.

In order to suggest the possibilities in this science it is necessary to work from a possible hypothesis. Suppose that we have a Screen Telegram showing the following subjects in the order named: 1. DU PONT, GREAT Bits of WAR, 2. BAND CROSS鳴ADE, 3. BAN JOHN

S0N AT THE BASEBALL PARK, 4. GENERAL PERSHING REVIEWING THE FRENCH SOLDIERS, 5. COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES AT YALE, 6. THE OFFekte of PRESIDENT WILSON TO HIS AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, 7. COLORED PARSON BAPTIZING HIS BAPTIST FLOCK.

Now you will find that these scenes must be shifted, as it would be folly to finish the review with the sparkling water act. The scenes should work up to a climax of beauty applause, and to get this effect you would first have some of the pictorial scenes, or that of President Wilson. At the same time it would not be good showmanship to group all the "hand-getters" together. There should be a breathing space between each to allow for greater effectiveness. Our idea would be to arrange the scenes in the following manner: 1, 3, 4, 5, 8, 6, 2, and 7. This grouping will give ample variety of tonic color and change of temperature. This special theme showing how the gold delivered to the army is largely educational and neutral in atmosphere. You can use a light moderate with a pleasing melody and of consider nable length. This is the interest of the spectators at once. No. 3 gives you the opportunity of playing that old favorite, "Take Me Out to the Ball-Game." It will probably be short, and the chorus once through in the time allowance.

Now in No. 4 you have no choice but to play "March Lorraine." This is the official French march always played when the troops are on review. It is a mistake by playing an American patriotic number for General Pershing because even though you may desire to be courteous, you must first be accurate in the portrayal of the atmosphere.

To vary the music a little you might play for No. 5 a light waltz if the action will permit and you cannot go wrong if you use the "Boola-Boola Song," which is typical of the Yale University. If they are only handing out diplomas play it pp only as a suggestion. There is the case that a selection of this sort would be short, and you could readily finish on the phrase.

No. 8 has many possibilities in the line of interpretation. If you can find a way to do so in bringing a laugh to the audience by playing, "It Takes a Long, Tall, Dark Skinned Gai to Make a Preacher Lay His Bible Down." A strong darkly spiritual would certainly be appropriate, while some plaintive Southern soon song would not be amiss. Do not play "NIGHTY LAD A Rose."

After this little bit of quiet humor the audience is in form for No. 2, and when they hear the strains of "Onward Christian Soldiers" they are bound to break forth in rounds of applause. Do not play this number at a quick step, but with the natural dignity which belittles it. You may have the full strength of the band and again the President is shown.

For No. 6 choose another march of grandioso quality, or some patriotic air that would fit the situation. It will naturally be very short, so that the change will not be sudden, but still into that most popular of all songs for the present, "Over There." When our army is shown marching in France this is a fitting finish to a fine pictorial. The interest has not been broken by the lag, nor have you overrated the climax. Do not see that when the marching soldiers appear that the music is kept in perfect time with their step. This is an art in itself.

See that all your pieces are varying p while the sub

"No. 1 keep the orchestra down, cut out the brass altogether. Do not play at any time if before reaching your climax. Grade your volume according to your ritard and when the big moment comes you have the power to emphasize it.

Never use clap-trap effects in the pictorial. It is news that is being shown, not novelty, and the patrons have probably read all about what they see, and they have strong opinions on things of dignity. Do not jar their sense of music by the clanging of cow-bells.

The entire review must be played with snap whether it be played softly or loudly. To use druggy music is to kill it. The execution of each number should be clean and definite, the finish on a cadence, and the music must be appropriate to the mood of the audience. It is said that genius is the art of taking pains. Every theater can have a genius if the leader so desires it. A genius in the orchestral pit is a man that plays the full house, full house music in a successful business and satisfied house, and good business means a real coup. It pays to be a genius.

Music at the Rialto.

During the week beginning June 16 the Rialto gave one of those many musical performances for which it has become justly noted. The overture formerly known as "Orpheus in the Underworld"—before the Ilum showed his most despicable falsity—but now programmed as "Orpheus in the Lower World." was exceptionally well played by the Symphony orchestra; Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld at the baton. Mr. Reisenfeld has the happy faculty of so marking his contrasts that one is frequently amazed by his audacity, yet never fails to bring the public to a climax of praise for which he calls. The overture is taken from the opera which is based upon the old Grecian myth, in which it was claimed that Orpheum attempted to bring back to life, Eurydice, his dead wife.

Though the work is not a difficult one to perform, yet there are shadings and delicate gradations of tone beauty that if overlooked would deprive the overture of its popularity. The music is light, but must be well marked in its varied change of tempo. The hearty and spontaneous applause was a true tribute to the excellence of its performance.

We must disagree with the gentleman who selected the music for the educational called "Mr. Lassen in Action." His selection was altogether too bombastic and too highly flavored with Orientalism to correctly convey the atmosphere of grandeur and power as depicted in the scenic. There was one spot during the showing of the actual events where it might have been used properly, and in view of the fact that it was necessary to do caprice to play the picture we feel that the substitution of a quieter and more pastoral number in place of the bombastic Overture would have been in order.

Miss Annie Rosner sang "Because I Love You, Dear" (at least to its bow it sounded), by Charles Llawley. This little lady has a mighty good voice; but is handicapped by stage mannerisms and facial expessions that mean nothing but detract from the song. Her enunciation is sacrificed for purity of tone, and her interpretation is offered up on the same scale as a song as well known as "Because I Love You, Dear." It is unfair to change it, especially to alter a note to gain

A spectacular finale. Composers usually know what they want when they write the words. Emanuel Litt, a basso, whom we heard some time ago, has certainly improved his style and stage presence. In the "Vulcan's Song," from the opera "Phlegm," you will hear a vocal tour de force. His top notes were a bit off, as one always expects in a basso, but the richness of his lower register more than made up for it. His enunciation was perfect, and the words being more clean cut without losing the natural resonance.

This number was costumed, and from the side panels one could see a group of men in cloaks, with a touch of TWA's "Cirrus" clouds awaiting the song as sung. This created the atmosphere usually associated with the formal premiere. The feature, "Missing," was admirably fitted and well directed by our old friend Joseph Klein. Little touches like "In the Glamor" and "Jinx," effect legends of the unknown. During the fourth and fifth reels, we shall see some spot lights and smoke effects for the word fit. The changes of music were most suitable and beautifully timed. There was no overlapping of scenes, while the numbers were those that bore a musical analogue of the scene shown. Mr. Plinston wielded the baton for this item and put lots of ginger into his work. The magazine is always worked out in sequential order, and the music follows the same route. There is considerable art in selecting suitable music for the pictorial, and the Rialto stands high as an exponent of that art.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

ALL WOMAN (Goldwyn—Five Reels)—Theme—Allegretto. Suggest "Romance"—Rubens, "Nodding Tulip"—Trinbays, or "Shadowland"—Charlesworth.

This feature will need some rather heavy stuff to bring out the dramatic values. This does not mean a "final" of the pianolatine working up to dramatic tension. You will need a few burrs, dramatic agitatos, and a storm furiouso. Cue sheets are necessary.

BLUE-EYED MARY (Fox—Five Reels)—Theme unnecessary.

The opening is dramatic. Start with a slow andante, then a misterioso, followed by a mass of rapid numbers you can use Herceg's "Kod" from "The Deboutante," as there appears a direct cue. The music will need to be consistently heavy throughout. Note the main if dissonance, and see that the form is followed in the fifth by dramatic stuff. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Fox exchange.

THE TWO HEARTS (Ivan Film Co.)—See synopsis in issue.

CLAWS OF THE HUN (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderato. Suggest "Legend"—Prill, "Renaissance"—Widor, or "Romance"—London.

This is a patriotic film which must be fitted with strong, snappy music indicative of the big love for country. The first reel will need only light serenade stuff. At the T. Cari Von Helm, a fastreum and harsh number should be used emblematic of our hate. Note the direct cue for "Over There," and close the feature with the same selection. Watch for the auto crash effect in the picture and the shots in the last. You will also need some patriotic music during the scene with the mother and son. Romberg's "Mother" would be most fitting. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

The character of this feature is a dramatic depiction of political life in Russia. It is necessary to keep the music difficult to follow. The usual number of burrs, agitatos, and misteriosos to which is added some pathetic music, some dramatic tension, and a few light numbers for contrast all that you will need. Cue sheets can be obtained from the World exchange.

This is a society drama of great intensity. Dramatic music is needed while very few words are spoken. You will need an Hawaiian dance number, an Arabian dance, popular one-step, and a heavy pathetic selection. Note the wedding scene, and play with piano only until the last few action. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Metro exchange.

SANDY (Paramount—Five Reels)—Theme—Moderato and Scotch. Suggest "Charles La My Darling" or "Robin Adair.

This story takes place in the South, and deals with the old chivalry of Kentucky. Naturally being in that grave land we will need a scene of grave grandness. The first half of the picture will only stand a light setting, with a fast violin for the races in the third reel. The last reel will need a pastoral, and use any Scotch music beside the theme, and stick to the Southern numbers to give contrast to your setting. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Paramount exchange.

SOAP SUDS (Fox—Five Reels)—Theme—Allegretto. Suggest "Dance of the Moths"—Weidt, "Idilo"—Lack, or "The Merry Lark"—Deitrick.

Light music is needed for this modern comedy-drama. Waltzes, serenades, and intermedios will fit nicely. A couple of light operatic selections will fit here also. There is no room for a heavy number here, but you have the chance to give your patrons some variety in musical settings by availung yourself of this opportunity. Note the piano to action effect for the first reel. Cue sheets can be obtained from a Vitagraph exchange.

STATION CONTENT (Triangle—Five Reels)—Theme—Allegretto. Suggest "Gipsy Theme"—Rubis, "A Love Song"—Harriet, or "Mignonette"—Prill.

This is a melodrama with intense scenes of daring sprinkled throughout. It is a strong pictorialistic cast, many gipsies and burrs, and a number suitable for a big storm scene. Railroad background, as the entire story centers around railroad life. You will already own some of the background of the theatrical phase of the story. No cue sheets are available.

Open with "Down South," and melod of Southern airs. In the second reel, you will need a dramatic agitato to begin with followed by some heavy dramatic music. The third reel is almost completely agitato, with the closing scene to be a soft sound. During the fourth and fifth reels we will need some drams sounds according to action and a big battle agitato. Finish the picture with "Wedding March Militaire."

The atmosphere of this picture is distinctly pastoral, taking the scenes of the Maine woods. The character is an emotional drama requiring much of the same music. You will need a one-step, dramatic tension, furioso, misterioso, and heavy burry. A little touch of French Canadian music would not be out of place, and would lend variety. Cue sheets can be obtained from the World exchange.

Leader's Service Bureau. Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. Do you believe in changing the traditional tempo of a number to suit the picture?

A. Generally speaking, no; but if the scene is interrupted by a "flash back" of a few seconds the music might be retarded or hastened to fit the flash, returning to the normal tempo to complete the scene.

Q. Who wrote "The Wanderers" song?

A. The music was written by Gershon Schaluckowsky. This is one of the best of his few writings for voice.

Q. Will you kindly tell me what I am meant by a "Morrice Dance"? Do they dance it in this country? I saw the other day that one of Percy Grainger's compositions was called a "Morrice Dance."

A. The original Morris Dance was a sort of pageant with dancing possibly derived from the Morisco, a Moorish dance formerly popular in Spain and France. But it may owe its origin to the Maitaces, a French dance of the sixteenth century. In accounts of the Morisco no mention is made of a sword dance, which is a distinguishing feature of the Maitaces, and survived in the English Morris dance, and also in the American. The English Morris dance is said to have been introduced from Spain by John of Goust in the reign of Edward III, but this is extremely doubtful, as there are scarcely any traces of it before Henry VII, when it first began to be popular. It usually formed part of the May games, although it was not confined to any particular part of the year. The dances were ornamented with bells. There is a country dance which goes by the name of Morris Dance which is usually danced in the north of England. It is danced by Sir Robert's County, and is an English dance. It is unnecessary to have a ribbon between them under which the couples pass. The dance is known all through England, the different shires each having their own modifications. It is not danced in this country.

Q. I "fake" on the drums. Two or three times recently I have lost my jobs because I couldn't read. Where can I find a good teacher on drums in New York?

A. In these columns we are unable to give you any names and addresses, but if you will write us again giving us some more data regarding how much you wish to pay and what hours are convenient we shall be glad to put you in touch with an excellent teacher who is professionally engaged in picture playing.

Q. In playing an overture before my picture performance what length time would you suggest as being long enough and not too long to tire the average audience? Aren't they playing a two-hour show and your orchestra isn't of large proportions we would suggest that you limit your overture to about eight minutes, never exceeding ten.

Piano "Preludes."

Many of us, in spite of our musicianship, have wondered why the great pianistic artists always strike a few solid chords before commencing their solos. We used to think they were "feeling out" the instrument, or to gain some effect. But now we realize that they are preparing the audience for the coming work. The first stroke was in a dead atmosphere, and started it to vibrating so that subsequent notes were more effective. This same idea holds with a piano in a large hall. It is necessary to get the vibrations started, and for this purpose strong, colorful strokes should be struck, not a light touch. This is purely a matter of taste. This explanation may provoke the long debated facts regarding sound. Many scientists are inclined to believe that sound waves are conducted through materials (instead of through air), but until proof has been shown to the contrary, we must still cling to the old theory.

Recent Motion Picture Photographic Patents.

Abstracts by E. K. Research Laboratory.

U. S. Patents.

1262255. A Motion Picture Camera driven by a spring motor and adjustable to take one picture or a group of four pictures, as well as a cinematic series. When a set of four pictures are taken the diaphragm is changed to give stops in succession, so that one of the series will have the correct exposure.

Rector, E. (Continued.)

1261796. A mechanism particularly adapted for use in the synchronous reproduction of sound and pictures. It relates particularly to the mechanism for starting the rotation of a second sound record so that it will be at its maximum or desired speed and so that there will be no pause between the cessation of sound from one record and the beginning of the next.

J. D. Scott and E. C. Van Altena.

A Motion Picture Apparatus which uses lantern slides in place of film, each slide carrying four pictures. The whole collection of slides are carried upon a rotary table, which brings them successively to the exhibiting position, where they are rotated step by step.

A. S. Howell, Assigned to Bell & Howell Co.

An Automatic Mechanism for stopping the operation of film perforators and similar apparatus when the speed of film is exhausted.

R. P. Stimson.

1260560. A Motion Picture Contact Printing Machine in which the positive and negative films are conducted past the gate over a curved drum which insures proper contact.

W. J. Stange and L. M. Bannan.

Assigned One-Third to Rockwell L. Stone.

A Motion Picture Printing Apparatus in which the intensity of the light is controlled by interposed array units of known density between the source and the negative. The screen units are automatically moved into and out of position by means of pneumatically actuated mechanism actuated by perforation punched at intervals in the film in accordance with the density thereof.

F. B. Thompson.

1260265. A Film Treating Apparatus of the continuous type in which the film passes from the fluid treating tanks over chamios rollers, which remove the surface moisture, and through a weighted loop which maintains the proper tension. It is from thence carried to the drying chamber.

C. W. Ehlers.

1261077. A Governor Control Device for insuring uniform operation of hand operated motion picture projectors and cameras. If the operator turns the handle above the speed determined by the Governor the excess movement is not transmitted.

C. E. Akeley, Assigned to Akeley Camera, Inc.

1261890. A Spring Handle for Motion Picture Cameras and Projectors which prevents jars or lateral movements from affecting the camera or projector.

G. J. Teague, Assigned to Herbert S. Beckman.

1262284. An Attachment for Motion Picture Cameras which prevents jars or lateral movements from affecting the camera or projector.

H. H. Evans.

1260640. A Splicing Machine for Motion Picture Films. After the ends of the film are clamped into position the operator has merely to press two handles rearward, whereupon the film ends are cut, scraped, cemented, overlapped, and finally clamped down until dry.

British Patents.

112940. Color Cinematography. A cinematograph colored record images are taken and projected through two screens colored in accordance with a tri-color system, and in the two successive frames of the film the colors are complementary to each; the four images are taken and projected in successive pairs, each pair comprising complementary color records which are taken or projected simultaneously.

Novel Interview with Dorothy Gish

New Paramount Star Eager to Tell Amazing Bits of Reminiscence About Her Fellow Players.

By Edward Weitzel.

INTERVIEWING Dorothy Gish is productive of interesting information about all sorts of persons—except herself. The creator of the elfish little street singer in "Hearts of the World" has had many entertaining experiences during her screen career, of course, but the moment she is asked about one of them it reminds her of a similar occurrence in the life of some fellow-player, and you are given a highly animated and graphic sort of a speech, or what a fine artist Nazimova shows herself to be by her performance of the French model in "Revelation."

The younger of the Gish girls has been making personal appearances at the theaters in Chicago, New York, Boston and Philadelphia, where the Griffith masterpiece is being shown. A few remarks accompanied each performance.

"Have you enjoyed the experience?" she was asked, as she sat perched on a stool in a photographic studio, clad in a dainty summer frock and a picture hat, one day last week.

"Not at all!" she replied. "I was too anxious about my speech; but Mary Pickford is wonderful. You should have heard her during the Liberty Loan Campaign. Mary can do anything. You remember how she walked into the theater during a rehearsal, when she was a little girl and told David Belasco she'd come for an engagement? And she got it, too!"

"Your sister and you had an interview with Belasco when you were little tots, I understand.

"Yes; but Lillian got an engagement didn't. My how frightened we both were! Mr. Belasco was very kind, but we were so scared that we kept trying to get behind each other. We had a hearty laugh over it, when I met him the other day."

"Do you ever find it embarrassing to be so well known to thousands of people?"

"I'm not troubled that way very often—but Charlie Chaplin must find it dreadful at times. He was at the theater the night the Russian Ballet opened in Los Angeles and the company recognized him immediately. He almost stopped the show; all of the dancers played right at him. After the first act the manager came to Mr. Chaplin and told him the company had refused to go on with the performance until he went back stage and met them. He went and the curtain didn't go up for half an hour. When he did return he was smiling in the funniest way. They showed their admiration for him in every possible manner and he was not permitted to leave until everybody, men and women, had embraced him and kissed him on both cheeks."

"That was very kind of them, wasn't it?"

"Yes,« «doubtedly. "But I shouldn't have liked it, I'm sure" decided. "It's the same with everyone. My chauffeur was driving the machine for me one afternoon at home, when I noticed his eyes start to pop out of his head. "What is it?" I asked. "See, Mis' Gish, please—Charlie Chaplin." The best known actor who ever lived was just turning the corner."

"What about your plans as a Paramount star, Miss Gish?"

"I'm delighted with the arrangement, naturally, but I've been so occupied with getting ready to commence work I haven't had time to realize fully all it means to me. Mother and I leave for California tonight."

"You must have been very fond of your part in 'Hearts of the World?'"

"I loved it! And I was quite well satisfied with myself until I saw Nazimova in 'Revelation.' Her performance of that part of the French studio is simply perfect. The way she does everything—"

Dorothy Gish is so bright and natural and gracious, it is a great pleasure to listen to her. As a subject for an interview, however, she is altogether too fond of talking about other people.

Frederick Warde Engaged by World Pictures

FREDERICK B. WARDE has been engaged by World Pictures to play the role of Judge Ellis, in support of Kitty Gordon, in "The Unveiling Hand."

Mr. Warde was born in Warrington, Oxfordshire, on February 23, 1851, and made his first appearance on the stage at the Lyceum Theater in Sunderland in 1878. He was the second murderer in "Macbeth." He came to America in 1874 and made his first appearance at Booth's Theater, New York, on August 10 of that year, when he played the part of Marston in "Fike." He has been seen in numerous productions since then, and has been featured with the late John M'Cullough in "Richard III," "The Gladiator," "Virginius," "Othello," "King Lear," "Brutus," "The Taming of the Shrew," and the "Lady of Lyons." He has also appeared with the late Charles Fechter in 1878 in "Monte Cristo," with the late Alice Lind- gard, and as Cromwell in "King Henry VIII," with the late Charlotte Cushman.

He has appeared in the role of Macduff in "Macbeth" and remained at the Booth Theater for three years. In May, 1877, he appeared at Daly's as Lucullus in "Vesta" and subsequently at the Broadway Theater in the same year in "Brunhilde," "Ches- nay Wold," "Mary Stuart" and "Cleopatra," with the late Madame Janauschek.

For many years he toured with his own company, and from 1893 to 1903 was in partnership with Louis James, playing all the standard and legitimate productions. At the conclusion of his partnership with James he went on a tour with Kathryn Kidder, playing Matho in "Salame." Since then he has appeared on the lecture platform and in Henry W. Savage's production, "Everywoman."

DEATH OF HARRY ELWELL.

Harry Elwell, one of the best liked and most efficient workers at the Famous Players-Lasky west coast studios, who held the position of head of the property department, passed away Saturday, June 9, after a protracted illness. He had recovered sufficiently to return to the studio when he was again compelled to give up the effort to carry on his duties, and after a brave fight for life succumbed to the illness. He leaves a wife and is sincerely mourned by those of his co-workers at the studio who came in contact with him during the two years of his service with the organization.

ZECCA VISITING PACIFIC COAST.

Ferdinand Zecca, manager of productions of Pathe Exchange, Inc., left New York for the West Coast June 22. He will visit the studios making pictures released by Pathe while in California. He was accompanied by L. E. Franconi, manager of the film editing department of Pathe. He will be absent about six weeks. This is Mr. Zecca's first trip to the Coast, he having recently came to New York from France.
Famous Players Plans Arouse Interest

Executives of the Company Receive Many Messages of Congratulation Following Last Week's Announcement.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation plans for the coming year, commencing September 1, announced in the trade papers last week in the largest amount of advertising space ever taken in each one of the mediums used by one company, created wide interest throughout the trade.

Many wires and telegrams poured in the New York headquarters of the company expressing much appreciation of what is everywhere agreed to be the greatest undertaking by any organization since the inception of the industry. Congratulations have been heaped upon the executives of the company, and from every state a representative showing of recognition from exhibitors and exchange men over the importance of the announcement and its effect upon the entire industry has been received.

The dedication of the organization and its activities toward helping to keep up the morale of the nation at a time when such stimulus is most desirable has attracted the attention of hundreds outside of the film industry as also has the fact that the producers of Paramount and Artcraft pictures will present a greater output during the next twelve months than any one concern has ever approached, namely, 206 feature productions and 156 short subjects.

Shortly after the initial announcement made its appearance telegrams and letters began to pour in from exchanges. Messages direct from exhibitors and of a similar nature also were received.

The possibility of obtaining more Paramount and Artcraft pictures, as outlined in the new schedule, also met with enthusiasm, especially in communities where the present maximum supply is less than the demand.

Of particular interest was the announcement of the Success Series, which will give exhibitors the opportunity in presenting some of the masterpieces of the screen in modern dressing. The approval of exhibitors in reissuing these subjects was established before the producers decided to go to the expense and pains of placing on the market the former screen triumphs with modern technical innovations.

Many exhibitors who have never run these pictures expressed enthusiasm at the opportunity brought about by the establishment of the Success Series. Others have stated their intention of re-booking them.

JEAN PAIGE SIGNS VITAGRAPH CONTRACT.

Jean Paige, who was graduated from the O. Henry short reel subjects into Vitagraph Blue Ribbon features recently, has been placed under contract by Albert E. Smith, according to a statement authorized by the Vitagraph president. Miss Paige is one of the youngest of Vitagraph's stars. Little more than eighteen months ago Miss Paige secured an introduction to the Vitagraph president and Mr. Smith started her in O. Henry pictures. It was not long before she gained recognition as one of Vitagraph's most talented players in these charming little screen gems.

Then it was that Mr. Smith gave her a part in Blue Ribbon features, her first being "The Desired Woman," in which she played in the support of Mr. Morey in "The Golden Goal," and with Alice Joyce in "Find the Woman." Her next picture will be "Tangled Lives," in which she plays a prominent role with Harry Morey and Betty Blythe. It is scheduled for release on July 1.

ARMOND KALICZ ENGAGED BY WORLD PICTURES.

World Pictures announces the engagement of Armand Kalicz, now appearing in "The Kiss Burglar" at the George M. Cohan Theater, New York City, to support June Elvidge in "The Love Wraith," Travers Vale directing.

Fox Leases Victoria of St. Louis

Fine Two-Thousand Seat House Will Be the Home of His First-Run Productions.

William Fox has further extended his amusement enterprises by assuming sole control of the beautiful Victoria theater of St. Louis on a ten-year lease and will change the name to the William Fox Liberty Theater.

The news was received in the trade with surprise, as it was said that Fox would extend his chain of theaters to other big cities of the United States. This is the twenty-seventh theater under Mr. Fox's management, all in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Massachusetts.

Announcement was made at the Fox offices in New York that a high-class picture policy with an orchestra of thirty-five pieces would be inaugurated at the Liberty on Sunday night, September 1, with John Zanft in charge of preliminary arrangements.

The Liberty has 2,000 seats, is situated at Delmar and Grand avenues, in the heart of the theater section of St. Louis, and is near the New Grand Central Theater, managed by William Sievers. Fox productions will be shown first-run exclusively at the Liberty. The opening production has not been selected, but it will be a Fox Standard picture. Annette Kellermann in "Queen of the Sea" is a later attraction.

"For some months past my productions have not received a proper and regular first-run showing in St. Louis," said Mr. Fox, "I therefore decided to operate my own theater in St. Louis. This is a departure from my rule, as I do not intend to extend my chain of theaters, except to such large cities where my pictures are not presented regularly and in a manner that I deem warranted by merit and production quality.

"There are several other big cities of America in which Fox Film Corporation pictures have not been regularly pre-
Rambles 'Round Filtown
With WALTER K. HILL.

Better than anything else we know of to get this week's effort under way is to introduce Miss Mary Garden. Not only pink, neatly mignonified, correctly spelled and punctuated, Secrets in the Life of Madge Kennedy has come to us fresh and fancy from the Educational Department of Goldwyn. Here goes:

Food Will Win the War.

Madge Kennedy's favorite desert is chocolate mousse. She also likes candied violets. The Goldwyn star is not an athletic girl, though she loves to tramp through the woods collecting various wildflowers. She is a clever botanist. Not being allowed to keep a dog in her Riverside Drive apartment she can only enjoy her favorite companion when she spends the week-end at her country place on Long Island. The company is silent.

Enter the Bolsheviki.

He is a Russian wolfhound which she calls Vladimir. He was presented to her by a Russian diplomat who brought the animal from Odessa. This was before the city on the Black Sea was captured by the Germans. Madge Kennedy has no favorite perfume. She likes to open her big rose jar and put on the delicate aroma. She puts a flower from every bouquet she receives in it.

She has done this ever since she was graduated from school.

The jar holds a quart. She is the originator of this procedure, and is making multi-colored squares for an old-fashioned crazy quilt. It will contain a piece from every costume she has worn. Her favorite leading man (at present) is Tom Moore.

Why Print Trade Papers?

She corresponded with Mary Garden and tells the singer what is happening in the world of motion pictures.

Once a week she composes and writes her weekly letter and Mary Garden cabled from Paris to know what was wrong.

Madge Kennedy is said by all her associates to have a perfect disposition. Nothing ever ruffles her.

When her chauffeur is late with the car, Madge Kennedy spends the time chatting with Goldwyn friends. Another star would fume.

Plays Her Own Chords.

Besides being a pianiste of considerable ability, Madge Kennedy is a singer of ballads, though she does not aspire to sing in public. She likes to read in French, though she admits she is a poor student of that interesting language.

Miss Kennedy is a true patriot, and has done a great deal toward furthering the work of winning the war just as in "The Service Star."

Next week we shall tell all about how Miss Kennedy acts for the mignonified.

The Masonic:

"Madge Kennedy's Quiet Sincerity."

Many Happy Returns.

The Masonic (no, not the bowling club) has felicitated upon its third birthday, Jim Beecroft and J. Ray Murray. Incidentally we observe that J. R. M. has improved his "Column" by introducing his own picture as a feature. From appearance alone in Circulom, he is looking better than he ever did in the old days around Lenaere square.

Wig-Wag to Help! Help!

During a wait while on location at Lake Ronkonkoma last week, Betty Blythe sat in the cool breezes on the grass lawn with a small woolly Chiwag in her lap. When the rest of the players woke her up the wig, much to the dismay of Betty, was floating on the bosom of the lake. She says that she would have waded right in after it had she not realized that this woolly were not wearing decolleté evening gowns as bathing suits. But what we want to know is—what happened to the wig?

What is going to happen in the motion picture studios when the President's work or right work comes effective?
What will be the situation of the eligible males between 21 and 31, including stars, leading men and such, have to pitch in actively to help Uncle Sam's crusade?
These questions were put up to the heads of the various departments at Metro's West Coast studios, by the chief mimeographer. The following symposium was the result:

Production Department.—The order will bring the old man into his own at last.
He would make an ideal camera operator.
He is an expert photographer, besides, and the exercise would be good for his rheumatism.
He would have to be unmoored every now and then, and the exercise is steady and cracking it hard enough now to turn out good film without taking further chances on his health.

Finance Department.—A splendid opportunity for the fellows whom Osel would chloroform.
Speaking of finances, we can take our middle-aged bookkeepers and make actors out of them. Then we can call in the women and keep the books. They are supposed to have old-fashioned ideas, and we wouldn't have to pay them much either.

Scenario Department.—The chances are the edit won't make any difference.
Many of the situations are to have been written by persons in their infancy or persons in their dotage. Some already have been voted "wrong," and a few for great success, although submitted as strictly original and subject to draft.
Others are merely in their应收账款.

Casting Department.—The old soldiers home at Sawtell isn't far from Holly-wood. In cases of this kind, we can prob-ably conscript a bunch of them. They're ready to prove they're not liable to the draft, having fought in the Civil War and very long ago. Anybody; he's a veteran with a little grease paint, a toupee and minus his brush ought to screen as well as juveniles who don't work, won't fight, and can't act.

Technical Department.—If the worst comes to the worst, some of our people on the women's land army to dig all the trenches for battle scenes. Lady scene shifters won't he so much to their minds not to make up their faces. It would be awkward and dangerous, however, if one of them happened to powder her nose while moving a floating wing.

Property Department.—The work or right done. Hopefully, we'll already have a prize cat, "Mrs. Metro," who, with her three kittens, "Irls," "Close-up," and "Long Shot," can be used for a scene in which animals figure. This will enable us to get along without the usual lion tamer and elephant interpreter.

In making this production, Baker stricken with appendixitis before he could complete the manuscript and wrote the final scene of the film a week after his appendix had been removed.

In making this production, Hickman identified himself with the "silk-shirt" school of directors, as typified by other prominent professionals. He came near joining the school of riding trousers, putting on wearing directors, but the weather turned his decision toward the more summerly outlook.

Now he has committed himself irrevocably.

Rambles 'Round Filmtown

Mr. Flinn's Correct Age is Advertised on His Desk.

July 13, 1918

Suspected Biographies—No. 1.
(Reproduced from Paramount-Artcraft)

John Cunningham Flinn.
By Pete Schmid.

Taraa Zing! Boom-De-Aye!
Following such a pretentious introduction, which we have all so enthusiastically received, we now proceed to place upon the well-known page the astonishingly able and athletically proportioned Director of Advertising and Publicity of the great organization, whose product, we repeat, is the ultimate in motion pictures.

Note—Before going further we must say that Pete Schmid has in mind Paramount-Artcraft movie dramas, comedies and educational films. Pete has said organization and product in mind for the perfectly good reason that he is paid in coin of the realm to use his mind exclusively for that purpose. Cheerfully we let him rave!—The Rambler.

Seeing as how John Cunningham, who spells and insists upon having others spell his Flinn with a i, is our immediate and respected boss (Pete has resumed, let us interject), it has been pointed out to us that beyond the shadow of a doubt, it would prove most advisable to slip, slide or slip over the dark incidents of his adventurous career and accent his many, many, many, many, many good qualities which have so deeply impressed themselves in the famous and much lauded Realm of Ages.

Note—Just why Pete selected "Rock of Ages" instead of "Blest Be the Tie That Binds" as the favorite hymn for this occasion is beyond comprehension. However: "Onward Christian Soldier"—The Rambler.

All of which (resuming Pete Schmidish) is true in some manner, shape or form, but which has nothing to do with the function of Paramount-Artcraft Pep, conducted without fear or favor, as the Old Exhibitor would say. The fact that Mr. Flinn was born in Evanston, Ill., arouses no sympathy from us whatsoever. That he has lived down this silly we say—handicap is, however, an admirable accomplishment. (Pause for applause.) This fact we, even to our red fingertips, are compelled to admit. Evanston, then, is a thing of the past, and we will refer to it at a later date.

Leaving Evanston as rapidly as possible by horse car and stage coach, but chiefly we were compelled to run, seven years later, where we find an athletic looking youth, in blue flannel shirt and running pants, counting up the evening's receipts of a more or less amateur basket-ball game. Yes, you've guessed right—it's none other than John, or "Jack" Flinn, as he was then known by the Crescent Athletic Association. It was at this period of his career that his first press agent propensities came to the surface. In a series of famous articles under the heading of "Tricks of Basketball Players," Mr. Flinn disclosed many fine points of the game to relate, the newspaperman who swallowed this series and ran it in the Kansas City Star at nothing per line was none other than our own (Note—Meaning Paramount-Artcraft) Jerome Beatty, who, in a sense, is editor of this (Note—Meaning Pep) publication.

As chief conductor of the affairs of the aforementioned Crescent Club, Mr. Flinn directed a tour which was to take the athletic ones to Honolulu. On reaching San Francisco, however, Mr. Flinn decided that even his highly trained and physically fit associates would find it a long swim back, so the many (1) gate receipts in hand (one hand), bethought himself of the least expensive route home. Just at this time, the A. A. U. stepped in and raised a question as to the professionalism displayed by the Crescent aggregation, but they were soon convinced of the fact that the members were receiving no fees for their efforts.

On finally arriving back in E... Mr. Flinn continued his athletic endeavors for a while and rather suddenly concluded that his future career would associate him with the field of journalism. Migrating to Chicago, he received his first training in this line with one of the prominent dailies, name unknown. Then New York called him, and John Cunningham Flinn pressed his Sunday-go-to-meeting suit, packed away his running trunks, gym shirt, and grabbed the w. k. rattle for the big village.

In New York, Mr. Flinn associated himself with Charles Herold, and for several years he toiled as a metropolitan newspaperman alongside of such personages in the trade as Mr. Ulrich, Mr. Arthur, Mr. George Peteschmid, et al. In consulting Mr. Ulrich regarding the person who would fill the latter's shoes a few years later, Mr. Flinn was "always industrious, well liked, and possessed the greatly sought after nose for news."

"He always had money, and loaned it to us guys, who were usually broke," said Mr. Ulrich. On further investigation, we found that cause Mr. Flinn to give away his money—other's played poker, Mr. Flinn studied the dictionary for big words.

Later, as Director and Editor of The Herald, he was able to obtain many passes for our paper, upon which his friendships increased. Strange to say, those friends still stick, even though they no longer get the free ducats. After nine years and five months, Mr. Flinn proved himself such an expert about newspapermen's championship cup. Arriving with the cup, he immediately took out a large positive of it, and carelessly said, "Just to make that insurance a good investment by filing his domicile in Yonkers with cup." Suddenly, with a light laugh, he began his real career as a P. A. Little need be said here of his achievements along this line. It's all fanned out. As we've said, Mr. Flinn turned his attention to the film industry. His chief weakness, from newspaper observation, is his speech-making propensities. "Can make a very good writer, but great writers never make great speakers."

When Jesse L. Lasky beckoned to Mr. Flinn, John bade his many good friends farewell. It was quite thoughtless of him, but since his time he has lived with a sort of brooding, and when we ask him about it he says, "That's good."

His flow of the King's English, or the Queens, for that matter, comes as fluent as a blue flannel shirt and running pants. He doesn't give a damn about the Los Angeles film colony and makes things hard for good-looking young leaders. Mr. Flinn has such as Ashton—Mabel Condon's Bulletin.

Old Friends Are Star and Author of Fox Screen Story

W. HEN, the other day at the offices of the Fox Film Corporation, William Fox introduced to the press his forthcoming production, "Riders of the Purple Sage," he brough to conclusion a man of four years and months. A very delicate story, it is produced as fine as many of the figures of the fictions seen in the films. Woven in every scene of "Riders of the Purple Sage," is the friendship of William Farnum, star of the production, and Zane Grey, the author.

Farnum and Grey have been the closest of friends for many years. This friendship began in the West, where, both lovers of the outdoor, they found a bond of common interest in the passion for fishing. In the years that have followed, this friendship has grown strong and has brought companionship and hardships of out-of-door camps.

The men have hunted big game in the Rockies; together they have fished the streams and lakes from the Columbia to the Southern California; they have lived with each other under the most trying circumstances—in camp, on the road, in hotels. They have tested each other in the greatest of all trials—close companionship—and their friendship has grown strong and as as last as their own mountains.

Some of these long hunting trips—an expedition into the wildest part of Utah—that Zane Grey first conceived the idea of writing "Riders of the Purple Sage," his romance of the early Mormon days in Utah territory. Gradually, while he and Farnum hunted and fished, the character of LaSmart, the avenger of Mormon wrongs, took shape in his brain, and nights around the camp fire he sketched out the story from the outlines of his story. He told his friend of his aims in writing the book, he pictured the characters, he asked for Farnum's suggestions and advice. Eventually as he wrote the first chapters of a rough draft, he read parts of it to his companion.

Completion of the novel was completed and published, and the first one to congratulate Grey on its success was Farnum, who was then filming a production at Hollywood. Some time afterward William Fox bought the motion picture rights to the book, and word was sent to Hollywood for Farnum to do the production.

Raulinson Leading Man
For Geraldine Farrar

GOLDWYN'S emphasis upon production quality is made clear by an inspection of the all-star cast engaged to support Geraldine Farrar in her first Goldwyn picture, now in the course of making at the company's Fort Lee studios.

Miss Farrar's leading man is Herbert Rawlinson, for several years a star in his own right and possessing a definite following.

Another person who has been starred separate is a character, who has a very important role in Miss Farrar's production. Miss Heming is known in most of America, Farrar through her stage successes and recently she has been seen on the screen in "The Judgment House" and "The Gardens of the Tiber."

Still other well known names to be found in Miss Farrar's cast are Hamard Short, and in the support of many stars of stage and screen; Percy Marmont and Maude Turner Gordon. This choice of characters, remarks James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual, in a discussion of the Outing-Chester adventure pictures, is to be released through Mutual exchanges.

"The notion of making up a show for a first class house and for a first class audience out of short but keenly interesting pictures as a bit of novelty is so simple and logical that it is revolutionary. The one great significance is a recognition of the fact that a picture does not have to be from five to eight reels long to contain feature quality and feature office value."

"The effect may be to make a great many exhibitors give more thought and attention to the short pictures which go on their screen. I hope incidentally that it may lead some of them to think about our Outing-Chester adventure pictures."

"We desire to point out to the trade, with a penalty for non-participation, that by their runs at the Strand theater on Broadway in New York and the high quality of its booking, and amid the enthusiastic director of that famous theater, the Outing-Chester releases can be made quite as important a drawing card to the theater as the feature end of the bill."

"Mr. Rothapfel's experiment with a short picture program at the Rivoli does not at all mean that the feature picture is in for a period of depreciation. It means that the short-lengths are a real part of the entertainment and that the short lengths must not be considered "junk.""

"In a publicity article in connection with the Rothapfel idea appearing in the New York Times is observed this statement: 'If some one invented a machine that would register the reactions of spectators thousands of persons would be surprised to learn from it that their interest was really more consistently alert for animated pictorials, scenic films, spectacular action, and short comic and dramatic sketches.'"

"The Outing-Chester pictures contain the values and qualities discussed to a marked degree. They are really little one thousand-foot camera reports on adventure which are sent from the rising places and peoples in the Fiji Islands, the by-ways of the West Indies, the wilds of Canada, and the untracked jungles of South America."

"They contain," concluded Mr. Sheldon. "They contain the conferences of explorers, the adventures of pioneers, the famous expeditions of famous men, the characters that only nature could make up, and action that just had to be in there."

"We have applied our branches with ample prints for advance screenings to exhibitors. We want to show the goods first, and talk contracts afterward. That is what we think of them."
General Film to Issue Tucker's "Hypocrites"

The distribution of George Loane Tucker's celebrated screen version of the Henry Arthur pales play, "Hypocrites," is to be taken over at once by General Film Company. In this six-reel production is starred Elizabeth Risdon, the English actress of "Mother" and "The Maxman" fame, and more recently the star of "Seven Days Leave," the military melodrama which created a stir on Broadway.

"Hypocrites" deals with a moral problem, but so cleverly and in such good taste as to eliminate everything objectionable and still retain the "punch." The outstanding feature of the film adaptation of the famous play is the acting of Miss Risdon. The play deals a smashing blow at so-called righteous people who erect glass houses for themselves to live in while other people go naked.

The story is dramatic, and from the introduction begins the unraveling of one of the most sympathetic and engrossing of dramas.

Distinctive Tucker touches are in evidence in the capable cast surrounding Elizabeth Risdon, in the attractive English countryside settings and the beautiful photographic work. "Hypocrites" is an intimate story of life in a quaint English village, with the undertone of the village "Squire" to lay down strict moral rules for the guidance of the community, despite the fact that the spectre of scandal hovers about within his own family circle.

In anticipation of a wide demand for the Tucker feature General Film Company is planning an intensive sales campaign to cover theatre, newspaper, magazine, and radio organisations, and distributors will be supplied by General Film Company. Announcement of the release date will be made shortly.

Hayakawa Selling Plans

Are Completed by Mutual

ELLING plans for the series of Sue Hayakawa specials, produced by the Haworth Pictures Corporation and to be distributed through exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation, have been completed and several of conferences between representatives and officials of the Mutual held in the office of James M. Sheldon, president of the latter, in Chicago.

September 1 has been selected as the release date for the first of the Hayakawa specials, and five more will be released at intervals of two weeks, with the entire series to be completed by November. Each of the specials will be available for pre-release. The succeeding pictures, eight in all, will be available for Mutual exchanges.

The exhibitor will be provided with a most complete array of advertising. Some of the experiments have already been made in the preparation of the paper to fulfill the theater's demand for "something new." Two sets of one sheet and two sets of three sheet will be supplied in addition to the usual artwork. Additional quantity of other material necessary to the exploitation of productions of high quality.

"His Birthright" and "The Temple of Dusk" are to be the first of the Hayakawa specials, both of which will be completed well before the date of release. The Hayakawa productions are being scheduled after a detailed survey of the West Coast and James Young.

"Information is that the bookings of the Hayakawa specials will be extremely heavy," said James M. Sheldon, president of Mutual, in discussing the preliminary sales campaign. "Our branch offices are already reporting an unusual number of inquiries from exhibitors as to the details of the selling plan. The box office value of Susse Hayakawa is recognized by the fact that exhibitors have told us that the Japanese artist ranks with the first stars of the screen in popularity with the picture going public.

Vitagraph Announces Serial Program for Coming Year

VITAGRAPH has definitely fixed its future serial policy, and exhibitors of the United States and Canada now are guaranteed four serials a year, with an episode for each week in the year. William Duncan, with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, will head one company, while Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway will head the other. Beginning with "A Fight For Millions," featuring William Duncan with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, which is scheduled for release on July 15, these two companies will alternate, so that an exhibitor may count on a Duncan-Johnson-Ryan serial, then a Moreno-Holloway serial, then a Duncan serial again, and so on.

The serial schedule which has been mapped out by Vitagraph is as follows: July 15, 1918, William Duncan with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan; October 21, Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway; January 27, 1919, William Duncan with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan; May 5, Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway.

Thus Vitagraph not only is standing by its previously announced "serial episode for each week in the year," but also is affording exhibitors the opportunity to book their serial attractions for fifty-two weeks on a single contract.

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, in announcing the new serial policy of the company, stated that Antonio Moreno already was on his way to the Pacific Coast studio of the company, and that he and Miss Holloway would start work at once on their first serial under the direction of Paul Hurst.

The return of Mr. Moreno to Vitagraph's standard will be greeted with enthusiasm by exhibitors and fans who followed him as a Blue Ribbon star and will be like a home-coming to the star. In Carol Holloway Mr. Moreno will have a worthy co-star because she is known as a girl of unlimited pluck and daring.

William Duncan and his company are nearing completion of "A Fight For Millions" and another is ready for him and Miss Johnson and Joe Ryan, so that within a few weeks Vitagraph will have two new serials under way.

"A Wife's Conscience" Is a Problem of Human Life

A WIFE'S CONSCIENCE probably will be the title of Bessie Barriscale's Para- lita production now being filmed at the Brunton Studios in Los Angeles. At the base of the story and its whole reason for being is a problem of human life which makes thrills and suspense, causes the characters much travail, and puts Miss Barriscale, as Dorothy Kingsley, into a situation of risk from which it seems that there is no way out—and yet keep the sympathy of the audience.

Then it is that the twist of the ending reverses the entire perspective from which the audience views the play. Up to a certain point as the intensity of the plot and the suspense both mount higher and higher the sympathy for the leading character gets less and less in proportion. There is, of course, another sympathy which any woman who witnesses the play cannot help but give Dorothy Kingsley, the wife and mother, who because of a little daughter about whom there is a mystery, is harried by conscience and fear.

In this production Bessie Barriscale is directed by Howard Hickman. It was written by William Parker.

Roscie's Nurse Story Comes July 8.

Roscoe "Pappy" Arbuckle's next Paramount-Arundale comedy, "Good Night, Nurse," has been scheduled for release on July 8. This film is said to promise lots of fun for those who see it and lots of money for those who book it. "Pappy" has offended once too often, so the next morning his wife takes him to a sanitarium for the cure. The weird sights that greet his eyes on entering the dread place are too much for "Fatty," but wifey keeps him elected, and after he sees the beautiful nurses he is content.

Just to get the proper atmosphere for "Good Night, Nurse," the comics went to Arrowhead, Hot Springs, the most famous of southern California health resorts.

Supporting "Pappy" in this comedy are the elastic marvles, Buster Keaton and Al St. John, and winsome Alice Lake supplies the beauty and feminine joy.
Scene from "The Glorious Adventure" (Goldwyn).

Smiles and Tears Alternate in Mae Marsh Production

IN Mae Marsh’s newest Goldwyn Picture, "The Glorious Adventure," by Edith Barnard Delano, the star enjoys some delightful moments. She wavers between smiling and tears—none can do this more effectively than Mae Marsh—and it is predicted her audiences will do the same as a matter of course.

The production is replete with original touches in costuming and in the settings, and the story itself is decidedly out of the ordinary. While it is in every sense a modern production, Mae Marsh is given the opportunity to wear costumes of a bygone day, the period before the Civil War being represented in some of the dresses worn. None of the action, however, is removed from the present day. This is a unique feature in itself.

Mae, the girl impersonated by Mae Marsh, is reared by her aunt in the way the old lady lived before the war. Thus, while they both knew that the calendar says 1918, they cling to the dresses and customs of ante-bellum days. This brings about many amusing incongruities and in the end Carey’s glorious adventure is given added zest when she starts out on a long journey clad in shawl and crinoline.

Irwin Starts Campaign on "A Fight for Millions"

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of the Vitagraph, distributing organization, announces that everything is in readiness for the nation-wide advertising campaign which is to herald to the public the comic of "A Fight for Millions," the newest Vitagraph serial, in which William Duncan is featured with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan as his chief supports.

Although the serial, which was written by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, is not released until July 15, Mr. Irwin has laid out a campaign which gives the exhibitors virtually thirty days for their advance publicity work in preparation for the opening of the serial. The first move in this campaign was the early shipment of prints so that exhibitors could see the majority of the episodes screened before the release date. First prints were shipped to all of the Vitagraph exchanges more than two weeks ago, and others have followed them in rapid sequence, so that by next week more than two-thirds of the serial will be visible for the showmen of the country.

Jewel Carmen Begins "Above the Law"

Immediately after completing the picturization of Gouverneur Morris’ story, "You Can’t Get Away With It," under the title of "The Fallen Angel," Jewel Carmen has begun on "Above The Law," a production based on the magazine story of the same name by Max Brand. Miss Carmen is working under the direction of Robert Thornby. This is Mr. Thornby’s second production for the William Fox forces.

Beautiful Background in Metro’s "A King in Khaki"

BEAUTIFUL scenic backgrounds, which by reason of past performances are a looked-for feature of Harold Lockwood vehicles, are in story and striking evidence in "A King in Khaki," a romantic drama based on Henry Kitchell Webster’s novel in which Lockwood makes his next appearance under the Metro banner.

The story of the picture, which is now in course of production under the direction of Fred J. Halshofer, is laid on a semi-tropical island, which is described as a great plantation rising over a picturesque rock-ribbed coast with its deep coves and caves, once the home of pirates because of the valuable goods and the gold which was stored in the island. The word picture painted by the novelist in describing the scenic beauties of the spot has been verified by the actuality of the most picturesque locations on the Californian Coast, along which the Lockwood Company has been working for the last four weeks.

Many of the scenes obtained were photographed in the vicinity of the historic Monterey Harbor.

"Her Husband’s Honor" Title of Goodrich Play

HER Husband’s Honor" has been selected as the title for the first of Edna Goodrich’s new series of features for Mutual. It was produced under the working title "The Gadabout" from Malbebe Helies Justice’s story.

"Her Husband’s Honor" has been set for release August 5. The picture was produced under the direction of Burton King, Miss Goodrich will shortly start work on the second of her new series.

"Her Husband’s Honor" was chosen as a vehicle for Miss Goodrich after a long search for a play which would exactly suit the talents of the players.

The story is built around the efforts of a young wife to save her husband from disgrace and prison as the result of an impending business crash for which he was not responsible but in which he is a victim. The plot involves the efforts of a delegation of Japanese government representatives given to secure certain plans and specifications from an American contractor.

AMBUSATOR GERARD’s screen version of "My Four Years in Germany," has been shown at more special performances rather big feature of the day, according to the records on file at First National Headquarters. The latest, and the biggest, respects the most interesting special performance of the film was that given on June 12, before the inmates of the Minnesota State Prison at Stillwater, which elicited the following letter of appreciation from the warden:

"Through the courtesy of E. R. Pearson, general manager of the First National Exhibitors Circuit of the Northwest, and Maurice Abrams, manager of the picture Gerard’s "My Four Years in Germany," the inmates of the Minnesota State Prison were permitted to see this wonderful production. On behalf of the administration and all the inmates, I wish to thank these gentlemen for this great kindness.

"These men and women, who for the time being are deprived of their liberty, are not wanting in patriotism. They have demonstrated in many ways that the patriotic spirit is ever alive in their souls, and, while they may have erred, yet their love of country and loyalty to the flag cannot be questioned. This is best exemplified by their subscriptions and donations to the three Liberty Loans, War Stamps, Red Cross and Knights of Columbus, amounting in all to $50,222, over $40 per capita.

"I am sure that we will all be better American citizens after having seen this great picture. Again thanking you for your extreme courtesy in this matter, I remain, yours very respectfully,

"C. S. REED,

"Warden Minnesota State Prison."
Blackton Selecting Cast
For “Getting Together”

J. STUART BLACKTON is rapidly completing plans for the filming of “Getting Together,” the recruiting play which he has been commissioned to screen under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission.

It is now negotiating with a well-known feminine star whose appearance in the role of Mrs. Palmer, the unhappy wife who finds her real self in war service “over there,” promises to be a surprise to the film world. The name of Blanche Bates, now playing that role on the stage, is mentioned on Broadway, as also is that of her co-star, Holbrook Blinn.

While Mr. Blackton is not yet ready to announce the cast, inasmuch as negotiations are pending with several players suggested for the leading supporting roles, he is losing no opportunity to draft the services of stars who will be specially suited to interpret the various characters and different nationalities revealed in the recruiting play’s melting pot.

Commodore Blackton expects to begin actual production work shortly. Since he is to produce “Getting Together” under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission and with the co-operation of the War Department his trench scenes will be staged in a training camp where actual effects can be produced. A representative of the Recruiting Mission informed Mr. Blackton last week that he expected to be able to place at his disposal any number of British, France, and Belgium volunteers for the “ Britannia,” which was first underlined to go “over the top” for the film scenes.

A story is to be much elaborated for the screen, and will combine all the elements of exciting scenes which furnishes its little, providing good propaganda for the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission and other interests, as well as unusual screen entertainment. Mr. Blackton will complete the production within the next two months.

Binney Comedies to Be Made in North.

Harold J. Binney, president and director general of Canadian Comedies, announces that the next four pictures to be made under the Josie Binney brand will be made in Canada. Josie Binney and a number of his people arrived in the city June 30 and expect to remain here until about the middle of October. He assures that the subjects to be filmed here are going to contain some entirely new features for comedy films. The comedies will have all been passed upon favorably, he says, and each one of them gives every advantage to Funny Patty Pilbert and Laura De Cardi to further demonstrate that they are premier comedy creators. The first of the four pictures to be made here will have Coney Island for a background and some exceedingly funny situations. This picture is in the making. Upon completion of the four pictures to be made in New York Mr. Binney and his company are expected to return to Jacksonville, where they make their headquarters in the Klutho Studios.

Alma Rubens on Triangle’s July List.

“Woman of Mystery” has been substituted as the second release of the Triangle program for the week of July 21, replacing “Fatty and the Pride of Persia,” according to Further, the Fox Film Corporation has announced that August 5 has been set as the general release date for “Cleopatra,” the Theda Bara super-production, which has done record business in the cities where it has been shown. “Cleopatra” will be a special release and will be sold as a separate production from all other Fox attractions.

The run of the picture at the Lyric theater, New York City, still stands as one of the records of that house. “Cleopatra” also made a record at the Victoria theater, Philadelphia, and at the Colonial in Chicago, extending the Bara being the order at both those houses.

Incidentally there are no Theda Bara pictures scheduled for July 6 and August 5. It is stated pictures which Miss Haris has been working on this summer are being saved for the fall campaign.

Mary Miles Minter Leads Mutual’s July 8 Program.

MARY MILES MINTER in “The Ghost of Rosy Taylor,” a screen adaptation of the story of the same name by Josephine Daskam Bacon, is Mutual’s feature for the week of July 8. The director, Henry King, has succeeded in translating to the screen the atmosphere of mystery and romance carried by the story. The role of Rhoda Eldridge is one that is said to appeal to the winsome little player, while the unusual plot affords the director opportunity to present some striking situations.

Rhoda, on the death of her father, with whom she has lived in the Latin Quarter of Paris, finds herself destitute. She gains passage to America, her father’s native land. Led by a mysterious sequence of events she plays the part of a mythical housekeeper for a woman of wealth and keeps her house in order during her employer’s absence. Discovered in the house by the son of her mistress, she is taken, for an impostor and put in a reformatory. The culmination of the mystery brings about a happy climax when she is restored to the family of her father.

Supporting Mary Minter are Alan Forrest, as lead; George Periolat, Helen Howard and Emma Kluge.

“Cleopatra” Released August 5.

In response to numerous inquiries from exhibitors the Fox Film Corporation has announced that August 5 has been set as the general release date for “Cleopatra,” the Theda Bara super-production, which has done record business in the cities where it has been shown. “Cleopatra” will be a special release and will be sold as a separate production from all other Fox attractions.

The run of the picture at the Lyric theater, New York City, still stands as one of the records of that house. “Cleopatra” also made a record at the Victoria theater, Philadelphia, and at the Colonial in Chicago, extending the Bara being the order at both those houses.

Incidentally there are no Theda Bara pictures scheduled for July 6 and August 5. It is stated pictures which Miss Haris has been working on this summer are being saved for the fall campaign.

Scene from “The Ghost of Rosy Taylor” (Mutual).

July 9. This is a story of the eternal triangle. Two rivals for Billie’s hand believe firmly in the old maxim, “All’s fair in love or war,” and carry it out to the bitter end.

The third release of the Outstanding Western series, “Mountaineering,” is scheduled for July 14. This scene shows the cameraman’s graphic picturization of a trip through the Canadian Mountains, accessible from Banff, Alberta, and shows Mount Assiniboine close up. “Old Whiskers,” the guardian of the range, stands on a crag 6,000 feet above the sea level.

Screen Telegram Nos. 38 and 39 are released July 19 and 14.

The disastrous wreck at Gary, Ind., when an empty troop train crashed into the Wallace-Hagenbeck Circus sleeper, killing sixty-eight and injuring a hundred and forty-two, is shown in the current release of the Screen Telegram.

“Her Screen Idol” Is Sennett’s Next.

Louise Fazenda, Ford Sterling, and Jack Cogan are featured in the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy set for release July 1. “Her Screen Idol” is the title, and the comedy is described as a delightful good-natured satir on the matinee idol of the screen, with a wild west setting. His little vanities and poses, his thirst for adulation, and his almost childish awe of his own importance are all brought out in a way to make everybody laugh. Indeed, it is said that the satire is so merry and so sly and withal so kind that even the matinee heroes themselves will not be able to control a snicker of appreciation. Roxanna McGowan, Gene Rogers, and Marvin Rea are the other principals in the fun fest.

“The Unbeliever” Making a Hit.

Not since the days of “Qiao Vadis” in its height has George Kleine met with the success that is greeting his production of “The Unbeliever.” Women like the picture. It gives them an idea of war without any gruesome detail. The elements of patriotism, romance, and religion are most ingeniously blended, and are appealing. The hit picture has made it possible for the large number of return dates demanded.
"Her Price" a Story of the Opera.

Revealing the temptations which are said to beset the feet of girls who would climb the ladder of fame, Virginia Pearson, in "Her Price," which is announced from the William Fox offices as the latest special feature release, portrays the role of an opera singer who barter her beauty for a career only to find that the price she paid is too much. The picture is described as being one of the strongest in which Miss Pearson has appeared in a long time and is filled with tense situations and little human pathos.

Playing opposite Miss Pearson in "Her Price" is Victor Rutherford, who has appeared in several big screen successes. Others in a noteworthy cast are Edward P. Rosen, Henri Leone, Charles H. Martin, Paul Stanton and Mrs. Allan Walker. "Her Price" was written by George Scarrow and directed by Edmund Lawrence.

Seventh "Snakeville is Released.

"A Hot Time in Snakeville," an uproarious comedy hit, is released this week by General Film Company. This is the seventh subject in the second series of ten Essanay re-issues which have proved even more popular than the first series of ten, General Film reports.

Charles Frohman Everett.

a prominent boy part. Later he played with Winthrop Ames in "Child of Earth." In pictures he took the leading masculine role in "Snowwhite."

He was with a motion picture company taking scenes in Texas for several months.

It was there he found his leg, Jasper, which plays with him in "Young America."

His biggest hit was in the Coban and Harris series, "Young America," in which he played the leading role for two seasons. The play, written by Fred Faller, has been turned into a picture at the Essanay studios under the direction of Arthur Berthelet.

Fall Production Drive

On at Vitagraph Studios

THE fall production drive is on at the Vitagraph studios, both east and west, and within a few days virtually every one of the Blue Ribbon feature companies will be engaged on productions for the Autumn programs. Advices from the office of Albert El Smith, president of Vitagraph, are to the effect that eleven companies are now actively at work on production for the regular Vitagraph programs. Seven of these being feature companies, two serial companies and two comedy series.

Harry Morey, with Betty Blythe as his leading woman, was the first of the Blue Ribbon feature companies to start on post-season production. According to direction of Paul Scardon, Alice Joyce completed "To the Highest Bidder," under direction of Tom Osborne, and soon will begin work on another five-reel production, the title of which is to be announced next week.

Corinne Griffith, it is announced, is in nearing completion of "Love Watches," the Blue Ribbon serial in which she will soon be presented and will start at once on "The Clutch of Clutches," from the book by Leighton Chase. Gladys Leslie, who is working under direction of Frederic Thomson in "Wild Prizes," who will be playing the part of her leading man, and an all-star cast, including Evelyn Jensen, Claude Gillingwater, Virginia Price, Charles Joint, and others, is scheduled to start work within a few days on "The Rebel."

But in the Vitagraph Hollywood studio, Earl Williams, with Grace Darmon as his leading woman, is reported to be making rapid progress with "The Man from Brodley's," a five-reel play made from the popular novel by George Barr McCutcheon under the same name. Nell Shipman and Alfred Whiteman, working under direction of David Smith, are reported to be readying "A Gentleman's Agreement," by Wallace Irwin, and the director now has in hand several new scripts for future production.

Fox Completes Seven Pictures During Week

SEVEN productions were completed during the week by William Fox companies. Four were begun and two others are nearing completion.

The Message of the Lilies," a super-production, has finished photographing at Hollywood, Cal., under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, Jewel Carmen, under the direction of Robert Thornby, has completed "The Fallen Angel," a picturization of Gouverneur Morris' story, "You Can't Get Away With It," and has begun on "Above The Law." Tom Mix, also at Hollywood, has finished "Fame and Fortune," which is based on Charles Alden Seiter's magazine story, "Slow Burgers," and has begun on a new production. At Hollywood, also, is William Furman, who is at work on "The Rainbow Trail," a sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage," the books of both of which Zane Grey wrote.

In the east Virginia Pearson, following the completion of "Her Price," has begun the filming of "The Lie" at the Blackstone studio in Brooklyn. Peggy Hyland has begun "Donnie Annie Laurie" at New Dorp, Staten Island, and George Walsh has finished "Yankee Doodle Dandy." Two other big productions have been reported by R. A. Walsh and Richard Stanton.
THE MO... MOVING PICTURE WORLD

July 13, 1918

SIGNIFICANT Indorsement of Goldwyn’s patriotic comedy-drama, “Joan of Plattsburg,” as a worth-while contribution to screen literature in which the great war is used as a background has come from the American Defense Society through the Women’s National Committee of that organization. It has been listed with the select group of patriotic films which are to be shown throughout the United States in the next few months under the auspices of the committee.

Porter Emerson Browne, the author, has characterized it as “propaganda with a sugar coating.” As such it teaches its lesson—that the bolwark of a nation’s strength is the faith and courage of its womanhood. “Joan of Plattsburg” will be shown throughout the country under the auspices of the various local chapters of the American Defense Society.

In this connection it is worth noting that since its release, less than two months ago, this film story of the adventures of a little American orphan, Joan of Arc, has been the feature of more patriotic entertainments than usually fall to the lot of a film drama. It has been shown at army posts, in hospitals, at Y. M. C. A. and Red Cross headquarters and will shortly be seen behind the battle lines in France.

Anna Held, the famous French actress, who went to the front to support the cause of her native country, has purchased a portable machine to enable her to make the film, which she has undertaken to produce, from her own veteran’s hospital. This is the Lightning Raider, and it will follow in sequence the Pathe-Astra serial “Hands Up” some time next fall.

In “The Lightning Raider,” Miss White assumes a part rather unusual to her former roles, but the scenario is reported to be full of remarkable opportunities both for stunts and for legitimate acting. The serial will be staged in the Astra studios in Jersey City as usual, although it is understood that some of the exteriors will require long journeys by Miss White and her supporting cast.

Defense Society to Show “Joan of Plattsburg”

VERSING Alice Brady’s latest Select picture, “The Whirlpool,” which was being released on the last day of June, and therefore virtually becomes a July production, Select Pictures Corporation will have available for exhibitors during the month of July three new attractions by three Select stars. These pictures are: “The Safety Curtain,” Norma Talmadge’s latest vehicle; “A Pair of Silk Stockings,” in which Lewis J. Selznick presents Constance Talmadge; Clara Kimball Young’s production of “The Savage Woman,” made by Miss Young in California with her own company.

“The Safety Curtain,” which will be seen in New York during the week of July 8 at all the Marcus Loew houses, is undoubtedly another hit to be chalked up to the credit of Norma Talmadge. The story is taken from the widely read novel of the same name by Ethel M. Dell. It is of a little English girl who, earning her livelihood as a phenomenally clever dancer in the English music halls, later becomes the bride of an English officer and takes part in stirring scenes which have a military flavor. Eugene O’Brien is leading man, Anders Randolph plays the strong man, and Gladys James adds another villain to his list of roles in the part of Sylvester. S. A. Franklin is directing “The Savage Woman.”

Select Pictures Will Release Three Subjects in July

PEARL White Ready for New Serial. Pearl White, Pathe’s famous serial star, is expected to return from her vacation just after the Fourth of July and will immediately begin work on her new serial. The working title is “The Lightning Raider,” and it will follow in release sequence the Pathe-Astra serial “Hands Up” some time next fall.

In “The Lightning Raider,” Miss White assumes a part rather unusual to her former roles, but the scenario is reported to be full of remarkable opportunities both for stunts and for legitimate acting. The serial will be staged in the Astra studios in Jersey City as usual, although it is understood that some of the exteriors will require long journeys by Miss White and her supporting cast.

Lloyd Seeks Big Themes For Farnum to Present

ALTHOUGH he is extremely busy directing the recent William Fox production which William Farnum is now producing at Hollywood, Frank Lloyd, Mr. Farnum’s director, is poring through the classics of literature to find a new play for the famous Fox star.

Mr. Lloyd believes that motion picture followers want such pictures as “Les Misérables,” which he directed. Usually a motion picture director speaks of his latest success and forgets the picture he made in the past, but Mr. Lloyd always mentions “A Tale of Two Cities” in the same breath with “Les Misérables,” both of which he considers his greatest productions.

The ordinary sex picture has little appeal for Mr. Lloyd. He declares he does not care to make pictures just for the sake of turning one out every so often. On the contrary, he wants to put on the screen plays that are educational, that have a big theme, that will last, and plays that people will enjoy seeing the fifth time as well as the first.

“‘The Rainbow Trail,” which he is now engaged in producing, is the sequel to the life of the Farnum just completed. Both pictures are taken from novels of the same name by Zane Grey.
THE strongly human stories in which William S. Hart appears always calls for a strong supporting cast. His latest support George Chesbro as lead is no exception, for its characters are flesh-and-blood people, and skilled actors are needed to portray them.

Chief among these characters is "Shark" Monroe, sea rover of the north, who is hated and feared up and down the coast of Alaska. Film fans have come to know and admire Hart's characterizations of the men of the west, and now they will have a chance to see him in a somewhat different role. The Shark is a vividly etched character in the story by C. Gardner Sullivan, and Hart, with his understanding of human nature and his acting skill, builds it up to an even greater extent.

As Hart portrays the softening and humanizing of a strong, cruel man, so George McDaniel plays the part of a weak lad addicted to drink, who finds himself in the north country and becomes a real man. The girl who is the cause of the change in both men, Marjorie Hilton, is played by Katherine MacDonald. Berthilde Sporet plays "Onion" McNab, an old Scotch first mate, and Joe Singleton is "Big" Baxter, characterized by the author as "a buzzard of the north."

In addition to playing the leading role, Hart also directs the picture. Some extraordinary camera work is done by Joe August in photographing a storm at sea, where the waves run high and break over the little sealing schooner commanded by Shark Monroe.

Kerrigan Releasing Through Hodkinson.

"J. Warren Kerrigan will not go to another company, as stated in some trade papers recently." This is the emphatic statement issued by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. It was further stated that Mr. Kerrigan is under contract and will continue to release his pictures through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Mr. Kerrigan's latest production, "The Dollar Bid," is now available for booking and he is hard at work on a "Burglar for a Night," a production in which Kerrigan depicts the adventures of the son of a rich New Yorker, who, entangled in the plot of two crooks, completely vanquishes his enemies. The cast is headed by Lois Wilson.

Emmy Wehlen to Star in Metro's "His Bonded Wife."

His BONDED WIFE," a five-act screen romance, has been chosen by Maxwell Karger, Metro's manager of productions, as the next starring vehicle for Emmy Wehlen. Miss Wehlen recently completed "The House of Gold," by Katharine Kavanaugh. Charles Aldrich will direct the production, assisted by Alfred Raboch. June Mathis has made the screen version, and work on the picture will be begun shortly. Mr. Brabin is now choosing prominent players to support the star in this clever and attractive feature.

Miss Wehlen will play the part of a fashionable girl upon whom society has galled. She decides to go away somewhere and just be herself. Accordingly, she sets out for a beach resort where persons not overburdened with wealth are accustomed to find amusement and relaxation. She finds both, and also a young man who means a great deal to her future. There are events of an unusual nature in this story which provides a genuinely unique "twist," and an opportunity for scenes of a nature seldom seen in a screen drama. Miss Wehlen also will have a chance to introduce some Paris modes that have not as yet been seen on this side of the Atlantic.

Miss Wehlen recently has done much patriotic work. She has been using her voice for the happiness and comfort of wounded soldiers and sailors, and she also sang at the Astor theater for the United States Tank Corps benefit.

Canada Likes "Zeppelin L-21."

General Film's two-reel war feature "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21" has established itself as one of the most popular war pictures of the day in Canada. According to reports received from the Canadian General Film exchanges. The film, which was featured for a week at the imperial theater in Montreal to tremendous crowds, has created a big sensation in that Canadian city and is one of the most widely booked war features now on the Canadian market. Canadian government officials who have viewed the film have been greatly pleased with it and it is expected that wide use of the film will be made throughout Canada because of its good business with which it portrays the Zeppelin raids over London.

Pathe Serial "Hands Up" To Be Released August 18.

PATHE announces that the first episode of the new serial, "Hands Up," will be released August 18. It will comprise fifteen episodes of two reels each, save the opening chapter, which is in three reels. This chapter arrived in New York a few days ago and Vice-president Paul Brunet expressed the warmest satisfaction with this episode, which was made by Astra in the California studios.

The serial's star, Ruth Roland, has in her Air Craft George Chesbro as leading man and a large company of screen favorites.

James W. Horne is the director. Gibson Willets is the author. The Inca tribe of Indians, long ago supposed to be extinct figures in "Hands Up." and the remarkable sets employed in the first episode are indicative of the elaborate plans that have been made for this serial. There is a mystery character called the Phantom Rider. This character assumes no grotesque makeup, but his appearance on the screen is so arranged that his identity remains a secret until the final episode.

Cheap Pictures May Be Good Says Standard's Manager

Recently interviewed regarding the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation and its policy, General Sales Manager William Steiner said: "This company is not a new one. It is five years old, and it has paid dividends on its business policy which we want to talk to you now. The sobering effects of war have brought the over-exploited motion picture industry down to earth.

"Motion pictures have continuously made millions, and pictures exhibited for time, and is thus not a new game. It is a branch of photography, which is eighty years old.

"Stars may come and stars may go, but the picture goes on forever. To make money it is not vital for exhibitors to run high-priced stars. They can make money on comparatively cheap pictures that are well acted and photographed, that are based on good stories, and that will please patrons because of these qualities."

"High priced stars are of recent introduction to the motion picture industry as of 1909. Before that a great deal of money was made by exhibitors out of just the same kind of work as that is being made by the American Standard is now offering—one and two-reel comedies and dramas and the occasional feature. With the almost certain likelihood that one may make up either a short length program or a feature program at will. Short story subjects, added to two reels, are coming back to favor.

"There has been overproduction of pictures, with the William Fox star, has begun work at Hollywood on a Western production, the temporary title for which is 'The Man Afraid.' The scenario was written by Lynn Reynolds, and the production is being filmed under Mr. Reynolds' direction.

"In the cast, besides Mr. Mix, are Kathleen Connors, Dick LaReno, Charles Le Moyne, Jack W. Dill, Val Paul and Maude Emory.

"The Man Afraid" aims to reveal the menace of German propaganda, a subject through dialogical labor agitators, in hammering war work of the United States. In the picture Tom Mix plays the part of a Secret Service man.

Lytell Working on "Boston Blackie"

Entering on its second week of production at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, the new Pickford starrer, "Boston Blackie's Little Pal," is making excellent progress. The star appears thoroughly pleased with the role of "Boston Blackie," the fascinating gentleman burglar made famous in the magazine stories by Jack Boyle.

Frank Keenan in "More Trouble' Heads Pathy July 14

On Pathy's program to be released the week starting Sunday, July 14, the big feature is "More Trouble," in which Frere's "Toto" policy young is that being in a Jack of "MOTION" fame through their shows. The feature is produced by the Anderson Brunton Company and is in five parts. With the new feature fitting itself into one may make either a short length program or a feature program at will. Short story subjects, added to two reels, are coming back to favor.

"There is a big thing that to-day's expenditure is Interest the public it is not essential to make it a long picture or an expensive picture.

"It is our business to please and entertain the public that pays for admission to theaters. The short length subjects that the American Standard is offering are chosen because they are inexpensive, good, and popular. The American Standard features are good and interesting. For instance, there is 'The Wolf Girl,' a two-reel drama of the wildwoods, with Beatrice Allen. This is only a two-reeler, but it is full of thrills, excitement, and human interest. 'The Blackmailers' comes in the same class. Do the Tom Brem comedies. These are all new, good, and inexpensive.

"There are many stories of the American Standard's policy of good pictures at low prices so that the exhibitor can make money and please the public."

Tom Mix Acts Secret Service Role

Tom Mix, the William Fox star, has begun work at Hollywood on a Western production, the temporary title for which is "The Man Afraid." The scenario was written by Lynn Reynolds, and the production is being filmed under Mr. Reynolds' direction.

In the cast, besides Mr. Mix, are Kathleen Connors, Dick LaReno, Charles Le Moyne, Jack W. Dill, Val Paul and Maude Emory.

"The Man Afraid" aims to reveal the menace of German propaganda, a subject through dialogical labor agitators, in hammering war work of the United States. In the picture Tom Mix plays the part of a Secret Service man.

Rhea Mitchell to Play Opposite Bert Lytell

RHEA MITCHELL, who plays opposite Bert Lytell, the Metro star in "Boston Blackie's Little Pal," was engaged in the Alcazar Stock Company in San Francisco four years ago, when Lytell was leading man of that organization. "It does seem like old times," remarked Miss Mitchell, when she had put on her make-up ready for her first day's work at Metro's West Coast studios in Holly- wood. "This is the first opportunity I have had to play opposite Mr. Lytell as a leading woman, so it is most interesting if motion pictures have given me a chance denied the spoken drama."

Since playing in stock both Lytell and Miss Mitchell have risen rapidly in their chosen profession. Lytell won a place as a featured player on Broadway, his last appearance prior to becoming a Metro star having been in the successful comedy, "Mary's Ankle." Miss Mitchell has been a star in a number of big motion picture productions.

Pickford's "Sandy" Released July 1

Jack Pickford, the young star of Paramount pictures who is now a member of Uncle Sam's navy, makes his last appearance until after the war, in "Sandy," the Paramount release for July 1. The story of "Sandy" is from the pen of Alice Hogan Rice. It is a tale of Kentucky, with its Blue Grass belles, thoroughbred horses and gentlemen of the old school of Southern chivalry. It is full of heart interest, which centers about a young Scotch lad, a street waif, who is dragged from his place of concealment aboard a liner and is befriended by a Kentucky girl whose kindly sympathy and solicitude awaken an abiding love for her in his heart. Louise Huff is, again seen in the leading feminine role, and the other principals of the cast are James Neil, Kayte Chapman, C. H. Gorder, Julia Faye, Louise Hutchinson and Raymond Hatton. George Melford directed the production.

Metro Will Issue Five All-Stars and a Special in July

Metro will issue five All-Star Series pictures and a special Screen Classics, Inc. production during the month of July. Director Fred Niblo has been engaged to support Fred Stone in his first Artcircuit picture, "Under the Top." Stone will be married to Miss Dana, who has been a regular July releases in the order named—"Opportunity," starring Viola Dana, Bert Lytell, in "No Man's Land," May Allison, in "A Successful Adventure," and an Edith Storey feature, either "The Demon" or "As the Sun Went Down," and "A Pair of Cupids," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

The July 1 release, "Opportunity," with Viola Dana in the stellar role of Mary Willard, is an adaptation by John H. Collins of Edgar Franklin's story in the All-Story Weekly, directed by Mr. Collins. Miss Dana appears as a "tomboy girl" who is determined to see a prize fight. She sees it, too, though she has to wear some of her brother's clothes in order to attend the contest. In so doing, she stumbles into a "peck of trouble." The star is supported by Hale Hamilton as the leading man, Sally Crute, Edward Abeles, Frank Currier, Elsie MacLeod, Joseph Burke and Frank Lyon.

July 8 has been chosen as the release date of "No Man's Land," with Bert Lytell as star. "No Man's Land" will be Mr. Lytell's second appearance in Metro's All-Star Series productions. It is brimful of excitement and adventure. It has been adapted by Mr. Lytell and A. S. Le Vino from the novel by Joseph Louis Vance, and has been directed by William S. Hartford. In that production was one leading woman in "No Man's Land," and prominent in his support are Eugene Pallett, Mollie McConnell and Edward Alexander.

"A Successful Adventure," starring May Allison, will be Metro's third release of the month. June Mathis was prominent in the making of "A Successful Adventure," and it has been directed by Harry L. Franklin, assisted by P. T. Volland. This five-act feature presents Miss Allison in the role of a daughter of the South who undertakes to heal a feud of long standing between her father and her uncle. Harry Hilliard is Miss Allison's leading man. The release of July 22 will be an Edith Storey feature, but "The Demon" or "As the Sun Went Down" has not as yet been decided upon.

The final July release will be "A Pair of Cupids," co-starring Francis X. Bushman and Miss Dana, with Miss Dana as the daughter of Luther A. Reed, and was produced under the working title of "Both Members." Charles J. Brablin has directed it.

George Melford to Direct Lila Lee for Paramount

GEORGE MELFORD, one of the most experienced and successful of the Famous Players-Lasky directors, has been assigned to direct Lila Lee, the new Famous Players-Lasky star, in her first Paramount picture, "The Cruise of the Make-Believe." From the story by Tom Gallon. One of his early successes was "The Chacot." So perfectly did he bring out the subtle artistry of the Japanese star that when Mr. Lasky was casting about for a permanent director for Haya- kawa the memory of the work of Mr. Melford in that production was one of the controlling factors in his selection. On all the recent Hayakawa pictures, scheduled for release in July, the individuality of Mr. Melford has been clearly stamped. It is not surprising, therefore, that he should be paid the compliment of being assigned the delicate task of guiding Miss Lee in her first work before the camera.

"Cuddles," as Miss Lee is known to vaudeville patrons, is now comfortably settled with her guardian, Mr. George Edwards, in a cozy bungalow in Hollywood. She has started her first picture.

Nobility of Womankind Is Theme of Miss Glaum's Play

HE policy of Paralta Plays, Inc., in connection with Louise Glaum's productions as one of their stars, has been to give her strong emotional roles which are not, however, like the parts is which she found fame as a vampire; for her new features were to give her sympathy, and permit her powers of emotional acting full sway. This has been carried out in the first and second plays which the star filmed under the Paralta banner, and she has just finished the filming of a third Paralta Play, "Wedlock," in which the foregoing idea has been carried out to even greater advantage. This production Miss Glaum has a role which will ensure her great emotional and sympathetic opportunities. It is a noble woman; a woman meant by the author, Demetria Lynne, to typify the nobility of womankind. Above all there is sympathy, and a strength beget of sympathy. It is her fortune—or perhaps— to fall in love with and be loved by a man of proud old family and wealth whose strength of character, whatever he may have really possessed not, is increased by the weakening influence of his false and pampered disposition. They are married, unknown to the man, who announce his engagement to another girl of social position.

New York Showing For Douglas Color Pictures

THE new Douglas Color picture, "Cupid Angling," was featured in the bill at the Imperial theater of San Francisco. The world premiere of the latest production of Leon Douglas, who also was prominent in the development of the Vitagraph, Thomas Godfrey, and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Ruth Roland is the featured star.

"Cupid Angling" consists of several thousand feet of film laden with all the natural colors of California's scenic mar- velous and with the heart of a old-fashioned love story, which in its settings serves as a vehicle to con- vert the powers of the Douglas color motion picture invention to reproduce in its exact and natural color anything which can occur within the camera. The scenic gloryes of Mount Ta- malpais, Lake Lagunitas, the Yosemite, the Yosemite, and the poetry strewn fields of Marin immortalize their color and their mood in the Douglas color film. "Cupid Angling" at the Imperial is the start of the circuit of booking that will be handled through the General Film exchanges for the Hod-kinson Corporation, Mr. Hodkinson will also shortly arrange a New York showing of a color picture in New York, which will probably be opened in the trade and the public, at an early date.

Wilfred Lytell Doubles for Screen.

Wilfred Lytell, as well as his brother, has been made a new contract player of the Metro banner. Wilfred Lytell is the younger brother of the Metro star. Young Wil- fred has been formally announced by the studio as having been assigned to make his debut, and mention several future engagements, as an exciting fact that while a member of the "Barrymore" at Metro's Sixty-first Street studio. Mr. Lytell is playing an important role with "Business Pleasure" at the Eltinge theater. In fact, the special arrangements were made for him by Ralp Ince, the director of Miss McCheney's company in "Our Mrs. McCheney," to enable him to fill both eng-agements.
"Pirate's Gold" Is Story of a Sea Roving Race

A REAL thrilling and blood warming tale of "Pirate's Gold," has been purchased by World Pictures from the famous author, Forest Halsey, for a picture called "Love." In the course of a hunting trip in one of the South Atlantic states last winter, Mr. Halsey came in contact with a peculiar race of people who live in the swamps. These people, as the author expresses it, "have a lurking fascination for the forbidden," and their English was also spoken with a foreign accent. He had as his guide one of these men, and they were forced by the camp fire to question him concerning this queer tribe and drew from him the facts from which the story was written.

The guide explained that his ancestors were sea rovers, beach combers, pirates and slave traders. Many years ago settled on this part of the coast. In the early part of the last century these outcasts fled further inland to escape the white man's "necktie party." The guide went on to say that during these years they have never mingled with the other inhabitants of the coast, but lived alone and secluded. They maintain their own separate isolation by intermarriage. Their existence is made possible by hunting and fishing. Women in the spring earn a little money by berry-picking. They have a language of their own, and their customs are those of other years.

They are a picturesque lot and so impressed Mr. Halsey that he wrote the story from the recital. The locale was the Altamaha delta. The scenario is a thriller and is modern in treatment. Oscar Apfel, who is the director, secured a New York real last week for the south to locate the scenes and engage natives themselves, who lent their aid to a picture that promises originality.

General Official Talks on Value of Two-Reelers

BROADWAY, the home of de luxe pictures, was treated to a distinct innovation in picture showmanship during the week of July 21 when S. L. Rothafel, of the Rivoli theater, departed from customary channels to present a series of short subjects, of which General Film O. Henry story, "Stories of the Golden Circle" was the feature. The enthusiasm and interest shown by the large crowds in attendance each day during a two-weeks' engagement has made a splendidly liked the experiment well enough to make it a highly paying innovation. A splendid reception given the two-reel O. Henry story at the Rivoli is sufficient evidence of the merit of the good work, the director is a program maker," said a General Film official in discussing the unique program. "Until Mr. Rothafel gave us a trial Broadway would have laughed at the idea of giving a two-reel subject the place of prominence on a first run program. Wisecracks have contended for many months that the day of tale, two-reel picture is returning and that before long two-reel photo-plays will gain again the prominent position they enjoyed before. Before the five and seven reel features came into vogue. If the success of the Rivoli program is any criterion, that day is not far distant." "Britain's Bulwarks" Ends in July.

The final chapter of the official series, "Britain's Bulwarks," will be released by Pathe late in July, and as is fitting, this chapter is by all odds the most important and thrilling of them all. It is the story of the Canadians at Vimy Ridge," and shows in detail what this valiant army from the Canadian provinces achieved to check the onward rush of the Germans in their desperate drive to seize Paris.

Sherry Service Makes Its Debut with Keeney Picture

WITH the presentation of its first picture, "A Romance of the Underworld," which was released Sunday (June 30) by the William L. Sherry company makes its debut before the public as a distributing agency. The picture is a product of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation and stars Catherine Calvert, "The Lady Beautiful of the Screen." Especial interest attaches to this photoplay by reason of the fact that Miss Calvert was featured in the dramas of the same name, written by the late Paul Armstrong. She was the wife of the playwright. The picture was directed by James Kirkwood.

Mr. Sherry's next release will be "The Street of Seven Stars," by Mary Roberts Rinehart, starring Duke Kenyon at the head of her own company. The story originally appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and afterward was published in book form. More than 250,000 copies already having been sold. The photoplay is described as a most artistic production. It tells a romantic and delightful story, full of interest and replete with thrills. Among the picturesque features is a skiling contest on the famous St. Moritz.

July 21 Marks Close of Pathe's "House of Hate"

P A T H E announces the release of the concluding episode, No. 20 of The House of Hate," on the regular program for the week of July 21. This episode is called "Follow Old Glory," and provides a remarkably satisfactory finale of this most successful of all Pathe serials. The romance in which the two characters played by Pearl White and Antonio Moreno have been concerned arrives at a happy conclusion. Stern justice takes the Hooded Terror and his confederates, and there is a battlefield scene staged in which Pearl White and Antonio Moreno have a wonderful opportunity to inject a strong patriotic flavor in this concluding episode, which they take the fullest advantage.

Pathe executives stated that "The House of Hate" has not only been the most satisfying serial ever released by that house from a technical standpoint, but it has been the greatest money-maker. During the last week Mr. Sherry has extended his distributing service to Pathe plants in Atlanta and Seattle. In the former city he has opened an exchange at 61 Walton Street, with A. S. Dickison as manager, and in the latter has established office at 2252 Third Avenue. L. A. Todd being in charge of operations. Mr. Sherry, as manager of its special feature department at Atlanta, and has acquired much popularity with exhibitors in that section.

Daniel J. Savage, general sales manager for the William L. Sherry Service, has just returned from a trip through the south and far west. He reports that the outlook is bright for special productions. "The exhibitors I saw were highly delighted to know that Mr. Sherry has gone back into business for himself," says Mr. Savage, "and look forward with keen interest to his future releases. They say they are willing to pay for good pictures and pay what they are worth. From what I have gleaned on my extended trip prospects are distinctly brightening for the film business in general."

Hayakawa's Last Paramount Is Story of San Francisco

S E S S I E HAYAKAWA'S last Paramount picture is "The City of Dim Faces," by Francis Marion. And from accounts it is going to be his best. Mrs. Marion, out of the fullness of an intimate knowledge of the Chinatown of San Francisco, fully conversant with the alleys, of peoples of whom it was written—has succeeded, it is said, in constructing a tale of photographic accuracy dealing with the strange customs and the strange happenings in that city of dim faces which has long been accounted one of the wonders of the western world. Underground there are devious ways and rabbit warrens, tortuous passages, and queer secluded shrines and houses. It is a corner of Cathay transplanted to California—and therein is told the story in which Hayakawa stars as a half-caste Chinese. In the cast are Doris Parn, Marisa Scolari, James Cagney, Winter Bely with others. George Melford directed, and it is asserted that the queer scenes and the people have been wonderfully presented.
"The Deciding Kiss" Begins Universal's July 22 List

E DITH ROBERTS, Universal's ingenue, makes her bid for stellar honors in the studio's new production entitled "The Deciding Kiss," which reads like the list of Universal releases for the week of July 22. It is a comedy of the school which has been eclipsed of late by war trials—a story full of sweet sentiment and heartache. The plot concerns the love affair in which an orphan and the woman who has adopted her are involved. It is directed by Winfred Greenwood, Hal Cady, and Edwin Cobb.

The thrilling two-reel drama, in which Helen Gibson, of railroad serial fame, returns to this type of story, is the short drama which Universal recently placed in the programme for the week. It is "The Passport Express," and the action affords Miss Gibson an opportunity to portray some of the extra-hazardous stunts which have made her famous. The story of "The Pay Roll Express" turns upon the thefts which have occurred on one of the road's freight cars.

The comedy element is well represented in "Repeating the Honeycomb," a Nester in which Eileen Sedgewick is featured; "The Vamp Cure," a We绍va-Moran-Staton comedy, and "A Clean Sweep," an L-KO offering.

"Smiling Bill" Comes East To Make Goldwyn Comedies

M ILLING BILL PARSONS, star of Capitol and Bill'scomedy, who has completed his contract with another producer and become the comedy specialist for the firm for his future pictures, arrived in New York June 28. Before returning to his own studios in Hollywood, he will produce two or three comedies in the east, possibly at the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee.

Parsons has taken advantage of the slack of the early season to complete two comedies for Goldwyn release at his California studio. "Dad's Knockout," the sixth one, is on this week's bill at the Strand theater, New York City.

Billie Rhodes appeared in Parsons' support of the first two comedies, "Billie" and "Bill's Predicament," since which she has been fulfilling the terms of her starring contract with another producer. Parsons and Miss Rhodes made frequent trips across the continent to appear in person at picture theaters where "Billie's Baby" and "Bill's Predicament" have been shown. Everywhere they met with a gratifying reception.

New York "Smiling Bill" is shortly to project his beaming presence upon the gaze of audiences in about thirty Loew theaters throughout the country, with Goldwyn taking the picture from their 110 days booking in their New York City and nearby houses.

Four of the Parsons comedies already have been released, but the Loew houses will star Billie Rhodes with "Bill's Predicament," and follow it with "Bill's Predicament," "Birds of a Feather" and "Matching Billie," thereafter keeping pace with the releases as they come along every two weeks.

"Coming of Faro Nell" Is Released by General

T HE Coming of Faro Nell," a breezy Wolfville Tale with a delightful heart interest touch, is released this week by General Film. It is the third of the series, and as in the preceding releases Patricia Palmer, Robert Burns and George Holt are the featured players. An outstanding feature of the film version of the Alfred Henry Lewis story is the droll and captivating nature of Faro Nell, which has been retained by direct quotation from the original story.

The production of Faro Nell to Wolfville presents Patricia Palmer in the most sympathetic role of the series. There is an air of picture-making about the film which has been retained in suspense until the last few flashes, when the mystery of the frequent stage robberies is solved and Cherokee's strange actions are accounted for. When he is revealed as the protector of the dead bandit's daughter Nell, Wolfville breathes a sigh of relief and joyfully welcomes her.

"One Dollar Bid" Story of Kentucky Life

W A RREN KERRIGAN, Parasita star, completes his term on the Metro banner on June 3, the anniversary of his first day of work on a Metro production. This production is the screen version of the novel "Foby" by Credo Harris. "Foby" is a novel of Kentucky, a faithful painting of the life of his native state by the Kentucky author. The descriptive parts of the book were made into a picture and the screen version by means of clever character touches, while a thrilling series of pilot incidents served to increase the interest continually toward the denouement and solution of the main theme of the play—the marriage surrounding the hero's life. Miss Lois Wilson played the part of heroine in support of Mr. Kerrigan and a fine cast has been assembled in the picture. Ernest Warren directed Mr. Kerrigan in this production.

Franklyn Farnum "Gets His Gate." Franklyn Farnum simply has to have an outlet for his ambitious talents. The former bluebird star who is now under the Metro banner as leading man with Anna Q. Nilsson in "George B," Baker's screen drama, "Judgment," under production in Hollywood, puts bundles of "pop" into his work from the beginning of the picture.

In one of the first scenes of the story, Farnum puts in an appearance to drive his automobile through a fence thrown across a road by a highwayman. Director Wilf S. Davis explained that "Franklyn took his place at the wheel of his machine. Now, don't risk serious injury," cautioned Davis. "We can stop the camera when you reach the gate, and then pick you up and smash your car if you smash it and you have gone through."

Farnum just grinned, threw in the right break, drove through the gate, while the cameraman ground away. The actor and auto went flying through the wooden barrier, splintering it, and Farnum wasn't even shaken.

Two More Lloyd Gloom Kickers. Two more Gloom serials, "Hitler's Gehr Out of Germany" Harold Lloyd will appear in two more screen farces before the end of the season, it is announced. "That's Ill," to be released next month and "Bride and Groom," released August 18. The screen version of the novel of the same name. It is said that the interest of the story will not depend on reliance for the audience that Director Golden is insist upon the dramatic situations, lavish sets, skilful motion pictures, and exhibits and the public is said to have struck significant frequent popular, and Leah Baird the man who is sending out the letters, has received replies from seventeen exchanges, seventy-two exhibitors and over two hundred motion picture fans. So far Miss Baird's choice of a title has received an overwhelming majority of the votes.

Selection of Title by Public Proves Popular

A N OFFICIAL of Western Photoplays, Inc., states that it is the intention of this company to make their forthcoming serials a beautiful and well-mounted classic, and adds that the best theaters will be eager to obtain them. In connection that some of the best stories and well known books have been issued in serial form.

HEATHEN Benefit" matches "Birds of a Feather" in local box office. The natural history issue issued by the Educational Films Corporation to its regular house in Portland, Ore., this week, "A Heathen Benefit" is said by all who have seen it to be one of the best inter- national comedy pictures ever presented. The story, a new one, describes how the Minister has promised to perform some tricks in magic helped by the kids. The next scene shows half the hands inside the Town Hall, where the Minister has brewed a very delicate "temperance" punch in which the kids, however, are drinking large quantities of bay rum. Mamma takes a hooker of the "temperance" drink and is so much fascinated thereby that the girl gives a whole punch bowl and leaves the room to begin on the coven of the game good earnest. In the meantime, the Captain starts his tricks, and the situation works up to a full climax.

In "Birds of Vanity" Professor Dittman new forth that in the animal world the males are thralls and captives in various passionless, while the females are dully clad. Some interesting footage of Asiatic phalacrocorax, or "cartoon" kingfisher, of the male peacock showing off his clothes, not only to his mate, but to all and sundry, is exhibited. The rare white peacock is also shown. Not only is the male bird that of the "nymph," but he gives the remarkable series of solo dances, by means of which he ingratiates himself with the other sex.

Getting Ready for Marion Davies' Second

WORK on Marion Davies' second Se- lect picture began on July 1. The 1918 screen adaptation of the novel "The Coming Up Smiling" shows that Douglas Fairbanks will go to extremes for hundred per cent working material. Miss Marion is al- ready on her way to Honolulu where she will start immediately on the scenario of the famous Fairbanks speaking-stage suc- cess. It was Fairbanks' idea that she spend two weeks in the land of laces. The producers of the "Comings Up Smiling" have taken the pictures to their credit, will be in charge of production, and seems to feel that "The Coming Up Smiling" will make a very pop- ular screen play.

Fox Buys Two Seltzer Stories

Two more famous stories have been added to the list which William Fox has compiled of the books he is picturizing or will picturize in the near future. Both books purchased by Mr. Fox, according to an an- nouncement from the Fox Film Corpora- tion's New York offices, are from the "The Coming of the Law," both by Charles Alden Seltzer. Mr. Seltzer also wrote the novel on which the William Fox production, "Fame and Fortune" has just been completed. As in "Fame and Fortune," Tom Mix, the picturesque cowboy actor, will be the star in "The Two-Gun Man" and "The Coming Marie Walcamp, Universal Star, and Three Tiger Kittens.

Exteriors of the latest Frank A. Keeney production, "The Girl with a Past," have been completed. The adaptation of the novel by Ben Hecht, written in New- wood, N. J. The Keeney forces resumed production earlier than expected, on account of the large demand for Mr. K. Keeney's first release, "Fame of the Underworld," the Paul Armstrong picture in which Catherine Calvert is starred. All of the interiors of "The Girl with a Past" are being taken in the Biograph Studios in the Bronx. Miss Calvert, who is starred in all the Keeney pictures, is supported by a strong cast. The produc- tion is being made under the direction of James Kirkwood.

Ebony Completes Two New Subjects.

It is announced, through the office of Luther J. Pollard, president and general manager of the Ebony Film Corporation of Chicago, that two new subjects, com- edies that come up to their new standard of novelty, are ready for the cutting room. The first laughmaker, titled "Luck in Old Clothes," is by E. K. Means. This rapid-fire comedy was directed by Ralph G. Phillips, and it features Billy Ledman, Mattie Edwards and Rudolph Tatsum. The second subject is titled "Monday Morning's Madness." This was prepared for the screen by Bob Horner, scenario editor, from a story by William H. Rice, Sam Robinson, Yvonne Junior and Samuel Jacks are featured.

Features and Topicals for Soldiers.

B. L. Steeler, director of physics, Wash- ington State College, Pullman, Washing- ton, visited the Universal exchange in Portland recently to arrange for features to use for the entertainment of the soldiers who will be sent to Pullman for special instruction in the near future. The course at Pullman began June 15, and about 1,500 soldiers were enrolled for special instruc- tion in "wiring, plumbing and the like." They paid special attention to war features in the Current Events, Animated Weekly, etc., and to special features, such as "The Man Without a Country," "The Kaiser" and similar productions.

Fox Purchases Two More of Zane Grey's Stories

In line with his policy to buy only the most famous of books of the best authors, William Fox has just purchased the motion picture rights to two more of Zane Grey's novels. These latest novels of this famous author, two of which had already been filmed by the William Fox organization, are "The Duanes" and "The Lone Star Ranger." Purchase of these two famous novels followed the tremendous success of "the Riders of the Purple Sage," the thrilling and epoch-making motion picture of L. B. Seltzer's book, which was released last week when William Fox saw the picture at a private screening in New York and ordered it with equal enthusiasm. "The Riders of the Purple Sage" was followed the famous books, which have sold into the millions of copies, and are now being made into a picture by the William Fox with Colonel William N. Selig of Chicago, resulted in the country of award of a series of dramatic topicals of the famous stories. It is now planned to make the third of the Grey novels "The Lone Star Ranger," the sequel to the "Riders" story. "The Rainbow Trail" is one of the best known of the fifty-one Grey's, it will be done under the William Fox bann- ner. William Fox will also be the star in these new productions.

Ebony Boys Tickfall Tales.

Reports received by General Film Com- pany indicate that exhibitors are keeping interested in the forthcoming production of "Good Luck in Old Clothes," an Ebony comedy. This will be another of the broad comedy lines to feature a company of prominent white and negro players in a story designed to capture the black Means story of the same name which ap- peared in one of the magazines. This is one of the best known of the fifty-one Tickfall Tales published to date, and its release in picture form will follow closely the publication of these stories in book- form.

The Ebony Film Corporation has an- nounced that they have purchased exclusive rights for the purchase of the motion picture rights of other well-known Tickfall Tales, which will be released during the summer months. The high grade comedy found in these stories is expected by Gen- eral Film Company to stimulate greatly increased demand for these film novelities.

"The Road to France" (World).

World Pictures will finish this week at its studio at Fort Lee "The Road to France," in which Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greetley are starred. It was writ- ten by Harry O. Hoyt and directed by Erich von Stroheim. The working title on this photoplay was "Making Good," but after seeing a greater portion of the pic- ture World Pictures has three producers of the stage and screen, who are for some time ago United Artists, have changed the title to the one by which it will be released. The story is a sequel to Mr. Stroheim's stage and screen version of the story of a no-good boy who makes good. It breathes the indomitable will of America that will bring victory to our banners.

Edith Storey Starts Work in East.

Director Herbert Blache, assisted by Ed- win O'Connell, has started work in the direction of a strong cast for Metro's new Ebeneezer's Story, a picture, yet unnamed, which has been photographed at the Biograph studio, where Metro has added engagement to the top of its programs. Hassen's picture, which will play to its usual location of outdoor woods, breezy, virile, wholesome, and replete with intense dramatic situations. Edith Storey has been chosen as lead.

Jennings Forms Co. to Film His Experiences
Will Produce Features Depicting His Own and Brother's Career as Outlaws, Again Become Respected Citizens.

THE Al Jennings Production Company has been formed for the purpose of producing multiple-reel features based on the life of outlaw and train robber which he actually lived a few years ago.

Mr. Jennings, president and general manager; B. F. Robbins, vice-president; Frank L. Jennings, treasurer and secretary, and F. B. Shields, assistant manager. W. S. Van Dyke is the director of productions. Mr. Shields has been prominent in Los Angeles picture circles for some years, and Mr. Van Dyke, after a long experience on the stage, entered motion pictures five years ago, having been playing in a number of Western productions. He then became a director, assisting D. W. Griffith with “Intolerance” and James Young in Lasky productions, as well as Essanay features including “On Thin Ice.” He directed Jack B. Lord and Mary McAllister features for Essanay.

Under the title, “Beating Back,” the story of Al Jennings, who appeared in a prominent magazine, and is already well known to large numbers of motion picture patrons. For several years he was the leader of a band of outlaws known as “The Long Riders,” operating in Indian Territory and the surrounding country. With him was his brother, Frank, who will also appear in the pictures. Both were respected citizens of Oklahoma, and are said to have joined the band of outlaws on being accused of being involved in a train robbery by the men whom they sought to punish because of the murder of their brother.

Al Jennings was finally captured and sentenced to life imprisonment, but was later released after five years. Later his citizenship was restored, and he was enabled to regain his former position as a successful lawyer in Oklahoma.

Mr. Jennings' interesting experiences will form the basis of the motion pictures to be produced by his company, and he is giving personal attention to the details to make the picture as convincing as possible by showing the outlaw, not as a hero, but as he really is, with the grimness of a lawman, without the aid of a rope around his neck or any other kind of punishment.

The first production will be “The Lady in the Dugout,” which is set in the desert where the outlaw brothers, finding a woman and child starving in a desert shack, robbed the bank which she said she had swindled out of her money and restored it to her. Corinne Grant, former Miss Balboa, has the leading female role.

These pictures will be made for the operators, and will probably be released on state rights basis. The executive offices are located at Tucson, Arizona, with studios at that point also in Los Angeles.

Betzuood Film Completes Picture for Chinese Star

CAMEERA work on the Betzuood Company's production with Lady Tez Mc, the Chinese star, has been completed, and Director H. Lowrey has commenced taking “Vandy Dark,” a western story by J. Allau Dunn, in which Louis Berenson is starred, supported by throughout.

Rap to Film “Sins of the Children”

Harry Rapf announces that he is preparing to produce another feature photoplay, “Sins of the Children,” adapted from a story by Cosmo Hamilton, which was published in the Red Hook Magazine. Alida Hanlon has been selected for the leading role, and the supporting cast is now being engaged. Production will begin at an early date.

Alphonse Ethier, Virginia Lee, Herbert Pattee, Andrew Benhison, Nauida Gay, and others. Mr. Benhison's most recent achievement was a successful season just closed as the star of “Johnny Get Your Gun.”

Strand Books Raver's

“A Claud in the Hun”

A CONTRACT has just been effected between Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand, and Harry Raver, who has recently imported from the studios of Halafilm, Turin, Italy, a three thousand-foot novelty which will be shown at the Strand during the week of June 30.

“Outwitting the Hun” is the title and the major portion of the picture is presented by the aid of hundreds of puppets resembling officers and soldiers of the opposing armies. In the story this puppet war is the result of a child's dreams, inspired by hearing a letter read from her father in the service at the front.

Every phase of modern warfare is illustrated, including aerial bombardments, destruction of towns and villages, thrilling rescues and escapes, the deadly German gas at work and various situations common to war as it is now conducted.

Pataone, the producer of “Cabrilla” and “The Vagabond,” spent over a year in completing “Outwitting the Hun,” because of the tremendous detail involved in the building and manipulation of the settings and characters employed.

JIMMY AUBREY, formerly connected with Vitagraph and Pathé companies, who is featured in the Tom Bret comedies, preceded his appearance in motion pictures by work on the the-
Ditmars' Picture Shares Reel with Katzenjammers

A PICNIC FOR TWO" and "Life in Inland Waters" are the International cartoon comedy and the Living Book of Nature character cartoons in the Educational's latest split-reel. The director arranged a picnic party for the impressive Kids, their mamma and the Captain. Mamma packs up the picnic basket and the Captain glots over a family excursion ticket which he has produced. Alas! the Kids substitute living dog, cat and pig for the sausages in the three big baskets of lunch. All hands make the train after considerable trouble, as the Kids had stopped the clock. After all are aboard and the train started, the zoo in the lunch basket shows signs of life. The dog bites the ticket collector, who yells with pain. In the skirmish, the dog, cat and pig go down the aisle and start a riot. The conductor pulls the emergency cord. The baskets and accessories, as well as passengers, are dumped on the floor and the Captain emerges with several of the animals draped over his form. But the finish is a sad one for the Kids, as the Captain and the ticket collector take the mischief-makers out to the locomotive and give them a thorough spanking, using jets of steam instead of birch rods.

"Life in Inland Waters" reveals many weeds of brook contained in the Educational's latest split-reel. Among the quaint subrepilalian species shown are the blind salamander, a native of underground rivers; the California newt, remarkable for its faculty of reproducing any lost limb; the common or marsh frog in its evolution from pollywog to adult, and aquatic insects metamorphosing from water bugs to flyers.

Ernest Shipman Takes Over Several Features

ERNST SHIPMAN reports considerable activity following his arrival in Los Angeles. Several important independent productions have been taken over by him for exploitation on the state rights basis. Mr. Shipman further reports that a new arrangement has been entered into between the W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company, Inc., and himself and that the fourth release of the Shorty Hamilton series have been completed.

Mr. Shipman claims these new Shorty Hamilton pictures are exceptionally good and will prove an agreeable surprise. Having left all his personal activities largely to the offices he is opening in Los Angeles, that he may be in closer touch with the independent producers and visiting his New York headquarters from time to time as the occasion requires.

Current Gaumont News Reels Feature War Pictures

Subjects Include Naval, Aviation and Army Views, Soldiers and Sailors Playing Baseball in London, and Stories from Western Front.

THE Gaumont news reels are featuring official war films. In Graphic No. 13 is shown the launching of the "Liberty," the largest member of our war marine, and the official test of a new and non-sinkable lifeboat. In this issue are also two subjects, "The Eyes of the Army," a great aviation picture showing daring flyers: 'The Cavalry of the Clouds,' with more than a dozen aeroplanes in thrilling formations doing death-defying stunts, and Rodman Law, daredevil parachute artist, landing safely after leaping from an aeroplane 6,000 feet above the ground, and "The Navy Is Ready," which not only pictures the busineslike and efficient men who will lead the Marines, but the types of submarine chasers, hydroplanes, balloons, and trawlers which scour the sea for enemy U-boats.

Gaumont News No. 14 shows Yankee soldiers and sailors introducing baseball to dear old London, where it is received with an enthusiasm impossible to conceive a few years ago. From France comes what are said to be the first pictures of American gunners manning the huge French "400's" on armoured railway trucks; the rapidity with which American engineers are constructing military railways and suspension bridges in France, and Marshal Joffre welcoming the Americans. A thrilling military spectacle presented by 7,000 Marines in honor of the Secretary of Navy, foreign military missions, members of Congress, and many distinguished citizens makes up another very interesting subject. A sham battle, the testing of gas masks, Indian style of fighting, and a "chow" banquet are entertainingly portrayed.

Racing, bathing, food conservation, class day at Harvard, outings for our fighters, and many other new topics, including the great railroad wreck at Gary, Ind., where 85 circus performers were killed, are also shown.

"Golden Hope" Selected For Anna Case's Debut

ANNA CASE, the beautiful girl who has been introduced to the motion picture world as concert singer and prima donna of the Metropolitan opera house, one of the few American girls who have reached this coveted goal of all singers, is to make her debut in the near future as a motion picture star under the banner of the International Film Service Co., Inc., and Julius Steger is to be her director. The name of her first picture is "The Golden Hope," and while it is said the story will hold a strong appeal on its own behalf, the strictest secrecy is maintained as to the theme.

Petrova Using Song with Patriotic Slogan on Tour

In a competition recently conducted by the Newspaper Enterprise Association which serves about 300 newspapers, a prize was offered for the best American war slogan. Out of the hundreds submitted, that originated by Marion L. Cooper, of San Diego, Cal., was judged the best. Her inspiring "Freedom for All Forever" is said to have so impressed Secretary of War Baker and Secretary Daniels of the Navy that they endorsed the phrase as representing succinctly the ideals of America in the great struggle and a bill has been introduced in Congress urging that patriotic Americans to use, to live up to, and to fight for this slogan. This phrase has been embodied in a patriotic song written by Lieut. B. C. Hillman of the Royal Canadian Forces, and in every city she visits on her coast to coast War Savings Stamp Campaign, Madame Petrova, in each theater where she appears, after her little talk, sings Hillman's song, and then has the chorus thrown on the screen and offers a five dollar war stamp to any one in the audience who will sing the chorus alone. After the prize winner has been called up on the stage to receive his or her stamp, and curiously enough, up to date, more women than men have won the war stamps. Madame Petrova invites the audience to join her in singing "Freedom for All Forever," thus getting the people in a patriotic frame of mind before she starts the bidding for stamps. To each of the first ten purchaser in each city she presents a copy of the song autographed by both the soldier and herself.

State Right Distributors Announces Readjustment
Now Offers Producers Three Channels for Handling Pictures—Under Collective, Syndicate or Individual Territory Purchase Plans.

THREE State Right Distributors, Inc., at their recent meeting in New York City, instituted a change in its policy by which the obligation to members to keep the new ‘Mickey’ by the Syndicate committee has been eliminated. A system has been inaugurated whereby a member, henceforth, has a voice in the purchase of a negative under the organization’s collective plan.

Following this idea plans have been adopted to cover instances where, at some future time, certain members, through financial restrictions, might be willing to join in a collective purchase. In such an event, any group of members, through the independent syndicate members, will have the right to purchase either the negative rights or the rights to a feature within the territory.

A representative of the organization points out the fact that, taking into consideration the changes adopted, producers will, under the three-fold plan of collective, syndicate and individual territorial purchase plans, be able to cover an entire market. Under the State Right Distributors, Inc., feature, features of merit, on any basis on which theater managers choose.

As heretofore, the home office of the organization in the Longacre Building, 40 Varick Street, New York headquarter for all members, handling all matters of interest to them, both locally and nationally. Producers can at all times gain access to any members of the State Right Distributors, Inc., wherever they may have a home office.

Following is a list of the organization’s members: S. L. Lesser, San Francisco; Elgin Lewis, holding the record for California; Blake, Nevada and Arizona; B. S. Cohen, Four-square Pictures, Inc., of Denver, for Wyoming, Utah and Colorado; Attorney, Indiana; Leon Dolman, Dolman-Van Film Corp., Indianapolis, for Illinois and Indiana; M. R. Rosenberg, De Lorme, home office, Little Canada, Michigan; C. A. Waters, Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana; L. D. Neter, Master-piece Film Attractions, Cleveland, for Ohio; H. F. Grelle, Supre-me Photoplay Productions, Pittsburgh, for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Myron S. B. E. and Super Film Attractions, Washington, for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia; Myron S. B. E. and Pioneer Film Corp., for New York City; J. J. Allen, Famous Players’ Film Service, for Canada; S. Hyman, Dayton Masterplay Co., Detroit, for Michigan.

Webster’s Illness Delays Work on Second Production

THE Harry McRae Webster Productions, Inc., announces that work on the new multiple feature to follow “Reclaimed” will be delayed in consequence of the continued illness of Mr. Webster.

Within the next two weeks, however, the cameras will begin to roll, and whether Director Webster has fully recovered by that time or not the feature will be completed at the earliest possible time.

Sales of the Week

Activities in the State Right Market During the Past Seven Days.

ARROW FILM CORPORATION announces the sale of rights on “Tempted Steel” to Rialto Pictures. Rialto, Chicago, for the state of Illinais.

California Motion Picture Enterprise have purchased from the Monopol Film Corporation, rights to “Brothers of Liberty” for Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, Inc., of office, Atlanta, and the photographic management of Ernest E. Gagnon to handle this territory.

Ernest Shipman announces the sale of rights on the Francis Ford production “Berlin Via America” to Unity Photoplay Company, Chicago, for Illinois; and Elk Films, Inc., for northern New Jersey.

Hearts of the World” Well Received in Indianapolis

HENRY L. DOLLMAN of the Dollman-Van Film Corporation, controlling rights to D. W. Griffith’s “Hearts of the World” for Indiana and Kentucky, is extremely gratified with the way in which this picture has been received by the public in his territory. At the opening performance at the Indiana Opera House, Indianapolis, on Sunday, June 16, the picture received an ovation from an enthusiastic audience composed of representative people in that city.

MAYBE the best of the week’s releases, however, was “Tempted Steel,” presented at the Rialto theater, the Petrova Waltz, composed by Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld.

Shepard Talks of "Mickey"

I S A good picture, a big picture, sufficient in itself as a money-making proposition," asks H. J. Shepard, of W. E. Productions Company. In other words, it has often been questioned whether any production can secure the maximum profit on the strength of merit alone. Often we have heard that such-and-such a production was killed because they didn’t put it over properly. The service didn’t ‘live up’ to the possi-Dibilities in the production.

"In the case of Mack Sennett’s production, ‘Mickey,’ the advertising campaign was laid out in detail. There has been a steady line of advertising, publicity and exploitation. ‘Mickey’ has been kept before the public eye for over two years, till it has become a familiar something toward which the public is looking forward. A wonderful lobby display has been evolved. In collaboration with Mr. Nelson Evans, president of Evans Studio, Los Angeles. Another feature is the exploitation of the song ‘Mickey.’ To date almost one million copies have been disposed of. Arrangements have also been made whereby over fifteen hundred retail dealers and large five and ten-cent store syndicates will devote a window display to the song when requested by exhibitors who are running the photoplay. A number of prominent vaude-villians are taking up this number, and full exploitation of ‘Mickey’ is being sent to the largest picture houses throughout the country. Even into the showmanship as a piano and graphophone record.

“Tempted Steel” Fourth Petrova Film for Rialto

THE initial New York presentation of Madame Petrova’s fourth special production, “Tempted Steel,” took place at the Rialto theater on Sunday, June 23.

This is the fourth production in which the Polish star has appeared which has had the distinction of being presented first at Mr. Rothapfel’s well-known temple of photoplay.

The picture which inaugurated the personal production organization of Madame Petrova, “Captain of Destiny,” appeared at the Rialto theater during December. Following this, Mr. Rothapfel gave the world “The Right to Live,” then “The Life Mask.”

Following the week’s run of “Tempted Steel,” at the Broadway photoplay house, the picture will be released via the exchanges of the First National Photoplay Company. It is the first melodramatic vehi-ci

which Madame Petrova has appeared, contains several will be mark the inaugural work of Ralph Ince as director of Petrova productions.

Film Trade Brevities from New England

Aaron A. Corn Opens Exchange for the William L. Sherry Service—Two New Theaters—Notes of Interest to Film Men.

By Robert N. Howe, 80 Summer street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—A new exchange has been opened at No. 16 Piedmont street in Boston which will distribute the William L. Sherry service through the New England territory. The exchange is under the management of Aaron A. Corn, a well-known film manager in New England. Meyer Grenyer is the assistant manager.

The new office is one of the many changes and is doing a lively business according to the statement of Manager Corn. The company now has three pictures that they are distributing throughout New England, the leading one being, "A Romance of the Underworld," featuring Katherine Calvert, which is receiving very heavy bookings the first week of release.

New Theater Opens at Nashua.

NASHUA, New Hampshire.—The Park theater in Nashua will open July first, taking the Mutual service. The theater will have a seating capacity of twelve hundred and will play only moving pictures. The Park will be managed by E. S. McQuesten, a local motion picture man.

New House Building in Fall River.

FALL RIVER, Mass.—A new theater is being erected in this city that is rapidly making a reputation and is expected to open the first of July.

The theater is called the Empire and is controlled by A. A. Spitz of Providence, R. I. The theater will be one of the largest in the city and will be devoted to moving pictures exclusively.

Trade Jottings from New England.

The new Pathe serial, "Hands Up," will be released for distribution in New England on August 18. Manager Stanley Hand of the Boston Pathe states that he receives many letters from exhibitors pertaining to the serial, and from the interest shown he predicts that it will be the biggest ever handled by the Pathe in New England.

Assistant manager of the Boston Pathe exchange, S. Rubenstein, has just returned from a trip through Massachusetts and New Hampshire where he had been handling the Pathe picture "The Yellow Ticket." He reports excellent business in that territory.

A joint meeting of the branch managers and salesmen of all the Famous Players-Lasky organization, including the Boston office, the New Haven office, and the Portland, Maine, office was held to discuss business for the coming year.

Manager Harry Segal of the First National Exhibitors circuit and the Globe Feature Film Corporation, of Boston, has gone on a tour of inspection of the different theaters throughout New England taking the First National and Globe feature film service. On his trip he will talk with the managers of the theaters and discuss plans for improving the service. He is accompanied by his assistant Edward L. McEvoy.

Who is a Who?—Many men in the motion picture business in this city have engaged in other occupations in accordance with the non-useful occupation law that is soon to go into effect.

Manager Phillip DuFault of the Globe theater has given over his business to his wife, who now manages the theater booking all the pictures and tending to the executive end of running the theater.

Mr. DuFault has accepted a position in the Winchester rifle factory and likes his present employment. G. A. Berry, manager of the Bijou theater in Holyoke, is about to take a similar position, while many other film men in this city are doing likewise.

Malden, Mass.—The Auditorium in this city that has lately been running a stock company and musical comedy is going to show moving pictures for the summer season. The theater is controlled by William Bradstreet, a well-known theater man around Boston. The first week's bill is "My Four Years in Germany" which will be shown twice daily for one week.

Philadelphia Trade Letter

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Versatility Proves Its Value.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—Henry A. Sullivan, who is manager of the Belmont theater, says one of the Philadelphia houses under the control of the Felt Brothers, has had a long and interesting career, in his present success having been earned by sheer hard work. Mr. Sullivan belongs to the old school of this city. He started as a water boy in the Walnut street theater in 1895 and since has been engaged in every branch of the show business. He has been usher, billposter, treasurer, assistant manager, pianist, janitor, doorman, advertising man, electrician and lessee. He was also an actor, carpenter, property man, scene shifter, operator, stage director, producer, booking agent and owner and producer of vaudeville acts.

In many cases his remarkable versatility has been the means of avoiding embarrassment through the action of ob\- stinate employees. If he has any trouble with the help he is always equal to the occasion and has a record of surmounting any difficulties in short order. Being resourceful, his bills for repairs amount to next to nothing. If it is necessary he will take a brush in his hand to do his own painting as he has done on several occasions and repair wires and string up electric lights if it takes all night. Before the Belmont theater was placed under his management it was considered some "citron fruit" but after it had gone through the "Sullivan refining" in less than a year's time it became one of West Philadelphia's best paying enterprises.

During a six weeks' absence the Bel\- mont took a sudden drop while under the management of a novice and only after several weeks of hard work did Mr. Sul\- livan bring the house back to its former high standard. The Felt Brothers' con\- fidence in him is such that they will back him to the limit whenever the occasion arises. In conjunction with the showing of big productions he has pulled several clever and original stunts which resulted in many instances in blocking the traffic in front of his theater.

Pershing's Film Inspires Workers.

Through the interest of William J. Boyd, district sales manager, whose de\- sire was to create and instill further pa\- triotism into the minds of the workers with a view of greatly aiding the output of machine oils for the Government. more than 500 employees of E. F. Houghton & Company, of Phila., were taken to view "Pershings' Crusaders." The United States Government's war film now showing at the Forrest theater. Charles E. Carpen\- ter, who manages the theater, delivered a most impressive and able ad\- dress which stirred the audience to a high pitch.

Vacation Time on Film Row.

William E. Smith, president of the Famous Players exchange, distributors of the Paramount and Artcraft will give two weeks' vacation to all of his em\- ployees with pay. Vacations now being in order it is very gratifying to note that this essential blessing has been visited upon the holiday workers in film row.

Frank W. Ruhler, general manager of the Stanley Company, announces that all employees will be given two weeks' vaca\- tion with pay and has already started several managers upon their pleasure tours. Notwithstanding the shortage of help the time was cheerfully allowed in order to allow his faithful workers this recreation which eventually will create a healthful growth in the business.
Buffalo Exhibitors Face Difficulties

The Small Theater Feels the Strain of Competition, While the Larger House Is Spending Large Sums on Programs.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 157 N. Elmwood street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Exhibitors Feel War Conditions.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Upward of 1,500 drafted men, nearly all patrons of moving pictures, left Buffalo for the various military camps Tuesday evening, June 25. It is believed that the number of young men who have already departed from this city to fight for Uncle Sam is close to $2,000. The exhibitors feel the loss of this heavy patronage, but like true patriots, they are making no complaints. The exhibitors are hoping that with these obvious handicaps the government will not interfere on their behalf in heavy burdens in the way of additional taxes. They say that they can slide the tax over to the public and make their patrons “pay the fiddler” by increased admissions. They incidentally explain, however, that there is a limit even to what the public will pay, no matter how strong their hobby for moving pictures may be. In the meantime, those here are spending more and more money for high-class picture shows and are doing a capacity business. Some of the little exhibitors with limited means say they are not faring so well because it is difficult to meet this competition.

H. L. Taylor Will Assist at Triangle.

H. L. Taylor has been appointed assistant to T. C. Montgomery, Buffalo manager of the Triangle. Mr. Taylor was formerly connected with Where Distribut- ing Sales Co. and the Film Supply Co., New York, etc. Mr. Montgomery has been connected with a similar firm in Springfield and Hamburg. The Triangle is releasing the Keystone relieves of the Arbroken, Newcomb, St. Louis and several others.

Buffalo Trade Notes.

The Grande theater building in Main street, North Tonawanda, N. Y., was recently damaged by fire to the extent of $5,000. The building was owned by Peter Diedrich and the Fred Diedrich estate. The loss is covered by insurance.

The Plaza theater, Corning, N. Y., was recently damaged by fire to the extent of $3,000. It is impossible to put it to the new Velie block, in which the total loss was $3,000.

Men selected to go to camp from draft division, No. 15, Buffalo, were recently invited to attend the Jubilee moving picture show. There were special pictures for the men, and two speakers, one who spoke in English and the other in French.

The Buffalo branch of the Mutual reports a heavy volume of business signed up by exhibition theaters in this territory and the Outhouse Scrapbook Pictures, which the Mutual is about to release.

Rochester Trade Notes

By L. B. Skelfington, 46 Main street, East, Rochester, N. Y.

A. N. Wolf Is a True American.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—A. N. Wolf, of the Rialto theater, formerly the Colonial, or the Rochester Exhibitors’ League, has issued a statement to the public through the medium of the newspapers, in which he expresses the sympathy of his Americanism. It seems that last week, on Saturday night, Mr. Wolf, was accused of possessing the War Savings Stamps in front of his theater. In the statement just issued he says that both he and the patrons of the Rialto, on Main street, East, in the heart of downtown Rochester, had been annoyed by a certain automobile self-starter, who had taken up a position at the curb directly in front of the entrance to the theater. Mr. Wolf says that he told the individual to continue their work, but in no way interfere with girls who were selling War Savings Stamps. He further calls attention to the fact that the Rialto has assisted every worthy purpose in connection with war work.

Work Begins on the Grand.

The Grand theater, which was purchased recently by Goldberg from Goodman, of Beaver Falls, as reported in the World, will be entirely remodeled and redecorated. Work has commenced on this new, and the theater will be ready for the fall patronage. The traffic department will occupy the work is under way.

A. M. Burt Buys Another House.

Mannington, W. Va., a thriving town in the oil fields, now has one owner for all its theaters. Burt has acquired ownership of the Dixie and Idle Hour, and with his own, the Burt theater, that makes him sole theater man of the town.

Gallo Takes Strand Theater.

The new Strand theater at Indiana, Pa., the home of the state normal school, has been occupied by Gallo, a comparatively new comer in the theater business. The retiring owners are the Carosi Brothers, who will sell their theater from Mr. Blitz some time ago.

Mike Marks Buys Star Theater Stock.

Mike Marks, who for thirteen years had the Star theater at New Britain, but recently sold it to the West Penn Photoplay.

Brevis from Rochester.

At the Piccadilly last week "The Unbe- liever" went over the top in a manner that establishes a new record for Rochester. "The Unbeliever" had originally been booked for the New Theater, but, with Mrs. Vernon Castle in "Stranded in Arcady" to follow for the last three days, the theater failed to pick up the play. "The Unbeliever" was drawing the people in such large and undiminishing crowds that it would be impossible to outrival it by the four days, so the engagment was extended for the entire week. The Piccadilly seems to be on the right track this week, and it has proven in the past that but seldom will a picture hold up for the entire week.

This year there will apparently be no outdoor moving picture shows in Rochester, as the entire street has been made into one or more airdomes, but this year there are none. The condition probably arises from the war. At Ontario Beach Park on Lake Ontario, however, this is proving one of the most popular attractions. All the moving picture shows are deep in theLibeaving Stamp campaign which is in full swing here this week.

Pittsburgh Trade Letter

By L. J. McCrory, 455 Union Arcade, Pitts- burgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH.—The operators in the Pittsburgh District are in a quandary as to where they stand regarding the work of the General Crowder. Just what their status is seems to be the paramount question of the hour with the men. The Union had a meeting on Sunday, June 23, at which it was decided to send two delegations to get as much definite information on the subject. This committee of two, consisting of Messrs. Freeman and these Gompers of the A. F. of L, as also Chas. Shay, of the Operators’ Union, there.

Quality Under New Management.

The Western Theatres Co. has secured a lease on a picture house next to the Hotel Henry on Fifth avenue, downtown. This house, which was formerly run under the name of the Quality will be entirely remodeled and redecorated. Work has commenced on this new, and the theater will be ready for the fall patronage, but thorough renovation will occupy the work is under way.

Woman Booker Makes Good Record.

TORONTO—The distinction of having the oldest woman booklet in point of business service is claimed by Miss Helen Doudry. The lady in question is long on experience and short on years. Having safely disposed of several houses covering various localities, Mrs. Doudry is within the reach of her correspondent will proceed with the formal introduction. The record-holder is Miss Doudry who is also the booker of the Toronto branch of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Canadian Pathé distributor.

During the period she has been in charge of the booking department, she has yet to make her first mistake in arranging booking schedules, according to Manager Culleton.

Miss Doudry is brought to the notice of this young woman because of possible similar claims on the part of exchanges in other cities. She found that the booklet is a desirable item and will show features exclusively.

Walter D. Kaufmann, formerly operator at the Bijou theater, is now with Company F, 23rd Engineers, at Woodbridge, Vn. He also has charge of the projection of pictures shown for the soldiers.

IN CANADA.

H. N. Jernberg Honored.

H. N. Jernberg, manager of the Province theater, one of the largest in Win- nipeg, was presented with a silver tray by the Dominion Government for National Registration Day, Saturday, June 22, when every resident of Canada was called upon to register. Mr. Jernberg was appointed in order to facilitate the registration of all men and theater employees in Winnipeg.

Canadian Theater Notes.

John T. Flidde of New York has been filling a month's engagement as a soloist at the Strand theater, Toronto, with considerable success. Mr. Flidde made his first appearance with the start of the Strand's "summer season" when the theater was re-opened. The flowers and the exterior redecorated. The presence of a soloist is an added attraction at the Strand, and the encouragement of Mr. Flidde is an indication that Toronto theater managers are aiming to use every effort to maintain interest in the theaters. Up to June 24 not one Toronto picture theater had closed for the summer season.

The Rialto theater, Montreal, which was closed early in May, was reopened on Saturday night, the management. The opening feature was "The Whims of Society," with Ethel Clayton. A new and highly attractive stage setting was featured at 5c. for children and 10c. for adults.

The Coliseum theater, 2215 Queen street east, opened a big programme for the children on Saturday, June 29. At a special matinée the feature attraction was "Riding Hood." Sandwiches and ice cream cones for every child patron.

The Reo theater, Queen and McCaul streets, Toronto, has changed hands, having recently been sold by the owner, Mr. A. Tobin.

Announcement is made that the Pa- tton theater, London, Ontario, will be closed for six weeks during which time extensive alterations will be made in the theater. The new front is promised and interior changes are also promised.

Interesting Brevities.

The census had another haul, taking the motion pictures from exhibitors from Mc- Keesport, Braddock, Upper Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, and various exchanges in the Pennsylvania area asakw by Alderman Kirby. The F. I. L. M. Club was in charge of the defense and put up the necessary money for all cases appealed. Mr. Pleasant, W. Va., saw the opening of the Strand theater on June 22, with Miss Doudry as booker. The theater is entirely modern and will show features exclusively.

Manager Wilsoa makes it known that the Strand theater has been continuing its "moving picture season" with success. This legitimate house was closed for most of a month, and will remain so for two months, during which time a wide variety of "special attractions" have been screened. Following "Hearts of the World" and "Ramona," a week's showing was that of "Civilization." This was during the week of June 24.

F. H. Hill's Personal Publicity.

H. F. Hill, manager of the Bijou theater, Calgary, Alberta, is sending out circu- lar letters to all women patrons of the theater. The letters, which have been printed and are also published in the Calgary Herald. The communication consists of a simple explanation of the current instruction and the dates of showing, to gether with a statement or two about the films of the theater.

After describing Fox's "A Branded Soul" in a recent letter, Manager Hill wrote the following: "If any one of you cares to know more about the films I have no more to indicate the tenseness, the thrill in this photo-play! Come and see it yourself and judge the""Pictures and Expressions."" I believe you will count your time well spent. I am trying to run my theater in the best manner and entertain our patrons with the best entertainment obtainable. I hope I am achieving that end. Yours truly." This form of personal publicity is quite popular with the patrons of the theater of the manager has aroused considerable favorable comment locally.

Censor Backs and Fills in Winnipeg.

Some time ago manager Wilson of the Loewcom theater, Winnipeg, Manitoba, ar- ranged to present "The Auction Block," one of the special releases controlled in Canada. It has been decided that at the last moment the Manitoba Board of Censo- r calibration feature and condemned it. Manager Wilson was forced to substi- tute another picture after doing con- siderable advertising for "The Auction Block."

Eventually, the Manitoba reconsidered their decision, and will reverse their decision, passing the picture without a cut. Man- ager Wilson also booked the picture for the North West Theater at Red Wing, Minn. The Walker theater put on "The Girl With a Million" when "Over The Top" was presented at 15c. to 25c. price. Miss Joudry, book house manager of the Walker theater, also planned to take a three weeks' vacation in the Canadian West, during the regular season of the theater on June 29.

Miss Joudry Takes Over Theater.

Miss Margaret Joudry of Rosthern, Saskatchewon, has taken over the manage- ment of the Rosthern the We Place in succession to her father who died recently. The house was closed im- mediately after the death of her parents, but the daughter determined to continue its operation. She went to Winnipeg where she became an apprentice in the projection machine room of the Arlington theater. By close attention to details and continual labor day and night, she gained her operator's license within six weeks. The new manager of the Manitoba Government Bureau Labor. Miss Joudry is the only support of the Rosthern, a soldier brother who is serving in France with the Cana- dian Expeditionary Force. She re-opened the Northern theater on Friday night, June 21.

Manager O. W. Powell Weds.

Manager O. W. Powell of the Regina theater, Regina, Saskatchewan, has taken unto himself a wife, the bride being Miss Hill, a former employee of the staff of the Empire theater at Saskatoon. The Regina theater is connected with the Grosvenor-picture.
Birmingham a Leading Picture Show City

South's Great Manufacturing Center Lacks Sunday Amusements, But Has Exhibitors Who Are Awake During the Week.

By J. L. Ray, care of Nashville Banner, Nashville, Tenn.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—Located in the Alabama steel district where thousands are employed in the manufacture of government materials, as well as being closely connected with iron and steel plants in the vicinity, Birmingham, Ala., is one of the South's most progressive cities. For years pictures, although provided with fandoms of the day, have been proving an invaluable asset in furnishing entertainment to the many groups of whites and colored persons in the nearby cantonments as well as to the civilian populace.

When denied the privilege of operating shows on Sunday, through a recent election in which the Pastors' Union threw their support to the endeavor, the South's largest Sunday evening opening question, Birmingham is making rapid strides in the moving picture business. Provided with an abundance of picture houses for whites and an equally large proportion for the colored, the city offers shows in all sections, as well as having a number of combination moving picture and vaudeville houses on one block.

The Lyric runs several series of pictures each day with the vaudeville performance. Birmingham is a city to be seen, separate sections being provided. Prices range from 15 cents to 56 cents, exclusive of the 10 cent tax.

Loew's Bijou, in charge of Manager L. H. King, runs pictures in connection with the regular Loew's Bijou, with colored and colored pictures in a combination gallery. The Bijou is one of Birmingham's best moving picture houses. It is a feature house operated by Mudd & Colley, on Nineteenth street. Prices run 10 and 20 cents. A balcony and main auditorium floor accommodate over 1,000 people.

M. A. Abernathy likewise conducts the Odeon No. 1 and Odeon No. 2 as well as the Colonial. The Odeon No. 2 charges 10 cents; the Colonial, 15 cents, as well as a 1 cent war tax. The Colonial is located on Twentieth street, between First and Second avenues. The Colonial is a 650-seat house on Second avenue, and has a large balcony. Prices run 10 cents for children and 15 cents for adults.

The Majestic runs vaudeville and pictures, and caters to white and colored. Colored people are seated in the upper galleries. Prices run 15, 15 and 25 cents.

A number of houses exclusively for colored people draw their full share of patronage. The New Queen, on Eighteenth street, has its own pictures and vaudeville. The Pastime, Fourth and Seventeenth, shows pictures alone for 10 cents admission. The Pastime is a 600-seat house. Eighteenth street charges 10 and 15 cents, and the Savoy, another Eighteenth street house, also operates on the 10 and 15 cents票价.

In addition to the uptown houses mentioned there are a large number of suburban houses which are operating to good crowds daily.

Rob's Knoxville Box Office.

One of the boldest theater robberies held in Tennessee in some time was perpetrated in Knoxville a few days ago when a lone bandit held up Webster English, an em-employee of the Bijou theater, at the point of a pistol and compelled him to hand over the theater's money box containing $360. The affair took place about ten o'clock at night in plain view of many people who were passing in and out of the house at the time. At this writing the robber had not been apprehended, but the police have a clue which they claim will lead to his capture eventually.

When the audience learned of the trouble in the box office there was some excitement, but employees managed to keep down a demonstration, and the show proceeded as usual.

"The Unbeliever," produced in conjunction with the United States Marine Corps, showed at the Kneckerbocker during the week of June 24 to good crowds. Officers of the local marine recruiting station were at the theater to help the picture "go over big," and throngs attended daily. Prices were fixed at 20 cents for all performances, including war tax.

In addition to the regular program of vaudeville and a news reel, Manager Harry Sudekum of the Princess theater, Nashville, has arranged to show a continuous series of official war pictures. Twelve episodes are included in the lot, a new subject running with each semi-weekly change of the bill. The pictures shown thus far have proven a splendid drawing card, and have been seen by several thousand spectators.

Moxon Goes to New York.

Following the Nashville Orpheum's close at the end of the summer season, Manager and Mrs. J. W. Moxon left Nashville for New York, where they will spend a summer vacation.

While in the big town Mr. Moxon will look over some booking plans for the fall season.

Cleveland Trade Letter.

Kuhn Under Technical Charges.

Gilger, who for over a year has been assistant director of the Cleveland Film Exchange, has been called to the national army. Milton left for Camp Sherman during the week of June 23.

Kuhn is one of the best-known men in Cleveland and his friends not only tendered him a big supper at the Martine hotel before he left but bought him a handsome camp kit. The supper was a unique affair being served by innings instead of courses.

The feature of the "game" was a wonderful catch of a very essential portion of the supper by Milt's boss—Sam Brody-ky, general manager of the Plain Dealer Screen Magazine.

Louisville Theaters Expect Many Patrons

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, O.—Although there have been some splendid productions shown at the Grand Opera House during its several seasons of moving pictures, it is fairly safe to say that none of these has surpassed in drawing power and local interest the Camp Sherman film running a two-weeks engagement there, entitled "The House of Bondage." It has been produced by all of the local patriotic organizations backed the show for its merit as evidence of the fine training the drafted men received, and its educational value led to special performances for school children, the total attendance for week-end engagement being fair to run into record-breaking figures.

C. S. Sullivan Now in Ohio.

C. S. Sullivan, a former Michigan exhibitor, known as "the old-timer," is now working with his feature, "The House of Bondage." Sullivan is an interloper in the entertainment field among the exhibitors. He makes friends everywhere. He not only controls Ohio, but Iowa, Wisconsin, and Illinois. Sullivan has a better-than-average military record and prides himself on never being absent from a film meeting. His presence in Cincinnati will not go unnoticed by the local exhibitors.

Sunday Show Exhibitors Fined.

H. C. Mickey and Buck Brothers, exhibitors of Postoria, Ohio, were recently arrested for keeping open on Sunday. Each was fined $10 and costs and the theaters ordered to stay closed. The theaters in Tiffin, Ohio, also have been closed.

Louisville Theaters Expect Many Patrons

CINCINNATI, O.—The war saving stamp campaign in addition to receiving aid of the most substantial nature through the theaters, as the case has already been stated, forms of dramatic work in Cincinnati. A unit consisting of women made a special drive through the theaters, speaking appeal for the forerunners and making appeals to the audiences for pledge cards. The Forest theater, Avondale, received a large amount of aid in an unusual stunt in connection. It announced that during "Thrift Week," between July 11 and 17, any stamp would be accepted in payment of admissions, and that these stamps would be held by the theaters and invested in the stock of the days, instead of being turned in for cash, thus making the entire gross receipts for the week an investment in the stamps. This had the natural effect of stimulating sales among patrons in the theater, who used some of their stamps for the purpose of buying tickets.

Enforcing Theater Sanitation.

The intention of Cincinnati health authorities to enforce the regulations and prevent the spread of communicable diseases was indicated to moving-picture exhibitors by a recent announcement that physicians and policemen would be detailed to visit the theaters for the purpose of making inspections, for the protection of the public health are fully observed. While practice, we find are being observed, and by observing in every such requirement, there are not enough men to come under the displeasure of the health department for various infractions, and as these few tend to bring critical remarks on exhibitors in general welcome the prospect of rigid enforcement of health rules.

Fire Damages Milford Theater.

Milford, O.—Damage to the amount of $450 in damage, has resulted, and the building was caused to the Batavia opera house when a film ignited and started a fire. The Kaiser theater, operated by trying out a projecting machine when the blast started, and the fire spread to the theater before it could be extinguished.

Will Build Theater in Whitesville.

Whitesville, W. Va.—The Whitesville Amusement Co., recently incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000, will construct and operate a moving-picture theater here, D. N. Mohler, R. R. Wood and others all of Charleston, W. Va., are interested.

Lady Tien, Mel, the noted Chinese actress, who is touring in the new production now being finished at the Bets flood Film Company's studios, has created an additional interest in the War Savings Stamps drive which is soon to take place here by offering to send her photo to every member of the local army and work for that stamp along with their request. All stamps received will be donated to the Red Cross.

Camp to Have Theater for 5,000.

Plans are now under way at the great motor storage depot, Camp Holabird, Columbia, Ky., for the construction of a huge auditorium or theater which will have a seating capacity of 5,000 and cost about $20,000. The plans now under way the proposed auditorium will be built in such a way and equipped so that most of the companies can be created as well as other shows.

Mr. Bell made some new bookings and declared the Galveston and East Texas theaters were waiting the time with patience when the Texas Amusement Managers' Association meets there early in July.
Trade Brevities from the Pacific Coast
Eugene H. Roth Takes Over the Strand Theater at Sacramento—Film Men Back Big Recreational Benefit for Navy and Marines.

San Francisco, Cal.—Eugene H. Roth, managing director of the Grand theater, which conducts the California and Portola theaters, two of the leading down-town moving picture showplaces in the city, has taken over the Strand theater, formerly known as the Diepenbrock, at J and Twelfth streets, Sacramento, and is making plans to interest the men interested in the San Francisco theaters, but the Sacramento house will be operated as a friendly enterprise. Work on the theater started in the near future on extensive improvements that will equip the theater for picture projection and which will transform the house into a cozy family theater. While the policy has not been announced, it is stated that the charge of a nature will be offered the Sacramento public. Plans for the alterations are being made, and it is probably be held in September. This theater has a seating capacity of 1,020 and is equipped with a forty thousand dollar deal made through the offices of A. J. Rich & Co. of this city, who also sold the Humboldt theater at Alhambra for a short time ago. The name of the Sacramento house will probably be changed to The California.

Film Men Promote Benefit.
Leading moving picture men of this city are preparing intensive interest in plans for the great vaudeville show and dance to be tendered at the Exposition and Ballroom Building here on the fair for the benefit of the band instrument fund of the United States Marine Corps. All the expenses of the requirements will be distributed between the Marine Corps recreation fund and the music and drama organization has always taken a prominent part in local work of a charitable nature and the same is true of the fair, which has interested many local theaters. The film men on the committee which is in charge of the affair, consist of M. J. Cohen, of the Roth System; the opening will be of Metro, Newton Levy, of Mutual; William J. Citron, of Fox; Sol L. Lester, head of the All Star Pictures, and Mr. Roth. The deal was made through the offices of A. J. Rich & Co. of this city, who also sold the Humboldt theater at Alhambra for a short time ago. The name of the Sacramento house will probably be changed to The California.

Pershing Film at Columbia.
The only moving picture to be presented at the Columbia theater during the coming year will be “Pershing’s Crusaders,” which has had a limited engagement on the West Coast, accompanied by Bert Levy and family. Harry Carney, who has been on the road with the National band for some time, is now filling an insdie position and attends to the wants of visiting exhibitors. A plan now to be carried out here, the French production, ‘They Shall Not Pass,” attracting considerable attention. This review, which formerly appeared in the news weeklies, but is now issued separately, is being booked by the Film Division of the State Council of Defense. This review is handled by Pathe throughout the United States, the exception being Colorado, Fred McClellan has arrived at this office to begin work in connection with the presentation of the pictures. The All Star Features Distributors, Inc., is now offering Vod-A-Vil Movins, recently concluded a long road trip through the northern part of the state.

Visitors to San Francisco.
Recent trade visitors have included W. B. Martin, of the Elk’s theater, San Luis Obispo, J. Woods, of the Auditorium, Grass Valley, A. C. H. Chamberlain, of the Madera Opera House, and E. A. Watkins, of the Angel’s theater, Angel’s Camp.

C. F. Goovan, of the Majestic theater, Concord.

Re-books “The Unbeliever.”
San Jose, Cal.—The recent four days en- gagement at the Paramount to the Liberty theater broke all former records for attendance and James R. Flanley has booked this theater for an indefinite period starting the first week in July. In addition to this he has secured the services of the United States Marine Band. San Jose, at a heavy expense and will offer a musical program such as San Jose has never before enjoyed. The Chamber of Commerce of this city has for years attempted to bring this band to San Jose, but it has remained unhedged. The Liberty has been secured for its services. The Marine Band will also be on hand and a special Sunday morning concert has been arranged.

T. & D. Circuit News.
Harry Ovitt, formerly in charge of the local Pathé office, but more recently connected with the Berkeley T. & D. theater during the absence of Sam Y. Edwards, who has gone to the mountains to regain his health.
Five shows are now on the road in this territory, with “Mr. Moto of the German Army,” while six are out with the first Chaplin release. A minimum admission price of 50 cents has been set on the latter.

Tyrone Power Has to Take Rest.
POWELL HAY—As a result of a nervous breakdown, Tyrone Power, leading man with the Washington Motion Picture Company, has taken a vacation of several months and the leading character, in the first photo play pro- duction of the company, will not be displaced. Among whose best productions are "The Barrier," "The Flower Of No Man's Land," and "The Girl I Left Behind Me."
"Mr. Power has had a severe working season, and in his house, the Robert Ward, "and is on the verge of a nervous breakdown unless he takes care of his health immediately."

Larry Trumble general director of productions of the company said, "We will not be on the stage opening day unless the picture as Mr. Power's indisposition prevented our taking many scenes with him and his character will be replaced in parts where only other members were needed."

"I suppose I am disappointed that the picture could not be completed with Mr. Power yet I feel we are lucky in that Mr. Dobbs, whom I consider one of the five best actors among picture men, is available."

Spokane Film Brevities.

Manager Walter C. Smith of the Hippodrome has closed the former livery house at Spokane, has arranged a benefit matinee to be given June 13, for the mess fund of the Automotive School where more than 100 enlisted and drafted men are studying automobile mechanics to help win the war.

Clara Kimball Young, who was to have spent June 15 in Spokane, has postponed her appearance here, until later this month, to appear in person at the Liberty theater according to Sam W. Cohn manager.

The second edition of "American's Crusaders" has been added another pictorial scoop in obtaining the first official United states government war picture "Fighting Through," as shown in "American's Crusaders." These will be shown the first week in August by J. W. Allender, who manages the pictures at the Auditorium.

Seattle Exchange Personals.

L. Amacher, booker at the office of L. J. Schuler Company, is leaving to take the place of Edna Craig, booker at the office in Rapid City.

HarryArthur, Jr., manager of the Portland De Luxe office, is spending several days at the Seattle headquarters this week.

George J. Ekre, who has charge of the Pacific territory for General, paid a visit to Seattle headquarters this week.

H. D. Bobbs, Northwest Select manager, is covering the big town in Montana just now. He reports business conditions good in that territory.

W. Drummond Seattle K-E-S-E manager, is in Spokane this week.

R. H. Allan, general manager, left for Spokane this week.

W. H. Smythe, formerly manager of the Strand theater, Seattle, is now traveling for Pathe out of the Seattle office.

Business Bettins.

F. C. Fletchet, who represented the Greater Theatre, Jester comedy and "Seattle at the conference of the First National Exhibitors Circuit in New York, says that he is more than pleased with the way the business has been going on First National pictures in the Northwest territory during the past week.

Harry Lustig, "Metro special representative, returned to Seattle by train this week from the various offices of his territory, announcing the results of the bookings of Metro's newest Screen Classics "Productions in the three leading Coast cities of the Northwest, and the success of "Lights of Pate" for 9 days, starting July 13 at the Caltemmer, Seattle; the Dolly Sisters in "The Big Broadcast," at the Caltem-mer for 9 days, starting August 10; Ar-old Daly in "My Own United States," at the Orpheum, Seattle, for 7 days starting July 7.

For a state rights concern with a limited territory, the "Pate" has been the star attraction of its own pictures appearing at downtown theaters in Seattle this week. The "Pate" is at the Broad- way, "Women" is at the Strand, "Parentage" at the Little, a W. S. Hart reissue at the Sunset, and "Seven Women" and two Bruce scenes at the Colonial, and "Hate" at the High Class.

Seattle's Strand Shakes Its Familiar Jinx

Jensen and Von Herberg Policies Make a Success of Theater That Has Been Considered "Too Far Downtown."

SEATTLE, Wash.—The case of the Strand theater, Seattle, disproves any theory that a theater dealing in the smaller pictures and full-length dramas is getting a habit of failure. This house, which in the six or seven years since its establishment has seen a number of exhibitors come and go, has this year never been a success, now that it is under the management of Jensean and Von Herberg. What can be its secret? Has there really been in any reason why it should not have been a great success? The Strand theater is the house and it has been built and is still in the heart of the shopping district. For the last three years, however, the custom of motion picture men of the territory to speak of it as too far downtown has been dispelled. There is no other big store farther up town, as there is in all cities, but the tendency has not yet become a fact, and the Strand is nearer the leading department store of the city than any other theater, while it is within a block of the other big stores. In fact it is right on Pike and Pine streets as the plans that are now under consideration will be ready. It was taken over early this spring by Jensen and Von Herberg. Immediately the biggest dramatic booking yet have been put on this house, and a fine big orchestra led by Frank Adelman, formerly leader of the Coliseum orchestra, was employed to furnish the music. The fact of the change in management was widely advertised both in billboards and in the half-page ads that announced the Strand's presentation of pictures starching such favored players as Clara Kimball Young, Mary Pickford and Elsie Ferguson. At first people raised their brows in surprise, as to why they were to the Strand, when they were always accustomed to see at the Liberty or the Coliseum. However, they saw the stars, so they went, while the prestige that the Liberty and the Coliseum already had was sufficient to bring them back there also.

The Strand is now admitted to be a Jensen and Von Herberg success and is saying a good deal. It is drawing a particularly good business this week, in spite of the competition in this week's program with Elsie Ferguson in "The Doll's House."

W. A. Mead Is Universal Manager.

W. A. Mead is to be the new manager of the Seattle Universal exchange, instead of the new manager. A statement was announced in last week's World. At the last moment Mr. Endert decided to remain in Los Angeles. He is to be the general booker of sales manager of the Seattle Artcraft-Paramount office. Mr. Mead gives up the assignment of manager of the Northwest territory for Fox to accept this place. He has been with the local Fox office over a year. He states that he has been in the film business only two years and a half, he can present a record enviable in the industry. He has been on so short a time, that of never having been fired. He has only served with two companies during that time. Triangle was his first love, but he soon found another, a person of a very charming lady, and after a long period in business doing the trail for future Triangle road men—he having been the first one and for some time manager of that territory for that company—he resigned in order to become a Universal booking lady and enjoy a long honeymoon with her in California. When he returned he immediately went back to the Universal office and work so well that he was soon promoted to the post of assistant manager of the territory with special jurisdiction over the regular Fox releases, A. W. Eden, the manager, having charge of the Fox

Standard Pictures. As manager of the Seattle Universal office Mr. Mead will handle the direct control northwestern Washington.

Gets "Hearts of the World."

"Hearts of the World" will be handled in the Northwest territory in a manner that will be a trueness though it will not be put on by Griffith himself. The De Luxe Feature Film Company, De Lue, Seattle, purchased the Northwest rights and will handle it as a road show with an orchestra of thirty pieces to accompany it and we will be out in town stage in order to gain the effects. Mike Rosenberg, president of De Lue announces that he has already closed for the existing of the production in Seattle and in Tacoma at the bigger theaters whatever prices will range from 25 cents to $1.50.

Personal and Business Notes.

Mel Wilson and Ben Collins of the Butte Artcraft-Paramount exchange spent several days on their way out of their trip to San Francisco, where they went to attend the Artcraft-Paramount convention of managers and salaried men.

Jack Lannon, president of Greater Features, announces that he has obtained for release in the Northwest territory a special production on the subject of the Last-

Roberts murder case, showing the tragic progress with close-ups of Grace Lucs, as well as the whole dramatic story. W. H. Stewart, manager of Northwest features, reports that Keystone and Chaplin reissues are going so strong that they are having to increase the back of the showings. A new copy of the Christie Comedies had to be ordered by the Greater Features in order to supply the demanding exhibitors wanting them in this territory.

Mike Rosenberg, president of Deluxe Features Company, has bought "The Grain of Dust" for distribution in the Northwest.

Mrs. Philip L. Joe Lucas of Centralia, are spending some time in California, where Mr. Lucas expects to learn a few things about movies.

Ben. F. Albertson Enters the Service.

Ben. F. Albertson, K-E-S-E booker, has been accepted for the officers' training camp at the University of Washington camps, was in this position this week to begin his training.

R. E. Charles Joins Navy.

R. E. Charles, booker at the Select office, is leaving this week to join the navy.

Visiting Exhibitors.

Among the exhibitors visiting film row this week, were:

F. O. Meeker, Rose theater, Port Townsend.

Captain Lathrop, owner of a string of theaters in Alaska.

Charles Thall, manager of the Victory theater, Camp Lewis, the National army cantonment.

Pender, Liberty, Tacoma.

H. T. Moore, Colonial, Tacoma.

W. W. Kreige, Pacific, Seattle.

Walter D. Rose, Cle Elum.

C. P. Sates, Paramount, Omakag.

Washington Exchange Managers to Meet for Discussion of Transportation—What Local Picture Theaters Are Doing.

By C. L. Linz, 622 Riggins

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Quite an important meeting of Washington exchange managers is scheduled to be held in the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce at six o'clock this evening. The principal discussion to come before the members of the newly formed organization at that time will be the broad transportation and the opening up of new avenues for the movement of films from exchange to screen.

With changes in schedules, increased rates, and innumerable delays, the exchange manager has put it in his head that the theaters get their shows on time, and they are going to try and formulate some plan or plan for expediting transportation of films.

Admits Foreign Service Veterans.

Washington, D. C.—Of course it is the most natural thing in the world for everyone, especially in the National Capital, to have the desire to honor the men who are fighting abroad. The Screen branch of the War Department has been making arrangements to see that the veterans get a show on time, and they have put it in their heads that the theater get their shows on time, and they are going to try and formulate some plan or plan for expediting transportation of films.

Newark Trade Letter

By Jacob J. Kalter, 22 Brannford Place, Newark, N. J.

American Standard Opens Office.

NEWARK, N. J.—The American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, of New York, has opened an office at 188 Market street, and the American Standard have purchased several pictures which they are now exploiting. In addition, they have sold all rights of the pictures, to the local producers, and intend to produce many more. The headquarters of the company are in the Lawatt building, New York City.

As manager of the local office, the American Standard have appointed Mr. Peck, whose photograph is herewith reproduced. Mr. Peck has had a somewhat varied and extensive experience in the business, starting as assistant director for Victor Comedies under Jerry Hufnfer, Mr. Peck later became assistant manager of Fox from Storin for the Eastern territory for Equitable pictures. Mr. Peck then entered the producing game, making three children’s pictures for the Golden Film, after which he became studio manager of the Mary Pickford studio at the Branch here. A short period later Mr. Peck was casting director for Mutual Empire All-Star. Mr. Peck will now assume the general management of the Motion Picture Co. and the American Standard territory for the American Standard. He is now busy producing a five-reeler called "One Million Dollar Picture," also on some Kid pictures, which will be released on the American market.

Mr. Peck is extremely fortunate in the selection of Sid Hall, as assistant manager of the local exchange. Mr. Hall has been connected with a number of the larger film companies in various capacities, and has had experience with him to Newark. Mr. Hall has previously been associated with Mr. Peck, and the combination is apparently excellent.

"Typhoon Fans" at City.

Managing Director Leon O. Mumford of the City theater, seventh and Orange streets, Newark, construction of a new theater is now under way for the installation of the typhoon fans in that theater. When the system shall have been installed, Mr. Mumford claims $6,000,000 cubic feet of fresh air will pass through his showcase every hour.

"PersHING’S Crusaders" at Newark.

The United States official War film "Pershing’s Crusaders" is booked for the Newark theater, 136 Market street, for the next week. In the film, "Old Wives for New," was a picture which had been once advertised to be shown, but was stopped by the censors.

New Film Supply Concern.

Leopold Singer, of 29 Third avenue, Newark, will do business as the Film Supply Company, and has opened offices at 204 Market street. Mr. Singer will handle a full line of motion picture supplies and accessories.

Fire at Scenario Theater.

A reel of film caught fire Saturday night at the ecological theater, 2nd and Hudson. The Scenario theater, 551 Orange street, Newark, and before the blaze was extinguished, the film burned with such rage that there was no panic or excitement. Those who desired to go out, did so on an orderly manner. The theater was closed for the remainder of the week, but S. Ansbach is the manager of the Scenario.

Carl Fox and Newark Stock.

Earle Fox, the talented miller, and actor, was the leading man of the short-lived stock organization at the Broad street theater, Broad and Fulton streets. Although the company closed and the productions good, lack of patronage caused the winding of the company after three weeks. Mr. Fox has returned to the local theater goes through his work in the Griffith, Lasky, Triangle, Metro and Fathe productions.
Activities in Detroit Film Circles Last Week

The Regent, Under New Management, Does Heavy Business—Foursquare Exchange to Release One Feature Each Month—"Hearts of the World" Opens to Big Patronage at the Washington.

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

Regent Theater's Films a Success.

DETROIT, Mich.—The Regent theater, in its new management, has had a highly successful season for the summer months of the Dawn Masterplay Co., has proven a big success with movie goers in the city. The policy has been a twice-a-week change with big pictures, full casts, theatrical and popular music. Even Charles Mix, the lessee who rented it for the summer to the Detroit Foursquare exchange, did a big business done under the new management. The Regent will return to a policy of vaudeville and pictures next September.

Looks Bright for Foursquare.

Joseph Horwitz, resident manager and part owner in the Detroit Foursquare picture business, is just back from New York, where he had a conference with George Backer, president of his company. He is very much enthused over the future as Mr. Backer has assured him of his company's support. Mr. Horwitz has now produced in his own studio. Mr. Horwitz, with the way, has just purchased a half interest in the Foursquare branch in Cleveland and will now spend a few days of each week in his Detroit office. There he is already appointed Eddie Fontaine as manager. Mr. Fontaine was formerly manager of the Crystal theater, and the managing for a number of years was connected with Pathe in Detroit, six months of which was spent in Atlanta.

"Hearts of the World" Makes Record.

"Hearts of the World" opened its Detroit engagement at the Washington theater, Sunday, June 23, to the record business of the week. Tickets are being sold, with prices from 25 cents to $1.50. Manager Will M. Elliott has given it special attention with music and stage effects and theater decorations, and the entire presentation is one which brings the theater to the public as a place to pay their money at the box office. "Hearts of the World" will remain at the Washington several days, and he can predict how many weeks that will be. Speaking conservatively, however, it should stay there at least six to eight weeks.

Changes in Local Universal.

H. M. Berman, and Joe Snitzer, of the Universal exchange, again in the news of the week due to a change over the local branch office. When they left a big shift in the personnel of the office staff was made. W. D. Ward, manager, will hereafter devote his entire time to the selling end and Joseph Friedman, formerly one of the salesmen, will have full charge of the office details, which will be a big relief to Mr. Ward, and will permit him to get around the state more than he has been doing for lack of time. Ray Branch, who formerly handled the office work, will be in the sales force. Ray is very popular with the exhibitors, so that the change is for the better. In the end, it will mean greater efficiency and is bound to result in increased business.

E. H. Rathbun Gets Commission.

Earl H. Rathbun, son-in-law of Col. W. S. Rathbun, well known in the circuit of theaters, and formerly with the State Film Co. of Detroit, has been promoted, and now handles the salesmen corps at one of the eastern cantonments.

Alvin Smith Managing the Gratiot.

Alvin Smith, former manager of the Grotiat theater, is now manager of the Gratiot theater, which was recently leased to Art W. Blankmeyer. He is making a number of changes in the house policy and adding new stunts that are a novelty in the Gratiot's line of operations.

Parex Open a Detroit Office.

The Parex Film Corporation, handling William L. Sherry Service, has opened a Detroit office in the Mutual Film building, in charge of E. H. Wells.

Detroit Trade Brevities.

From bookings being secured by Dave Rape, manager of the Mutual Film exchange, it is back to its old-time record. Dave has surely put on a lot of new business since taking charge less than two months ago.

The Standard Film Service, Detroit, has secured the Michigan rights to series of 16 real-shooty Albany Humble rights. Joseph Horwitz, of the Foursquare exchange, Detroit, announces having secured for Michigan Plymouth, Mo. to "The Mad Lover" and "Today." L. J. Gardiner, who makes the Velvet Goldmine films, has signed a long-term contract with the United Theater Equipment Co., whereby that concern has exclusive first run rights to the Gardiner screen in all territory covered by its branches. The Gardiner screen is made in Detroit, and Mr. Gardiner is the manager of the theater. An exceptional lot of fine orders have been received lately from the Detroit Filmpati and McElroy, who operate ten theaters in Michigan, have booked "Over the Shoulder" throughout.

The latest report of the Detroit Police Department's, which are 73% devoted to motion pictures. The Majestic theater, which is playing "Missings" for two weeks, will close at the termination of the engagement, July 6, remaining closed for three or four weeks while considerable repairs are made inside.

Baltimore News Letter.

By J. M. Shelnup, 1902 Mt. Royal Ter., Baltimore, Md.

Uncertain About "Birth" Film.

A S far as the Maryland Censor Board is concerned, the educational film, "Birth," has been released in Maryland, but it must be shown to women only.

The women who witnessed the picture cannot see the end of the film, as the closing scenes were entirely too harrowing and morbid and should be struck out, while the educational value is thought should be retained to be that it was all right as it stood.

Soldiers at Auditorium Theater.

In conjunction with "PersHING's Crusaders," manager F. C. Schanberg, of the Auditorium theater, had 26 soldiers from Fort Howard attend several of the performances at the theater, of which 11 were from Maryland. The auditorium theater, the members of the Royal Ar- canum held their forty-first anniversary and the auditorium and its various theaters is the"big" over the city and moving pictures, former Gover- nor Oglethorpe made a stirring speech and $7,000 in War Savings Stamps was pledged. At the New theater on the same night an installation of the "Dawn Garden" was opened. Sales of stamps was started by the re- tail merchants' bureau of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, and was an entertainment at the New. There was an attractive entertainment and $5,000 was pledged in War Savings Stamps.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD 245

North Carolina Trade Letter

By D. M. Bain, Wilmington, N. C.

Building Theater at Gastonia.

WILMINGTON, N. C.—J. A. Ethridge has been appointed manager of the former motion picture field in Piedmont, N. C., are building at Gastonia, N. C., one of the most promising towns in the state which will, when completed, seat more than eight hundred. Both men are graduated, having under- gone a rather serious operation. He is said to be on his feet again early in July.

R. A. Davis Heads Atlanta Mutual.

R. A. Davis, a former manager at Dur- ham, N. C., is receiving congratulations upon his promotion to the managerial chair at the Atlanta Mutual exchange. Mr. Davis traveled this territory for Mu- tual for the past two years, and is one of the best fitted for the position. He succeeds Charles E. Keesenich, who was appointed to the acceptance of the Atlanta Metro Exchange effective June 10.

J. F. Bryan Gets Manager's Chair.

J. Frank Bryan, a former member of the National Exhibitors' Association, has taken over the management of the New Orleans Vitagraph office, one of the most im- portant of that company's exchanges.

Film Men Join the Service.

The Charlotte film colony has lost sev- eral of its stars due to the coloratura recently, among them the following: Thomas H. Lark, cashier Pathe Exchange, Inc.; George Leath, manager Deadwood Exchange, Inc.; M. J. Rogers, book-keeper, Universal Film Exchange, Inc.

Business Jottings.

Wrightsville Beach, N. C.—Mr. H. T. Drake, of Fayetteville, Strand theater, is spending some time here with his family. Mr. Drake is very optimistic over the prospects for big business at Fayetteville in the near future and forecasts the establishment of a machine gun camp to accommodate forty thousand men to train or drill in this section.

"Bill" Conn, of the Charlotte Universal exchange has just returned from a trip through the three states of North and South Carolina and Virginia, where he is handling bookings for "Berlin, via Ameri- ca," for Otto Haas, who purchased the rights for these three states and arranged with the Universal exchange to handle the bookings. He set a record-breaking bookings on this war pic- ture, and made many contacts with the farmers inhabits already signed up for it in the three states. Capacity business is re- ported in the rural sections and in properly played in this territory, second only to the success scored by "The Kaiser." Mr. H. T. Drake, of Fayetteville, and Missie Wallace, of Princess theaters here and this is his first venture in the field of states rights pur- chasers.
"THE MORTGAGED WIFE."
Universal Production Presents Dorothy Phillips in Absorbing Story.
Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

This six-reel Universal production carries the interest from beginning to end, despite the fact that it is highly improbable in many respects and might well have been told in five reels. It provides a curious study of human frailty, all of the men being afflicted with some form of moral weakness, except the girl's brother, who makes up for this dissimilarity by his general slowness in understanding his sister's situation. The girl herself, Gloria Carter, is portrayed by Dorothy Phillips, and she is the one character who holds the sympathies at all times.

Gloria is married to Ralph Carter, a skulking individual, who announces at the beginning of the story that he has stolen fifty thousand dollars of the bank's funds to pay for his separation. The man named Jerome Harris, and the latter agrees to release Carter as the result of a strange compact. Gloria is forced by Harris and her own husband to live at the Harris home until Carter succeeds in paying back the money. The wife carries her agreement and succeeds in fighting off the advances of Harris, who had long been in love with her. She discovers that Myers, secretary to Harris, is a German spy, and with this information regains the note her husband had given Harris. In the course of the story she plunges in the stock market and wrecks Harris, whom she eventually leaves. The husband has been shot by Myers. The final reel of the story contains a great deal of dramatic action, and shows the sinking of a big liner by a submarine in a striking way.

William Stowell, Albert Roscoe, Sam DeGrasse and Edwin August play the masculine roles. The story was written by Frank Howard Clark and produced by Allan Holubar.

"THE CITY OF TEARS."
Bluebird Production Features Carmel Myers in Sympathetic Story.
Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

There is a delicate touch apparent throughout this sympathetic Bluebird subject of five reels. The plot is one of the natural, well-ordered type, slight in incident, but full of humankindness and so affectively presented that it should have wide appeal. Carmel Myers plays the role of Rosa, an Italian opera singer, and Edwin August appears as Tony, an Italian delicatessen dealer. Both of the leading parts are skillfully played, Miss Myers keeping a close hold on the interest in her experiences as a girl out of a job in a big city. Mr. August does an exceptional character bit as Tony. But the development of the story itself is unusual and for this credit must be given to the author, Olga Printzlau, and the producer, Elsie Jane Wilson. Instead of the usual unavailing efforts to create pity for the girl by a series of stereotyped adventures, they have pictured a series of small incidents that have a much stronger effect.

The plot concerns the wanderings of Rosa after the opera company has disbanded. She is out of money and has no friends. Tony, the delicatessen man, befriends her and she takes a job in his establishment. She escapes for a time from the clutches of Billy, a young artist admirer, and in the course of the story falls in love with Tony. She also discovers Tony's long-lost sister.

The story is a cheerfully one, with a good undercurrent of humor running through it.

"ONE DOLLAR BID."
Paralta Play of the Kentucky Hills with J. Warren Kerrigan in the Lead.
Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A Virginia-forgotten law. Kentucky gives the title to "One Dollar Bid," a five-part Paralta photoplay told in scenic minstrel style. It is the original story by Credo Harris, J. Warren Kerrigan heads the cast, and the picture was directed by Ernest C. Warde. Charles Sturmak was the photographer. Moonshine whiskey is at the bottom of most of the trouble in the story, Toby, the part played by the star, is suffering from too great a love for it when he is introduced. A really brilliant young law-ye, he has absconded himself to the down hill until he has become a vagabond, living in a deserted negro hut.

The neighborhood has its minds to get rid of the stranger, and the sheriff recalls an old law that will permit him to sell Toby into servitude for one year. When he is put up at auction, Virginia Dare, the niece of Colonel Dare, who is horrified at seeing a human being sold in this way, bids one dollar, and Toby is turned over to her. Admiration for his owner works Toby's reformation, and he becomes superintendent of the Dare stables. Before he tells his true name and wins the heart of Miss Kerrigan, however, he defends a moonshiner from a murder charge, and risks his life in aiding some of his neighbors.

The arrival of Toby's father is followed by his engagement to Virginia Dare.

There are numerous "character" scenes in "One Dollar Bid," and it will find added interest. There is not much speed in the story, but it is well acted, and the personality of the star is greatly in his favor. Joseph J. Dowling, Beatrice Joy, Arthur Allard, Jess Herring, Ethelva Witt and Clifford Alexander comprise the supporting cast.

"TANGLED LIVES."
Vitagraph Feature with Harry Morey Interesting But Loosely Made Melodrama.
Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

The twists and turns of fate in "Tangled Lives," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature written by James Oliver Curwood and directed by Paul Scardon, betray the hand of an author who is more bent on supplying his story with melodramatic situations than in following a natural course of events. An excellent quality of acting on the part of the entire cast and the saving grace of generally spirited action make the picture interesting, however, for those who are not inclined to become critical. Harry Morey as John Howard is the correct type for the character and is thoroughly in earnest every moment he appears on the screen.

"Tangled Lives" deals with a young artist and a girl who become involved in his happiness. Married to a beautiful woman, Howard learns that she cares only for wealth and position and is cast adrift with a millionaire, Paul Westcott, for whom he is drawing the plans of a fine mansion. Cora plans to make the place a center of such great wealth, has always loved Howland. Her husband discovers this and commits suicide, hoping to secure Picture. Reviewed by Edward Weitsel.

A REPUTATION gained by writing "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and "Lovey Mary" is bound to create the impression that a story by Alice Helen Rice will have human characters and a most likable hero and heroine. "Sandy," the five-part Paramount photoplay fashioned by Edith M. Kennedy from the novel of that name, is full of the heart interest that distinguished the other works of Mrs. Rice. Jack Pickford and Louise Huff are happily cast as a young Scotch轺girl away and a Kentucky girl who is Sandy's inspiration from the day he first sees her on board the ocean liner. The author is not particularly strong on dramatic situations, and Sandy's path is not beset with sufficient difficulties to keep the spectator uncertain as to his fate. A pleasing atmosphere of kindly feeling and youthful innocence pervades the picture, however, and the last reel is enlivened with an attempt at murder and Sandy is arrested and held. He succeeds in eluding the guard to man the escape. George Melford has directed the picture with satisfactory results.

The story is short, but it seems to require about forty-five minutes to tell it. A young man who has had a voice to sound asleep on a dock somewhere on the North side of the Atlantic. Owning nothing but the clothes on his back, he gives away the dog and strikes a streak. Ralph Hatton, the modern steamship bound for America. He is discovered and is saved from being sent back when the ship lands by Ruth Nolan, the little Kentucky girl, who gets her aunt to pay Sandy's fare. Ralph, an ex-jockey, is also on the ship and Sandy strikes up a partnership with him. The two work their way to the town where Ruth lives, and Sandy is adopted by Judge Hollis and his wife. Things come the Scotch boy's way after that. He is given a good education and treated as one of the family. Ruth's brother, gets mixed up in some crooked racetrack work with Hicks Wilson, and Judge Hollis has the jockey arrested for fouling and badly injuring another rider. This act is a bit of dramatic license, but it gives Carter Nelson a chance to show the Judge and for Sandy to protect the brother of the girl he loves. A prettily staged wedding closes the picture, with Sandy and Ruth in the leading roles.

Well-acted parts are contributed by James Neil, Edythe Chapman, C. H. Ger- dart, Julia Faye, Louise Hutchinson, George Beranger, Raymond Hatton, Jen- nie Lee, Parkes Jones and Don Lykes.

FAMILIARITY with the stage will weaken considerably the force of "Tempered Steel," a five-part picture arranged for the screen by Mrs. L. Case Russell from a story by George Middle- ton. Produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Com- pany and directed by Ralph Ince, with Ma- dame Olga Petrova as the star. "Tempered Steel" builds up to a strong situation in the last two reels in spite of the fact that a number of incidents could never have taken place. The general public will ac- cept most of the material, however, and never doubt the playwright when the ab- sence of the star is not discovered on the opening night in New York until it is almost time for the curtain to go up. Madame Petrova is handsomely behind the scenes in a much more businesslike way.

There are several minor details of a similar nature, but the foundation of the story is a woman's grit and self-sacrifice at the most trying moment of her life, and the character of Lucille Caruthers, the part played by Madame Petrova, com- mands the respect and sympathy of the spectator all through the picture.

A young southern girl of a proud old family, Lucille meets strong opposition when she announces her determination to become an actress. Serge Ratakkin, an actor whose nature is indicated by the first syllable of his last name, offers her an engagement, and Lucille keeps going ahead until she attracts the attention of a powerful man and is given the star part in a new play. Rata- kin is in love with her, but Lucille has become engrossed in the stage. On the night of the opening, Ratakkin comes to Lucille's apartment and threatens to kill her because she has repulsed him. The girl shoots him in self-defense, leaves his dead body and hurries to the theater. Although weak and trembling from the shock she goes through the performance and car- ries the play to success. Later on she learns that Ratakkin was really killed by a flash of lightning that struck the building.

Madame Petrova has never done any- thing for the screen as well as she plays Lucille. She strikes fire when the action calls for such a display of animation, and puts something of the impetuosity that is popularly supposed to belong to the Russian stage. This is a credit to the direction of J. Herbert Frank, Thomas Holding, William C. Harrill, and the many experts who were in the supporting company. "THE KID IS KLEVER." Fox Film Corporation features George Walsh in Amusing Five-Reel Subject. Reviewed by Robert E. Theyler.

THIS five-reel number, entitled "The Kid is Klever," is a light-running, humorous conception, built about the figure of George Walsh, a person- ality most of the interest centers. The picture tells a story within a story, but the two narratives are easily kept separate in the mind of the observer.

Walsh makes an appearance, in proper person, at the moving picture studio, where it develops that his regular director is ill and he finds it necessary to get both a new director and a story to work on. In comes a gentleman announced as Mr. Horatio Price, who is the highest director in the business—"around the waist." They set to work making a fearful and won- derful story, which is completed and then shown on the screen.

In the second story Mr. Walsh appears as a Wall Street broker. He is an all-around athlete and an expert boxer. His father, desiring him to have some experience and a trip to South America. Kirk has a further interest in reaching Rio de Janeiro, for if he arrives there in August he will have inherited wealth from his uncle. A desperado named Jabbando, who also desires the inheritance, is hot on his track. Many of the scenes occur on shipboard, and the piece with a hot little bug is a bit of interest. This vehicle, which was written by Randolph Lewis and directed by Paul Powell, gives Walsh the opportunity to perform numerous acrobatic feats, which will meet with favor from observers.

H ENRY SAUNDERS is the creator of that big hearted and brilliant headed hero, "Red" Saunders, tells a rousing story about the "Fly God," which has been transferred to the screen by Triangle, with Roy Stewart in the leading role. The tale is a little the word fly alludes to the busy little bug that we are implored to swallow at every opportunity. During a trial for murder, eleven of the jurors have de- cided to bring in a verdict of guilty. The twelfth juror leaves his decision to the fly that is crawling up a window-pane. If the fly reaches the top of the glass the prisoner is to go free. The fly is the means of the man's acquittal.

In this one of the "Red" Saunders series "Red" Saunders is described as a man who are traveling to Arizona by wagon and are robbed by the brother of his wife's Saunders' township. Robert Allers, the man in search of health, is too proud to accept charity, and "Red" and his cowboys have difficulty in thinking up ways to get around the matter.

When Allers meets the sheriff's brother and tells him in the most respectful manner of the officer is so strong that it is almost impossible to reason him out of "Red" Saunders' town. While he is in jail his wife becomes a mother, being taken care of by "Jimmy- Hattie," the little girl who looks at the Saunders ranch. The little family is re- united and sent on its way rejoicing and the Saunders cowboys are treated well satis- fied with their good work.

"The Fly God" is not a remarkably fine vehicle, but it is full of kindly feeling and is acted in the proper spirit by Roy Stewart and the rest of the cast. Edward Pell is Robert Allers; Clyde Pell is Albert Allers; John Edwards, Jimmy-Hit-the-Bottle; Percy Challenger, "shorty" Stokes, and Walter Perry, "Wild River". Cliff Smith directed the picture with his usual good judgment.

"THE PAINTED LILY."
Alma Rubens as an Unwilling Vampire in Triangle Photoplay of the Underworld.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

The law of contrast is used cleverly in "The Painted Lily," a five-part Triangle picture, story by Catherine A. Carr, directed by Thomas N. Heffron. Alma Rubens, the star, appears as the innocent daughter of a simple old florist and in the earlier scenes makes a lovely picture, surrounded by roses and blossoms of different hues. Mary Jolly, by name, she fascinates a gambler, who sees in her beauty the lure by which he can attract and hold patrons to his gaming tables. Believing Ceci Grey to be an honorable man, Mary accepts his proposal of marriage and after a honeymoon is told what an expected of her. She refuses until Grey informs her that the marriage ceremony was not legal and gives her back the money she sent him without saying a word about it.

Hating the life but willing to endure anything for the sake of the gentle old florist, Mary continues to assist her husband until the police raid the gambling house. A former pal of Grey's, a thief who helped him commit a robbery and murder, turns up, and the two men force Mary to pass herself off as the daughter of a blind woman in order to secure her freedom.

The woman lives in the country. At her home is a young chap who lost his last penny in Grey's gambling house and is now working as a farmhand. Grey is killed while trying to rob a man, but before he dies admits that he lied about the marriage. Mary is really his wife. Tom Burton, the farmhand, is deeply in love with the florist's daughter, and there is every indication that she has a happy future awaiting her.

Unless the spectator is inclined to analyze closely several of the situations, "The Painted Lily" will prove good entertainment. Alma Rubens is equal to every one of her scenes, and is effectively supported by her co-star, Jack Richardson, Dorothy Hagar, Francis McDonald, Albert Lee and Gene Burr.

The production is of the best Triangle standard. C. H. Wales was the photographer.

"THE GHOST OF ROSEY TAYLOR." Mary Miles Minter Makes Best Record on Adaptation of Bacon Story.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

By FAR the best vehicle in which Mary Miles Minter has appeared, to the knowledge of the writer, is "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor," a Saturday Evening Post story by Josephine Daskam Bacon. The book was written by Robert Allers; the picture was made for the American Film Company by Edward Slioman and will be re-released on the Mutual program July 8. The story is about the young man's inattention to detail and carries an atmosphere of mystery with a slight touch of melodrama. It is an interesting picture full of opportunities, not with the finish of a great actress but with her usual charm and youthful spirit. Playing opposite her is Alan Forrest, with George Periolat playing the double role of father and uncle. Kate Price also appears in the cast carrying a good bit of character work as the Irish landlady whose heart rules her head. The story tells of a man, who has been educated in France with only her father and the neighbors for companions, is suddenly left an orphan, a catastrophe which is quickly followed by the loss of the fortune left her by her father. Her lack of misfortune, which is father to a number of complications, leaves her at the New York docks stranded after she has sought to America as nursmaid by a family who find no further use for her after landing. An envelope picked up in the park and addressed to Rosie Taylor, who turns out to be dead, contains a note and the key to the door of a certain wealthy home where Rosie had been employed at intervals.

The orphan girl, driven by her hunger, takes the key, enters the house whose mistress is away, and goes to the country for the week-end and proceeds to take Rosie Taylor's place. The son of the house, left by his parents to be brought up as a burglar, installation in a reformatory and a thrilling escape bring us to the conclusion of the story which is brought face to face with her father's brother, with whom he had broken family ties. The anticipated wedding of the son of wealth and the orphan forms the close of an entertaining picture.

LOOKS as though Mr. Hart has in him the material for a fine director. He is making himself as thoroughly informed as his time and opportunities will allow about details of production other than those expressed by the actor. Probably no influence is more responsible for the change in the public than a certain shallowness of the average director who expects to concentrate attention on the central interest in the story and to use the scenery as a background. The industry of a man who knows how to write for screen presentation and is a creative artist, though not without his faults, makes him a serious rival in designating "Shark Monroe" a man of childish laughter and the Kidigour, or Kelly. "TO HELL WITH THE KAISER." Metro Presents Screen Classic's Production Which Personally Conducts Kaiser to Hades.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is an abundance of entertainment in this seven-act Screen Classics production, "To Hell With the Kaiser." It was built for amusement purposes, running the entire gamut of the war, and cleverly presenting both the comic and the sad. The somber path comes first, and it is an expose of Hohenzollern ruthlessness not soon to be forgotten. It is another picture that will make history for Uncle Sam and add to the note of sincerity that has been recently apparent in the Kaiser's prayers. The comedy comes with the second part of the number and is fairly riotous at times. This grows naturally out of the American end of the story and it would be hard to put together a better blend of humor and patriotism dealing with such grim subject matter.

In this connection, it may be said that in this production the serious scenes have not been interfered with by the humor, which is commendable, as it is a mistake to get too close to traviesty in treating of war itself. Much of the later humor occurs as part of an American soldier's dream.

The title speaks for itself. It echoes the sentiment of the moment, but may mislead some people with the idea that it applies to a strictly burlesque production, which is not the case. The opening reels go very seriously into both the history of the German court, dating back 15 years, and the American present fight present war. The Kaiser's desire for world power is brought out, together with the scenes of the arrogance towards his mother and his contempt of anything that interferes with what he esteems his divine right.

Historical facts are used as a background for the comic part of the story, but there has been no attempt to stick to actual incidents. At the same time the observer feels that the intrigues of the German court and the early Belgian atrocities have in no sense been overdrawn; he feels that the murder of the clergy, the rape of women, the shattering of homes and cathedrals if anything but dimly apparent in the truth. Some of the scenes are horrifying, but have been presented with commendable restriction as to painful details.

The plot itself concerns an American scientist and his two daughters in Europe during the war. The lead is occupied by Mr. Monroe and Alice in Berlin and Ruth Monroe is in one of the first Berlin towns at the latest. An invention of the Crown Prince himself, a rather absurd feature it seemed, and the father is afterward murdered in cold blood. Alice Monroe remains in Berlin to plan vengeance. The close of the story is fantastic in the extreme, almost too much so, in fact. Alice shoots the Crown Prince, adding still another to the list of slain of the Crown, and she then sends in some information by secret wireless which leads to the capture of the Kaiser by American police.

OCCUPATION?" Viola Dana Has Attractive Role in a Clever Comedy—Supporting Cast Excellent.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

AN OCCUPATION" of a farcical nature is "Opportunity," the five-reel Metro release for July 2. The picture is a comedy, written by Edgar Franklyn, and Viola Dana is starred in a role that provides her with excellent opportunities which she uses to good advantage.

Mr. Willard, athletically inclined, goes to a prize fight dressed in her brother's clothes. The seat next to hers is occupied by Anthony Fry, a successful business competitor of her wealthy father. Fry has just been reading a poem based on the idea of "/opportunity" for every man's door. He determines to offer an opportunity to the "boy" who falls in with the story, and begins his game. When Fry comes off and her sex is discovered. Through the suspicions of a "detective" character, which is a fact that Fry's friend is a newcomer, and his wife returns unexpectedly, various complications ensue, which, of course, is brought out, and Fry and Mary seize the opportunity which has so unconventionally broken out.

As Mary Willard, the talented player, has one of the most pleasing roles of her career. The production is well handled, and there are a number of good laughs. The supporting cast is strong, which the comedy is contributed by Hale Hamilton as Fry's, and Edward Abele as his friend Bowler. Other prominent members of the cast include Frank Currier as Mary's father, Frank Lyon as Fry's vales, Joseph Burke as the detective, Sally Crute as Mrs. Bowler, and Elsie MacLeod as Mary's mother.

John H. Collins is the director, and he deserves credit for the manner in which he handles the material. Altogether, this picture should provide agreeable entertainment for the majority of motion picture theaters.

TWO HENRY STORIES. "Sisters of the Golden Circle" and "The Brief Debut of Tidy."

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

"Sisters of the Golden Circle." "Sisters of the Golden Circle." is one of the most entertaining of the O. Henry series produced by Broadway Star Pictures. It is directed by Kenneth Webb, who has produced a picture in which the different ingredients are all carefully handled and which closely follows the story from which it is adapted.

Two married couples are seated on opposite seats on top of a Fifth Avenue "bus." One couple is from a small Missis- sippi town, and the other couple is a crook who has decided to reform. The two bride exchange confidences and she is determined to arrest the crook, he makes a getaway, while the other bride passes her husband over the crook. A merry event the park follows, landing in the police station where everything is satisfactory and improves the day. Did it as it only made an hour's discomfort for her husband, while the whole happiness of the escape of her guilty better half.

The picture is enacted by an excellent cast including Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres, a very successful couple, with Frank Kingsley and Alice Terry as the city couple. Almost the entire action takes place on a bus going up Fifth Avenue, New York, and in Central Park. The scenes are well handled and convincingly done.

"The Brief Debut of Tidy." This is a pathetic picture in two reels adapted from a story by O. Henry and produced by Broadway Star Features. The theme deals with a girl employed in a cheap restaurant. None of the male customers ever look her way, while the waitress is the recipient of many attentions.

One day one of the customers who has lost his job and impoverished too freely hugs and kisses her, but she cannot keep her secret; takes various steps to beautify herself, and sees visions of future happiness. After a lapse of a few days, the customer reappears and apolo- gizes for his disgraceful conduct, and de- pends the death of her broken-hearted.

Alice Terry does an excellent bit of work as the forlorn waitress, while Betty Blythe is good as the attractive one. William Shew is cast as the gruff restaurant keeper.

"THE GOLDEN WALL." World-Picture Features Carlyle Blackwell in Pleasant Old-Fashioned Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

His five-reel World-Picture is an adaptation by Clara Beranger of an old novel of the same name, written by Dell Henderson. The story is an enjoy- able one, reverting back to the days when heroes and heroines were wont to suspect one another of fortune hunting. This of course still occurs, but is not made so much of in modern novels. The theme is elaborated here for the most part in the midst of a beautiful country estate, abounding in pleasing settings which have been made the most of.

Carlyle Blackwell appears as Charles, Marquis d'Aubeterre, a young French nobleman. He comes to America, with nothing but a fortune, to make his fortune. But he has no idea of marrying money, as the thought is repugnant to him. He has no idea of marrying for money, and he marries a daughter of a million- aire's estate and a love affair follows with Marrian, the daughter. He rescues her from drowning, and he marries her, but she has been informed by the gov- erness of her younger sister that Charles is a fortune hunter.

The chief dramatic scene occurs in the tower, where the two have been locked in by a drunk man. The girl denounces the hero, claiming he has tricked her, but he climbs down a rope part way and then jumps to a nearby lake. The girl is later released. In the final scene the hero learns that he is not really poor and the girl instits she has been cut out of her father's will. So they wed after all.

Evelyn Greeley appears as Marrian, Madge Evans as the governess, Jack Drumler, John Hines, Kate Lester and George MacQuarrie have other roles.
troops. The final scene pictures the Kaiser in his descent to hades.

Laurence Grant carries off the acting honors of the piece. He appears both as the Kaiser, whom he resembles greatly in his own natural self, and as Robert Graul, a soldier-farmer who impersonates himself upon occasion. This gives opportunity for some interesting doublings. In the final scene, as the Kaiser, Schenk gives a proper touch to the impersonating but cold-blooded Crown Prince. John Howard, who portrays the Prince, is an actor of no small ability, and his picture of the part of Alice Monroe, which she plays with distinction, and Betty Howe is no less pathetically convincing.

The impersonation of Von Holleier by Carl Dane is particularly good and there are others of Von Hindenburg, Von Tirpitz, Count Zeppelin and General Pershing, of varying excellence.

The whole affair offers ample opportunity for patriotic outbursts from the audience. There are no actual battle scenes, but thrills are furnished in other ways. The appearance of a whole field of aeroplanes in action is a notable instance of the sailors to the Kaiser makes an impressive sight.

This entire series is crowded with interesting information regarding Britain's conduct of the war. It reveals much that was for a long while maintained in secret. The former number of the series showed the work of mine hunters, mine sweepers and all sorts of smaller craft. But the series has not been restricted to the work of these, for it has pictured the scenes along the French coast, where the British troops were pictured on the masts of ships or on other working places. It is a compilation of views that is not only vitally interesting at the present time, but will have strong historical value.

SCREEN TELEGRAM No. 32 (Mutual), June 19.—Interesting items of this issue include athletic games enjoyed by our troops; labor chief attending convention hail and ode to a gentleman of mass; a commander arriving at Sonlonka in an aeroplane; closeup of Marchal de Lorge; a battle between airplane and submarine, and in which he was surrounded by the Germans for 48 hours; members of board and others at a meeting with the Americans in France.

SCREEN TELEGRAM No. 33 (Mutual), June 23.—Among the pictured events of this issue are shown the first training flights to the troops in California, including some excellent closeups of the famous pilot; a golf championship at the Sun; bridge builders' engineers; photographing the recent eclipse of the sun at Denver, Colo., with a huge camera, and others on the SMITH-RIVER PARADES in different parts of the county.

HER SPOONEY AFFAIR (Strand), July 3.—The presentation of this comedy featuring Billie Rhodes. This clever little actress is especially charming in this number, which pictures the strange love story of a young man who is met by accident in an art gallery. The aunt of the girl helps her to work a scheme whereby she assumes the identity of the young woman impersonating her aunt's maid. He promptly focuses his attentions on the extremely pretty maid, and finally is taken into the secret.

THE GHOST OF ROSSIE TAYLOR (M. G. M.), July 7.—Interesting efforts in the aiding further Photo of Mary Miles Minter. The story by Josephine Daskam Bacon forms one of the best vehicles that Miss Minter has had for the display of her talent. A full review of the picture will be found elsewhere.

HER ENGAGEMENT RING (Strand).—A Billie Rhodes comedy what will please the little girl and her many friends. The plot is not deep set or unusual, but rests with considerable spirit. Two young men in love, the girl buy diamond engagement rings exactly the same. The first one to propose becomes the victim of a frame-up by his rival, who mails to number two a ring stolen from the girl telling him that all is over between them, and enclosing the ring. The close of the picture ends on a note of bitter strife when her marriage to the girl is interrupted by her first sweetheart.

SCREEN TELEGRAM No. 34 (Mutual).—Interesting items of this number are orphans enjoying an outing at Cincin- nati; inspiring news and reports showing big guns in action, annual bicycle races at Chicago; latest surf costumes at Alameda, Calif.; an illustration of "For" heroic action in France, and nurses ready to sail for the front.

AN EX-CANNIBAL CARNIVAL (Outing- Chester)—This number shows the return of a group of natives from the Fiji Islands showing how modern has become this spot where once savages lived. The dances of the Fiji Islanders and of their sisters, the Samoans, are entertaining. The real idea is the Fijian industry, and gives splendid views of the gathering and preparation of the coconuts for the great Fijian carnival. With this picture no one will doubt that civilization has reached the Fijians.

KAIETEUR (Outing- Chester).—This number of the Outing-Chester pictures, this issue of this magazine, is an unusually well photographed scenic which illustrates in brilliant color the imposing scenery of the river leading to the great falls of Kaieteur in British Guiana. The picture is well subtitled and interesting throughout.

MISS INFORMED (Strand), July 2.—In this number an attempt is made by the film art of the story of the wrong man and rather messes things up in the first place, also putting her lover to considerable disadvantage. The story, of course, ends happily. The comedy in this number is fair.

Pathé Exchange, Inc.

THE DEATH SWITCH (Pathé), June 30.—Episode No. 17 of "The House of Hate." This is one of the most interesting in the serial. The chief incidents concern the likeness of Pearl to a girl about to be electrocuted, who proves to be the girl, and their identities become mixed in a mystifying way. Pearl, it seems at first, is innocent of the crime, but supposition is naturally wrong, and gives a chance for a new twist at the close.

ANNEXING BILL (Astra-Pathé), July 7.—Interesting suspense to a girl by Edgar Franklin. This feature Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale. The plot is interesting, suspenseful, refuses to propose to a girl he loves because she has just inherited a million. She makes an effort to get rid of the unwelcome money, and the result brings out an amusing story with several twists in it. Reviewed in last week's issue.

Stock Actors in Vicious Brawl.

Although actors were in times gone by listed as "strollers and other vagabonds" and forced to have their ears pierced, today they are highly valued members of any community in which they may elect to live. Therefore, consternation and amazement were registered throughout the Metro-Sixty-six studio, where two actors, each in the support of a prominent star, so far forgot themselves as to make a dash for the 46th floor balcony, and denounced no doubt by some petty professional jealousy, to get the better of them and come to the aid of the poor fellow below them.

One of the big moments in "L'Occident," Mme. Nazinova's current Screen Classics, Inc. production, was being photographed when a piercing shriek, followed by frantic cries for help brought every running man to the balcony. The Agonistes and George Spelvin were in what was to the onlookers, appeared to be a death grapple.

Fearless members of the several companies surrounding them and now George Spelvin, the Metro parrot, is kept securely locked in his cage, while Thomas Agonistes, former star of the Maltsean gang, has been relegated to the engine room.

The Commodore's Curiosity.

J. Stuart Blackton's production plans include a little experimenting to prove to his own satisfaction whether the box office value of the short film is lost.

He has long been convinced that "The Phallic Thing" and first to be considered, but he also claims that the "New York" claim that a big name has its effect on the box office line.

He does not believe, however, that a star can hold up a poor play.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE PAINTED LILY (Triangle), June 30.—Alma Rubens has a congenial role in this five-part picture which has been adapted from a novel by Frank Hefron. The story was written by Catherine Carr, and deals with the underworld. It is reviewed on a later page on another page of this issue.

THE FLY GOD (Triangle), June 30.—Another thrilling five-reel picture which is filled with all kinds of thrilling moments, the story being a complete blow at the underworld.

World Pictures Corporation.

TINSEL (World Pictures), July 8.—A five-reel subject of the smart society type featuring Richard Whiting, Frank Mayo, and others. The story, based on a narrative by Fred Jackson, is very entertaining and splendidly presented. It is a good example of the society story with an offensive sex interest. Reviewed at length in last week's issue.

TO PROVE OUR ASSERTION

That the Convention Numbers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD enjoy a lasting reference value, we offer the following testimony of Mr. Chas. Bass, President, Bass Camera Co., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:

I have received your letters announcing your special issue and have decided to take half page space the same as I did last year. You will be surprised to know that about a week ago we received an inquiry in letter form from a party out of town, who inquired for our price on a new moving picture camera of a certain make. Attached to his letter was our half page ad. which appeared in your convention number of July 21st, last year, and which had been clipped from that issue by the writer. This fact makes me feel all the more certain that advertising in special issues has an added pulling power.

Now! Wouldn't you like to know that the medium in which you have bought advertising space is not going to be scanned casually and discarded?

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD WON'T be discarded—it will be kept as a reference guide.

Forms close Monday, July 8th.

No change in rates for the Special Issue.

Directed by Albert Parker.

The Story: Billy, a young lawyer, is in love with Enid Barwell, an impetuous art student. It is reported that Enid’s maid, who is Enid’s sole heir, has inherited a million dollars. When Billy hears of this he says that he will not marry Enid. So Enid, who is in love with Billy, decides to hand over the money to a friend’s husband who has been most unsuccessful in investments. As the transfer of the money is about to be completed, the aunt appears. Then it develops that the woman who says she is the aunt is an imposter. How the tangle is straightened out and true love comes into its own is ingeniously depicted in the climax.

William Fox Presents Peggy Hyland in a Play With One Moral and Many Thrills.

Cast:
Shirley Reynolds............Peggy Hyland
Lola Wayne.................Elizabeth Garrison
Lola’s mother..............Regina Quinn
Riley Hatch Trask........Frank Goldsmith
Directed by Carl Harbaugh.

The plot. Emily, a girl with a gentle nature, goes in a convent. Her mother, who has secured a divorce because of her husband’s neglect, goes to her father’s studio and finds a gay party. A girl called Lola Wayne is dancing to the applause of the men and women around Shirley’s father. Lola’s father enters. Seeing the degradation to which his daughter has fallen, he strikes her with a whip, dragging Shirley down. A stirring series of events follow. Shirley gets out of many traps sent by her father, and, with her senses, reunités him to her mother and begins a romance of her own.

Feature Peggy Hyland as Shirley Reynolds.

Stunt Suggestions: Plan your newspaper work with catchlines along the lines of "New York, Nevada, and the Swamps of Soul." and play up the situation of the man who seeks to lure an innocent young girl into her own daughter’s degeneration. Don’t play the situation up too strongly, but present it clearly. You will need a newspaper, a club, a paper and throwaway work, so concentrate on that.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three cards, eight 11x14 and 22x28. Press sheet and mats (mats can be secured free by writing to the Window Display Department, New York City). Cuts are made on special order at the rate of 20 cents per column.

"SANDY."

Jesse L. Lasky Presents Jack Pickford and Louise Huff in a Story by Alice Hegan Rice. Directed by Lovey Mary, Mrs. Wigges of the Cabbage Patch and Other Fiction and Screen Successes. Cast.

Sandy Kilday — — — — — — Jack Pickford

Ruth Huff — — — — — — Louise Huff

Judge Hollis — — — — — — James Neil

Mrs. Hollis — — — — — — Edythe Chapman

C. H. Geldy — — — — — — Annette Fenton

Jula Faye — — — — — — Aunt Nelson

Lousie Hutchinson — — — — — — Aunt Maury

Bowie — — — — — —LOOP

Ricks Wilson — — — — — — Raymond Hatton

Aunt Melvy — — — — — — Jennie Lee

Sid Gray — — — — — — Don Lykes

Directed by George Melford.

The Story: Sandy Kilday, a Scotch lad, comes to this country as a stowaway in search of his fortune. Upon his arrival in New York he meets Rickie Wilcox, a conniving sailor who fathered Sandy while Garret is in prison. Katherine yields to her aunt's demands and marries Mueller. Dundas becomes conscientious and his confession results in the release of Garret who, with Appleby, a secret service agent, go to an island in the Pacific known as No Man's Land. There Garret meets Katherine and learns that she has an adopted son of Judge Hollis and three years later he meets Ruth at a country fair in New York. This causes her much anxiety and his escapist are the means of introducing numerous dramatic thrills in the story, in which Sandy and Ruth are the central figures. Sandy, a Jekyll and Hyde character, is a hero in the eyes of the law when an attempt is made to burn alive a man accused of murder, and when Sandy knows is innocent. But finally order comes out of chaos and all ends happily.

Feature: Jack Pickford as Sandy Kilday and Louise Huff as Ruth Nelson. f

Stunt Suggestions: Make the usual arrangements with the book stores. Play up the fact that this was the last picture made before Jack Pickford enlisted in the Navy's Reserve. Dye straw blue and use it to frame stills of the story with "Sandy," a word to be copied in the announcement and the house and date line. The blue straw can also be used to decorate the lobby with the same caption as to add to the scale of the scenes. If you can borrow a local trotting or running horse use it for street work with a big placard carrying the announcement of the story.

Directed by John H. Collins.

The Story: The strong believer in the theory that opportunity comes once to every man. He and his friend Will go to the big city to catch a fight, and Fry's theory is given such a severe jolt when one of the fighters in the preliminary bout fails to live up to his advantage that Fry remarks to Bowman he will give the opportunity of a lifetime to the man who takes the vacant seat in the box near by. Mary Willard, a lover of the "manly art of self-defense," dons her father's discarded uniform and goes to the fight and takes the seat referred to by Fry. Fry approaches Mary, who is by her actions proclaims herself to be a kid, and the others, believing that he is annoying the boy, prefer her help. They are disturbed by a full-fledged fight, and in the melee Fry, Bowman and "the kid" escape to the hotel where Fry has a bachelor's suite, and the three become involved in many humorous and exciting entanglements. But in the end the situation is so much incident that it comes as a surprise to Mary that she is the daughter of the President.

How the Other Half Lives Revealed in Convincing Photoplay.
Sociological Problem Discussed in Photoplay Revelations.

Stunt Suggestions: Use the alliteration in the subhead for a lobby announcement with a single deep initial "P" for the six words. Use startling caption phrases such as "It might have been your own daughter" to head your newspaper and street posters. Make sure that your large lobby card for lobby or window display with pictures of pretty girls caught in its meshes. If you can add a large slogan, so much the better. Advertise that all stage struck girls should see this picture. You may be able to interest certain enthusiasts in the film and get him to use the theme for a text for a sermon, or you can make an elaborate campaign with the anti-vice society if your town boasts one. The story can be worked either as a propaganda campaign in itself. The former treatment is to be preferred.

"THE CLAWS OF THE HUN."

John Stanton.........Charles Ray
Virginia Lee.........Jane Novak
Alfred Werner........Robert McKim
Muriel Charters........Dorcas Matthews
Guefrey Stanton........William MacDowell
Mrs. Godfrey Stanton........Mollie McConnell

Directed by Victor L. Schertzinger.

The Story: John Stanton has long desired to enlist, but his mother, a kind woman, is ill and fearful, exacts a promise from him not to enlist because she could not resist his departure. He is called a slacker by his friends and when his sweetheart, Jane Novak, treats him coldly he is in despair. In his father's safe repositor is a formula of a high explosive entrusted to him by the United States Government, and Stanton learns and frustrates the plot of several German spies to obtain possession of it. When Stanton's mother comes to a full realization of Hun espionage in her country and of the necessity of combating enemies abroad as well as at home, Stanton is permitted to re-engage in the charge of being a slacker by enlisting.

Feature Charles Ray as John Stanton and Jane Novak as Virginia Lee.

Excluded from France Loyal Chap Starts His Own War at Home. Claws of the Slacker, who, being a Loyal American in Realistic Photoplay.

Stunt Suggestions: This picture, while striking, does not offer much opportunity for advertising. It can be used through newspaper work and appeal to the general interest aroused by the situation in which the hero is placed. It is a controversial tone and ask if it is right for a man to stay home because enlistment may mean his work. It works hard along those lines with newspaper work, circulars and even form letters asking enlistment.

“SHARK MONROE.”

Directed by: "Shark" Monroe. ......... William S. Hart
Marjorie Hilton .......... Katherine MacDonald“Big” Baxter .......... Joe Singleton
"One of the Boy's Men" ......... Nathalie Sprot and Webster Hilton .......... George McDaniel

Directed by William S. Hart.

The Story: In a waterfront saloon "Shark" Monroe, a man of brutal passions and master of the schooner, "The Gulf," meets Marjorie Hilton and her intoxicated brother Jack. Monroe has spent their money in drink, and Monroe gives them passage to the north, where Marjorie falls in love with him and Marjorie's brother, believing him to be sincere, Marjorie welcomes his attentions. "Shark" Monroe knows Baxter's real designs, hears that she is to marry Baxter he intercepts himself as a bridegroom to save her and takes her to the next camp. There he tells Mar- jorie that the ceremony was not legal, and she is about to leave when her brother, who had been informed of the trick, Baxter appear. A fight ensues and Monroe saves himself to be beaten by Webster. Monroe kills Baxter for his revenge in- sults and is leaving when Marjorie avows her love. Taking the "Shark" in his arms says that when they call a minister he shall be a genuine one.

Stunt Suggestions: Play up the name of the star and the fact that this story presents him as the captain of a Hell ship, a hero characterized for the first time. Let the window display get a few feet of heavy cable, an inch or more in diameter and piles of old casks on a car. Let the sign "Shark" put him with this and he fell in love with her. See how it all happened to Big Bill Hart in "Shark." Monroe promises to be "a düny" another effective window stunt would be to use Hart's face framed in toy boats or other pictures of ships. Let the headline state- ment that Hart has gone to sea. Make a special deal with the fur store to display a sign showing barbs and explain that the Hart picture shows how the seal skins are obtained.

Triangle Presents Gloria Swanson in the Story of a Woman Who Made Her Husband a Means to an End.

Edith Emerson .......... Gloria Swanson
Frank Emerson .......... Joe King
Mrs. Rhodes .......... Lilian Langdon
Jonathan Rhodes .......... Josie Belle Della Marshall .......... Lillian West
Reginald Dunstan .......... Jack Livingston

The Story: The domineering attitude of Mrs. Jonathan Rhodes toward her husband makes his home life so unpleasant that he seeks, unknown to his wife and daughter, Edith, the comforts of real home atmosphere in the apartment of a mistress. Shortly after Edith's marriage to Frank Emerson, an aggressive business man in the silk trade, the complete face of her mother is reflected in her action, with the result that Frank establishes a relationship with Della, who has been his love from the start, and begins to see the fallacy of her method of "managing" a husband upon the death of her father, for which he has sought happiness in the home of another woman because of her mother's overbearing manner. Frank's partner Reginald Dunstan, falls in love with Edith, and through her scheming she learns of the relationship between Frank and Della Marshall. The situation reaches a climax in the country home of the Emer- sons, where this unusual relationship is struggling in the arms of Dunstan, attract Frank, who has been seeking pleasure in the company of a woman, whom he has just become cognizant of his weakness. After ordering Dunstan and Della Marshall from his home, Frank and Edith begin life anew.

Then add that the story is this release and give some of the details, withholding the climax and explaining that now it worked may be seen in the play. Get out some small cards with "If your wife is the boss, - in large type and following with "bring her to see 'Everywoman's Husband' at the (house and date). It will help you." Add in another line of large type, "If you're the boss" and in smaller letters, "make her come and see it." The same idea can be used for a throwaway. Decorate a lobby frame or special panel with a few flatirons, a rolling pin and similar household weapons. Letter in "Everywoman's Husband" knows what these mean, but come in and see the play. It's worth while.

"The Empty Cab"

Bluebird Presents Franklyn Farnum in a Mystery Story That Has an Ending You Cannot Guess.

Directed by Douglas Gerrard.

The story: Henry Egbert Xerxes is the son of the proprietor of the Times, and his first assignment as a cub reporter was the rounding up a gang of counterfeiters. The only clue to the clique that the city editor gave him was that the Red Dog Inn was their rendezvous. Closing up the office building he sees a girl, whom he recognizes as the young lady who tried to pass a counterfeit coin earlier in the day, being dragged into a taxicab. He follows in another car, but is surprised to find in overhauling the taxi that it is empty. Unhurriedly he holds a tough-looking character to a lonely country house where he locates the girl who was pulled into the taxi, being allowed to escape after subduing a number of toughs. Hurrying back to the office he writes a vivid account of the gang, but is astonished to find the next day that not a line of it appears in print. At his father's office he is told that the hold-up and its resultant arrests were nothing but a trick to break him into the newspaper business.

Feature Weekly: Henry Egbert Xerxes and Eileen Percy as the Girl.

Dashing Hero of Adventure Story Victim of Compelling Film. Cub Reporter Gets Thrilling Initiation Into Newspaper Work.

Stunt Suggestions: Possibly the bank can lend some counterfeit coins. If it cannot, take any doubtful looking money and make a window display with a card: "Three days ago a gang of counterfeiters Henry Egbert Xerxes undertook to run down as his first assignment on his father's paper in "The Empty Cab." If you want to be mystified clear to the climax, see this story; (It's a bluebird which the lady went to see, at house and date)." In your newspaper work announce that this is one story where the audience is not to know it will end. Do not reveal the surprise in your announcements and do not admit patrons during the showing of the half reel.

Advertising Aids: One design each one, three and six-sheets. Stock one-sheet of star. Colored and black-and-white lobby displays, slide, heralds. Player cuts in three sizes. Scene cuts one and two columns of text.

Released July 6.

"The Street of Seven Stars"

Theodore C. Dietrich Presents Doris Kenyon at the Head of Her Own Company of Players in a Screen Production of the Novel by Mary Roberts Rinehart.

Cost.

Harmony Wells...Doris Kenyon Dr. Peter Byrne...Hugh Thompson Dr. Anna Gates...Carey Hastings Jimmy Carr...Stephen Carr Le Grande...Iva Shepard Walter McLean...Frank Crayne Sadie, the big soprano...Elise Connell Scatchett...Marie McConnell The Master...George Moss Pecaroe, a bandit...John Hopkins Directed by John B. Lasky.

The story: Harmony Wells, an American girl, goes to Paris to study the violin. With her money gone she is compelled to seek quarters in the pension house. There she becomes acquainted with Dr. Peter Byrne, an American surgeon studying abroad. The doctor falls in love with Harmony, but she places her career above love, and refuses his offer of marriage. Jimmy, the doctor's little cripple, patient is dangerously ill, and the boy asks Harmony to play for him. When it becomes known that he is near death, Harmony notifies his mother, a famous dancer, who deserted her husband and child for a career. Appealing to her to come home, but she arrives too late. Some time after the funeral and just about the 4th of July, Harmony is to make her professional début but she meets Jimmy's mother in the graveyard. The mother gives Harmony the values of life, the love of her career, and the values of love and sens. Sensing that genuine happiness does not at all times lie in possession of Harmony, Dr. Byrne, who is about to return to New York, and tells him that she has decided to become his wife.

Feature Doris Kenyon as Harmony Wells and Hugh Thompson as Dr. Peter Byrne.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Photoplay Based on the Successful Rinehart's Engaging Narrative. Another "Best Seller" Becomes Best of Photoplay Entertainment.
The Adventures of An American Girl in the Parisian Latin Quarter

Doris Kenyon introduced as screen version of Delphi, a work by Romantic Adventure. Picture will go into the screen version of a Famous Author's Best Narrative.

Stunt Suggestions: Make the usual double book or press book attractive and try for the literary societies if you have any. Advertise well in advance with special printer and newspaper special, teasing the latter with "How Long is the Street of Seven Stars?" varying with "Where Is It?" and similar phrases. Decorate the lobby with groups of seven gold stars, or use a dapper lamp post. "Seven Stars," painted where the street name should come, with a fist pointing into the house. The plot will give plenty of copy for press stories, and Mrs. Rinehart's name should be played up.

"A SUCCESSFUL ADVENTURE"

Metro Presents May Allison in the Story of a Little Southern Girl Who Had Pluck and Initiative.

Cast

Virginia ......... May Allison
Perry Arnold ......... Harry Hilliard
Lionel Houston ......... Frank Currier
Don J. Knoll ......... Howard Donnelly
Rose Mason ......... Christine Mayo
Aunt Louise ......... Kate Blanché
Henry Dubois ......... Fred Perry
Judy ......... Pauline Dempsey
Joshua ......... Anthony Byrd

The Story: Both Lionel and Daniel Houston, brothers, love Virginia. She marries Daniel, and Lionel, angered, leaves for Europe. When he acquires a great fortune, Daniel's money dwindles, and his wife dies when their daughter, Virginia, is born. Younger brother, Virginia, tries to effect a reconciliation between her father and his brother in order that her father might get the handsome bequest left in the will of an aunt on condition that he resume friendly relations with Lionel by answering the latter's advertisement for a cook. At his home she meets and falls in love with Perry Arnold, whom her uncle has adopted. Rose Mason feigns an affection for Perry to obtain Perry's confidence, from whom she expects to marry, the code book used by Lionel in communicating with his brokers regarding stocks. In the end, Virginia not only frustrates the attempt to secure the book, but also succeeds in her efforts to re-establish friendly relations between her father and uncle. The picture closes with Perry and Virginia planning an early marriage.

Feature May Allison as Virginia and Harry Hilliard as Perry Arnold.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Brothers united in Anger of Love's Disappointment Reunited When Love is at its Best Cook.

The Old South Sends Its Best Cook to Soften the Heart of Gouty Renegade, Cut Out the Sour Grapes from Man's Stomach to Soften His Heart.

Pretty Romance Contains Snappy Sensation to Heighten Interest.

Love and Adventure Mingle in Victorious Home and Delightful Love Story Tinged With Sensational Adventure.

Stunt Suggestions: For a side angle, offer a price for the receipt for the "Jumbellya" Judy prepares for Houston, or offer a price for the best Southern Recipes. In newspaper work advertise this as a departure from the usual type of languishing Southern girl. Use lithographs for window work.

"THE UNCHASTENED WOMAN."

Perfection Pictures Presents Grace Valentine in Louis K. Anspector's Highly Successful Stage Success, with a Notable Good Cast.

Cast

Caroline Knolleys .......... Grace Valentine
Misa Emily Madden .......... Mildred Manning
Sanbury .......... Catherine Towser
Susan Ambles .......... Edna Hunter
Muri Cat .......... Mrs. Martin
Agnes Murtha .......... Adelaide Barker
Hubert Knolleys .......... Frank Mills
Sutherland .......... Virginia
Krellin .......... Paul Panzer
O'Brien .......... Mike Donlin

Directora: Humphrey

The Story: Mrs. Caroline Knolleys, while traveling in Switzerland, starts a flirtation with Lawrence Sanbury, a young artist. Later, both move back in New York. Caroline tries to continue it. Sanbury begins to develop an infatuation for Caroline and although Mrs. Sanbury, whose work consists of ameliorating the conditions of the poor, observes it, she refrains from registering her objection for fear that her husband will lose the patronage of the wealthy woman. A dinner is given at the Sanbury home to the guests of the evening are Emily Madden and her fiancée, Michael Hilliard. Emily refuses to sit at the table with Emily on the ground that Emily is her husband's mistress. But her husband, who holds her former mistress in high esteem, exacts a retraction of the statement and Caroline leaves the house.

Feature Grace Valentine as Caroline Knolleys and Victor Sutherland as Lawrence Sanbury.

Stunt Suggestions: Make the greater portion of your appeal through the newspaper, giving emphasis to the fact that this is the real success of the stage. Point out that it is a play that made even the New York veteran first-timer sit up and take notice. Make a plentiful use of paper and try to post at least one twenty-four. Use the dying Stock of old cards, or your lobby display along with the stills.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one and three sheets. One style each, six and twenty-four sheets. Herald, Press book. Two styles each in column cut and double column advertisements. Slides. Lobby displays 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28.

"Have a heart"

Don't expect your Operator to do the impossible

"SEND THE SIMPLEX TWINS TO HELP YOUR OPERATOR"

They say the Operator can make or break the show. Maybe that’s so. We know he can break it. But he can’t make it if the Machines haven't got the stuff in them. True, he does his darnedest; you’ve got to give him credit for that.

We have a lot of respect for him. Also a lot of sympathy. That’s why we plead for the Operator at the top of this page. And, speaking of the picture: may it come true. Whatever helps your Operator, helps you.

The Operator welcomes the Simplex twins. With their help he knows he wins.

Sure Fire Helps to Success

The CHALMERS PUBLISHING CO., publishers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and CINE MUNDIAL, the leading trade papers devoted to the Motion Picture Industry, are also publishers of the only library of practical text books dealing with the cinema art adapted to the every-day needs of those already engaged in the business or about to engage in it.

These text books, six in number, have been written by men carefully selected for their proven knowledge of the subjects to be covered, being almost without exception veteran members of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD’S editorial staff; entirely without exception these men are at present actively engaged in the motion picture business—they are not dreamers or theorists.

Each text book has been written to provide real help to the individual who reads it—consistent with the unswerving policy of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD—a genuine “dedication to Service.”

THE LIGHT THAT GIVES MAXIMUM DEFINITION

SILVERTIP

THE NEGATIVE CARBON THAT INSURES PERFECT PROJECTION

The National Silvertip combination gives:
1. A strong, penetrating light. This light source has the highest intensity of any of the known illuminants used for motion picture projection.
2. Absolutely steady screen illumination free from flickering shadows. The small diameter of the Silvertip prevents the arc from wandering, thereby eliminating the flicker and negative shadows.
3. Pure white light. The light of the National Silvertip arc is an exact duplicate of daylight and brings out clearly the gradation of tone in the picture.

NOTE: Silvertips are for Direct Current only.

FOR ALTERNATING CURRENT PROJECTION
To obtain maximum screen definition on alternating current use White A. C. Special Carbons.
No change in equipment necessary.

4500 What?—4500 Monthly Readers
—and Growing Ever

Such is the circulation achievement as it stands on our books this July 1, 1918. For three years our total of readers has mounted upward, ever upward, and just now new plans are being worked out which will literally add new thousands to the list.

At times last year we printed a total monthly run of over 7,000 copies (including those sent gratis for missionary purposes) and on one occasion more than 8,000.

Unless all signs fail to materialize these circulation records will be surpassed in 1918

Winsor McCay's Blood Stirring Pen Picture

---------- the World's Only Record of the Crime that Shocked Humanity.

In this one reel is more human drama—more excitement—more pathos—more to look at and more to think about—more to thrill over and more to talk about than there is in any ten ordinary features of seven reels each.

Give your people this supremely wonderful reproduction, absolutely accurate to the uttermost detail and they will never forget the picture—nor the place where they saw it. Book it as you would book another "KAISER."

Jesse L. Lasky presents

Wallace Reid

in "The Firefly of France"

A Paramount Picture

By Marion Polk Angellotti

Scenario by Margaret Turnbull. Directed by Donald Crisp.

The Germans Were Battering Down the Door!

Trapped in the old chateau, the American aviator, the girl he loved, and the Firefly, France's hero, waited for the enemy who sought the secrets that one of these three possessed.

The girl. Was she a Hun spy? The American didn't believe it and he stepped forward to meet the attack!

That's Wallace Reid in the famous Saturday Evening Post story that is one of the tensest tales the war has inspired.
She Made Them Look Like Fools In Wilhelmstrasse

THE Prussian - Whose-Brain-Is-As-Withered-As-His-Arm calls No. 87" of the German Intelligence Service to get her orders.

Next scene: America.
"No. 87" is holding a poisoned knife at the very throat of America. She has gathered all the cracks of the German Secret Service to watch this country's blood flow.

Then a tremendous climax! Her Yankee whip snaps; Prussia's house of cards comes tumbling down and—

Your people stop at the door to ask, "When is the next Dorothy Dalton picture coming? They certainly are great!"

THOMAS H. INCE presents

Dorothy Dalton
in "The Kaiser's Shadow"

A Paramount Picture

Thomas H. Ince

A SPLENDID power working for finer motion pictures, a genius whose photoplays have made money for exhibitors throughout the world, a master producer—that is Thomas H. Ince who will release at least thirty-two of his star feature pictures through the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the year beginning September 1, next.

In addition, Mr. Ince will produce several special features.

William S. Hart, Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton, and Enid Bennett are the stars appearing in Thomas Ince's productions. Each is a name of tremendous box-office value, tremendous because Thomas H. Ince possesses the implicit confidence of exhibitor and patron. They know that "Ince Standard" means a standard set at the peak of excellence.

"To Hell With the Kaiser"
Strikingly Presented at the Broadway

Having returned from our vacation at 6:30 we were requested at 6:40 to go to the Broadway Theatre at 8:30. We liked "To Hell With the Kaiser" even better than Atlantic City. The title needs no explanation. It means just that literally, and they are doing it very satisfactorily on the screen. Would that the story were written in the past tense instead of in the future.

The picture was shown Sunday night for the first time, and it is doubtful if the old Broadway has had such a crowd since the days of the "Madam" song. Every one was there and every seat was filled. The stage boxes were fitted up like two little private halls. During the performance they were concealed by red velvet draperies, but in the final scene, where Mr. Hohenzollern returns to that particular bournes these curtains are drawn back and flames leap and dance in front of a background that is truly infernal. We thought that a realistic touch would have been to have Lawrence Grant, in his Kaiser's make-up, pushed down into this yawning furnace. It wouldn't have hurt him, because it wasn't real fire, but it looked hot enough to be an excellent substitute when heatless Mondays come again.

Lawrence Grant gave an interpretation of the Kaiser that was remarkable for its subtlety as well as for its uncanny physical resemblance to the world's best hated ruler. He is the best Kaiser we have seen. In fact, he is so good that we couldn't be surprised if no one ever spoke to him again. He plays a dual rôle, but the other man is a villain, too, an actor person who impersonated His Satanic Majesty when William himself wished to take a vacation. In that way Mr. Hohenzollern could direct one set of atrocities while his double directed another.

Olive Tell never looked so pretty as she did as "the girl," an American who is residing in Berlin with her father. When the story opens she is just leaving the convent in Belgium, where she has taken her younger sister, Betty Howe is the sister who remains in Belgium and is later attacked by the Crown Prince when the village is sacked.

The story does not pretend to be a history of the war, and the only things that are true are the atrocities which are committed by the Germans. These are always bound to be true. But it is intensely interesting and extremely well done. It is war melodrama at its best.

The man who portrayed the Crown Prince gave an excellent performance. He was so obnoxious that every one was delighted when he, too, got his deserts. Olive Tell shot him through the heart because he insisted on making love to her. The picture is released by Metro.

REMARKABLE FILM.

Scenes from "To Hell with the Kaiser" promise Unusual Film Achievement.

Some of the scenes of "To Hell with the Kaiser," the seven-act film drama to be presented at the Broadway Theatre to-morrow night, were revealed at a private showing yesterday to an audience made up of press representatives and persons directly concerned with the picture's pioneer.

-- The emphatic Americanism that speaks through the title of the picture has found expression in all of these scenes. The author, June Mathis, did not write her scenario on lavender-tinted paper, nor did the director, George Irving, forget that he was visualizing the greed and lust of the Potsdam gang that set out to get possession not only of Europe but of the United States. "To Hell with the Kaiser" is not a pacifist tonic. It is a patriotic epic.

With the introduction of a love story the picture magnifies the author's fancy with the facts of history. The war lords of Germany, presided over by Wilhelm of Hohenzollern, are shown planning the conquest of the world. To each is allotted a nation as a reward—the United States, reserved for the last, intended for the crown prince. The new historic incidents are shown in which Wilhelm tore up the treaty of Belgium, declaring it to be only "a scrap of paper" and acknowledging to the world that he disregarded all honor and decency. The sacking of Belgium, the burning of convents and the violation of nuns and young girls are indicated in a way that makes the blood boil with righteous indignation.

The adventures of an American family from the plot around which the romance centers. Prof. Monroe has perfected a wireless invention which the Kaiser is trying to obtain, but which he refuses to yield except to his own government. The professor secures his passports, and goes to Belgium to get his youngest daughter, Ruth, only to find her dying as the result of an assault on the convent by the crown prince and his men. He is shot down when he protests, and Alice, the older daughter, devotes her life to avenging her sister. Making use of her acquaintance with an actor, who is hired to impersonate the Kaiser, to keep his person safe from the crowds, she is introduced to the crown prince, and through him brings about the capture of the Kaiser.

A fleet of aeroplanes of the allied armies is shown in full battle with the enemy air force, making one of the most thrilling scenes ever shown on the screen. The Kaiser is ab ducted by Alice and the American aviator, Dodge, and taken into the presence of Gen. Pershing. Later, his appearance in the depths of hell is shown, and with the passing of his base soul, peace once more smiles upon the earth.

Scenes in the trenches are shown which will be of intense interest to every American community which has given sons to the great cause of humanity. The acting of Lawrence Grant as the Kaiser, Olive Tell as Alice, Betty Hawn as Ruth, Frank Currier as Prof. Monroe and John Sunderland as Dodge deserves special mention, though all the cast is good.

JULY EIGHTH.
THE 14,000 and more motion picture exhibitors of America owe a great deal to those producers who have put character and quality into their product.

If you, as an exhibitor, sought to build a permanent place for yourself in your community or section by depending upon sensational, poorly made and unhealthy pictures, you soon would be a bankrupt.

After all, there are only two kinds of motion pictures: The kind that build solidly, continuously and permanently. And, the kind that sap the reputation of your house; that undermine public confidence and liking.

There is either a big place in this industry for a quality company like Goldwyn, or no place at all. And the presence on the Goldwyn books of more than 5,000 active accounts reveals clearly the nation-wide exhibitor approval of Goldwyn.

Our productions and stars made their first great appeal to the women and children of America. They instantly increased the matinee patronage throughout the nation. They rapidly extended their vogue to the male patrons of the screen and to-day they have created in Goldwyn the strongest name and reputation value in the motion picture industry.

For the coming season, Goldwyn's stars and their screen-plays represent a concentration of Power. The power of Production. The power of Star Personality. The power of the coherent, well-told Story. The power of great Technical Achievement. And the power of the fair and equitable Sales Policy of the Goldwyn organization.

AMERICA'S most famous and popular native artiste. The power of her name and personality established still-unbroken records for thousands of theatres throughout the world. One of the few great stars of the screen; a remarkable dramatic actress. Returning again to the field of modern emotional drama as a Goldwyn star.

Miss Farrar's productions will reveal this glorious woman in present-day roles. They will make the most of her splendid abilities and will not sacrifice her beauty or identity in costume or pageant dramas. This series embraces more Geraldine Farrar pictures than have ever before been released in a single year.

THE author-favorite of the world’s strong-blooded races. Backed by five successive screen productions of unparalleled box-office power. Where annually he gave you one great profit-making picture from a famous Rex Beach story, he will now give you six of them in a year.

These vital Rex Beach productions provide, beyond question, the greatest series of pictures available to the American exhibitor during the coming year. They bear the most popular author-name the screen has ever known. Offered at prices that make these productions a remarkable "buy" for all exhibitors seeking packed houses.

The popular and beautiful star whose power and magnetism have been the basis of prosperity for thousands of exhibitors. Goldwyn will again present her in the type of emotional dramas that made her famous and established her as one of the great drawing cards of the screen.

Pauline Frederick's Goldwyn productions will reveal her as a woman of to-day, in gowns and fashions of to-day. The assets of her personality that have been sacrificed and overlooked are the very elements that Goldwyn is going to make the most of. She appeals to America's masses and classes.

EIGHT PRODUCTIONS

BEYOND question the greatest of screen comedienne. Without one rival in the entire field of comedy-drama. The element of comedy will be emphasized in all of her coming productions, thereby giving her millions of admirers the rollicking type of stories they expect from this star.

Mabel Normand has been described as "the star who never has to be introduced." This means that she has won public affection. You love her the moment you see her. Exhibitors have found that under the Goldwyn name she has held all of her old friends and at the same time won a tremendous new following.

GOLDSYN PICTURES CORPORATION

Ranking, without question, as the leading young emotional star of the screen. Raised to new heights of popularity and box-office drawing power under the Goldwyn name by being presented in such splendid successes as "The Cinderella Man," "Polly Of The Circus," "All Woman," "Money Mad," and "The Beloved Traitor."

Mae Marsh's Goldwyn productions for the coming season will give her bigger opportunities in emotional and romantic-drama and assure exhibitors still more profitable engagements than in her first great Goldwyn year. Goldwyn unhesitatingly says that last year Mae Marsh had more successful productions as a whole than any other star in motion pictures.
THE fresh, wonderful personality that provided exhibitors and the public with the one new star sensation in motion pictures last year. Her eyes and smile, her comedy and melodramatic farce won her a nation-wide audience instantly. She has brought new patrons into picture theatres everywhere.

For her new season's Goldwyn productions Madge Kennedy is being given more dramatic stories, without forfeiting her wonderful comedy talents. Miss Kennedy began her screen career by winning the nation's “matinee patronage.” Having captivated the women and children, she extended her vogue to the men. Several thousand exhibitors already rank her in the first six stars of the screen.
In Tom Moore exhibitors have a star of their own making and, incidentally, Goldwyn's first male star. We have been literally forced to make him a star at the demand of the theatre-owners of the country and the American public. His is the most pleasing romantic, athletic male personality in pictures.

Goldwyn is doing with Tom Moore what few producers have ever done before—offering him at moderate and attractive rentals to enable exhibitors from the start to make a big profit on his Goldwyn productions and to convey to the public the satisfaction that an exhibitor always feels when he is making a big profit on a star.
“Madge Kennedy in The Service Star Goldwyn’s Finest Achievement,” Says Harold Edel.

“NOT unmindful of the other beautiful and successful Goldwyn productions you have given us for presentation at The Strand, I now congratulate Goldwyn for making with MADGE KENNEDY in THE SERVICE STAR what is unquestionably your best production. It is a splendid story, excellently made.

“Madge Kennedy is one of the most popular stars presented in The Strand Theatre and it gives me great pleasure to express my own and The Strand’s approval of this wonderful star who scored such an immediate success on the screen.”

These are the words of the Managing Director of the first great motion picture Institution ever created in America—an institution that is a permanent tribute to the ideals and the foresight of the late Mitchel H. Mark.

In The Strand he made quality pictures and quality showmanship the dominant ideas, and as one of the last big negotiations of his active career he put Goldwyn Pictures in his nationally-famed theatre.

The Trade Press has its say on a dangerous practice

Moving Picture World
JUNE 15, 1918

Attention was called by J. D. Williams in an article published in these columns last week to the injustice of releasing old pictures (re-issues) under new titles. The practice deserves all the opprobrium heaped upon it by Mr. Williams and it is our inclination to emphasize all that he said. At the very least it is misrepresentation; a form of unfair trading upon the popularity of a name made popular by a competitor and one not followed by those who have a regard for the best form of business ethics. Not only that, for it serves to cheapen and to discredit, unnecessarily, the fame of the name upon which this unfair trading is carried on, so that in the end not only is the value of that name discredited, but the pictures which are issued under counterfeit titles are discredited likewise.

We used the word “unnecessarily” in the foregoing paragraph because we believe that it is unnecessary to change the name of an old picture in order to reissue it. If a picture made some time in the past is good enough to re-issue there is no occasion to change its name—the picture is its own recommendation—and a change of name is misleading and an insult to the intelligence of those who pay to see it. Briefly, the releasing agent who changes old titles to new is going out of his way to discredit his own business. An old picture that is good may be frankly put out as a re-issue and will be welcomed as such by an old friend by all who have seen it before; it will be as well received by those who have never seen it because it is good and because they have heard of it in terms of praise. But if it is re-issued under a new title with new sub-titles it is a deception, and its appearance will be resented by those who discover the fraud.

If the releasing agent insists in thus unnecessarily revising an old picture there is still less reason why the exhibitor should continue the fraud upon his audience. If the picture is good enough to go on his program there is no reason why it should masquerade under a false name. The exhibitor who lends himself to frauds of this sort discredits his house in the eyes of his patrons. Not that alone, but he aids in depreciating the value of the name of the player upon whom the fraud is practiced as well. No exhibitor who seeks to deal fairly with his patrons will be a party to such fraudulent practices.

Wid: Are You Square With Yourself?

It's no trick to be a crook!
Anyone can collect considerable coin if they care not how they do it.

Any boob can run a house for painted ladies and get rich . . .
but very few people think that much of money.

Do you keep your own cards on the table when you check up yourself?

Is it good business to cheat, no matter how you camoullage it, in dealing with the people who furnish your bread and butter?

Sooner or later they'll get you!

Re-issues of good films . . . like return dates of “Uncle Tom's Cabin” and “East Lynne” on the...
Do the exhibitors of this country want to be classed with quack doctors, patent medicine fakirs and bunco men?

Speaking stage . . . are one of the surest sources of real revenue for the fair-minded, square-shootin' showman. Just because some feller who has tried to get “his” quick without worrying about “how,” makes it possible for you to slip something over on your gang, is no reason why you should fall.

Always remember that the folks who spend their money with you hold you accountable. They know little, and care less, about who makes the film or how it's sold.

They only know that you show it and that they pay their money to you . . . and don’t overlook the fact that they have an idea that you are gettin' rich even though you may be barely breakin' even!

Showing old films under new names isn’t square-shootin'!

Using the old names in small type on the advertising, in order to have an alibi when someone kicks, isn’t goin’ to keep that irate cash customer from remaining “sore,” no matter what explanation you may give ‘em. If the stuff is good and worthy of playing again it’s worth showing on the square, under its original title.

If it’s worth while and has made friends, there are still enough in your community who have never seen it, and enough who will be willing to see it again, to check up into real business if you are showman enough to get ‘em in.

The whole problem centers upon two points: First, are you willing to try to grab without worryin' how you get it . . . which means a real loss of self-respect? Second, it’s generally bad business to deal “stacked” cards . . . because sooner or later they’ll “get” you!

Exhibitor’s Trade Review
JUNE 15, 1918

Speaking of re-issues:
Why change the name of a picture, on re-issue, that succeeded once under its own name?
J. D. Williams of the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit has said most of the things worth saying on this matter.

But here are some other interesting sidelights.
Royalty may travel incognito, but a good picture should be known for all it’s worth. Its name is one of its assets.

Aliases are all right for criminals, but a good picture has as much right to its name as a good woman.

If a picture is worth re-issuing at all, it is as good under its original title as the day it was released.

If it isn’t a good picture—why re-issue it?

Sound business judgment and a sense of fairness to exhibitors and public are against it.

The re-issue will be the salvation of this industry before normal conditions prevail again. And the concern that, consciously or unconsciously, vitiates its value, is hamstringing itself as well as hurting its fellow-concerns.

Motion Picture News
JUNE 22, 1918

First, we believe that re-issues under new titles—unless the old name is published with at least equal prominence—is very apt to mislead the public.

Misleading the public will serve to destroy its valuable confidence in the motion picture and the industry abck of it.

The existing statutes may define this style of advertising as fraudulent.

You can't gag a deceived patron. He's Sore!

The First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., 6 W. 48th St., New York, N. Y.
Wid says: "Any Boob can run a house for painted ladies, and get rich . . . but very few people think that much of money."

Furthermore, and of great importance, it is obvious that new pictures of famous stars cannot profitably be produced if old pictures are allowed to compete with them under what the public construes as a new name and therefore a new picture.

This, it is equally obvious, is destructive of the industry's normal and necessary development.

Secondly, and with equal emphasis, we point out that this controversy does not apply whatsoever to pictures properly re-issued.

Picture Play
THE HART REISSUES

William S. Hart has published a strong letter asking exhibitors not to book certain productions being sold by "The W. H. Productions company," with which he has no connection. Hart asserts that these are old pictures, being sold under new names, and that the public, seeing them advertised, thinks the pictures are new ones. The public, of course, suffers. So does Hart.

We know nothing of the merits of the controversy. We do know that Hart does not object to the Triangle re-issues, which are not renamed. His newest pictures, of course, are Artcraft's.

It does seem, however, hardly fair to change the name of a picture, once it has been produced.

If it is legitimate, however, we have stepped in to protest out of turn. We apologize. But if it is all right to do this with pictures, why couldn't a publisher put a new binding on O. Henry's "The Four Million," and sell it as O. Henry's "The Heart of New York?"

It's the same thing, isn't it?

Nailing a Slander:

Re-titled re-issues are not and never have been handled by First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchanges as was intimated in a recent advertisement in the M. P. News.

The "First National" is out to protect the reputations of the great stars who are largely responsible for the popularity of Motion Pictures and will continue to agitate the question regardless of whose pocketbook it affects.

FOR several weeks members of the Advisory Board have been discussing the question of long and short features. To a considerable extent this is dealt with in theory, but at the Rivoli last week S. L. Rothapfel is proving that a presentation can be put over without one of the so-called features and that the audience will be delighted with the result.

Of course, the Marine flying pictures made under the direction of Lieut. Rothapfel, form the featured part of the program—and they are wonderful pictures as you will hear later—but there was only a few feet more than three reels of these. The only other picture besides the scenic, the animated picture and the animated was a two reel O. Henry story. And let us say here now that the applause that greeted this picture at the end has been equalled by few of the longer features that we have seen presented at either of the Rothapfel houses.

It certainly proves so far as audiences are concerned at the Rivoli that the length of the picture counts for little, if quality is there. "I never consider length in buying a picture," said Mr. Rothapfel several weeks before he had arranged this bill and the current presentation proves that this does not have to be considered provided all of the other elements are incorporated in the bill. And it proves, if possible, even stronger than any other presentation that we have seen the necessity of the combination of music and the picture to get the best results—and that the music is essential to every sort of picture.

And aside from any question as to how long feature pictures should be, exhibitors will do well to arrange such a bill as this now and then. It is a decided relief from the usual performance and your patrons will appreciate it as an added spice to their amusement diet.

O. HENRY STORIES

NEW YORK'S newspaper critics showed a surprising willingness to depart from the stereotyped style of daily review in treating of S. L. Rothapfel's experiment with a diversified program of short subjects at the Rivoli last week.

In particular it is pleasing to note that they accorded the two reel O. Henry subject which shared honors with the exclusive marine picture—treatment similar to that accorded the usual lengthier feature.

We of the industry might expect this as a matter of course. But there has always been doubt expressed as to the general public's willingness to accept anything less than a full evening's entertainment as a "feature." In the reflection of that public's views given by New York's papers there is cause for congratulation to Vitagraph and Manager Rothapfel.

Let the O. Henry Stories solve that Summer Program Problem for you. They are the greatest series of human, heart interest stories ever produced.

It played New York's famous Rivoli to big houses and constant gales of laughter. It plays San Francisco's Rialto for one week, having been booked on its merits. It received the unqualified praise of Will's Magazine in a review that was positively enthusiastic.

If you knew as much about the picture as we do you would book it sight unseen. If you would take a little of your time and SEE it on the screen you would lose no time in booking it. It's a peach!

The recent dedication of the Israel Orphanage Asylum, 274 East Second Street, New York, Virginia Pearson was selected by popular vote to deliver an address to thousands of her admirers on the East Side. The applause which greeted her appearance again proved the popularity of this world-renowned dramatic artist who stands second to none. It gave thousands of men, women and little children not only the chance to see but to hear their beloved idol.

Her unquestioned genius as a screen artist, her many charitable deeds of kindness, her lovable democratic American methods, have won for her a place in the hearts of the people which she amply deserves.

Miss Pearson's speech on this occasion was one of fervor, pathos and humor. It was given with a charm and force of character which called forth the sincere approbation of Ambassador Gerard to whom America and the Allies owe so much. Nathan Straus, that benefactor of mankind and saviour of little children, also paid tribute to this gracious woman.

Out Every Wednesday

Fresh, crisp, and crackling with the last minute news of the moving picture industry. In the hands of every moving picture man in New York and adjacent territories the same day it comes from the presses and at hand for every moving picture man in the country a few days later to guide him in the conduct of his following week's business. A greater flexibility than ever before in our mechanical handling enables us to accept trade announcements up until the very last minute for dissemination throughout the industry.

And remember, there is none of the "hit-or-miss" policy in the conduct of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. What some other publications in the same field maintain it is impossible to do, we are doing constantly as a mere matter of service to our advertisers and readers—and we don't find it even difficult. It is little things like this that explain that great degree of confidence which the picture trade generally are constantly expressing in this leading trade paper which was born with the industry and has grown up with it. For authentic information in all branches of the moving picture trade you owe it to yourself to read the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. To the present business which you cherish and to the future which you hope it will have you owe it to support the one trade publication in the field which has never swerved from its determination to build the moving picture industry of the future upon a sound, high principled foundation and thereby accomplish "the greatest and most lasting good for the greatest number of people."

Publicity—What Is It?

Wide Discussion of a Highly Speculative Subject by the Leading Motion Picture Publicity Men—Many Interesting and Instructive Opinions Expressed.

The Beginnings of Motion Picture Publicity.

By JAMES L. HOFF.

When any man sits himself down before his typewriter and clicks off the flat statement that "Mr. So-and-So was absolutely the first to do this or that" he is planting seed for a fine crop of come-backs, but in this life everything goes in epochs, so the writer declares at the outset that he is dealing with things pertaining to the present epoch of the motion picture, which after all is the only one worthwhile and that consequently leaves no chance for any pre-Edisonite picture man to butt in. Having thus effectually laid the troublesome ghost of any neolithic cinematographer which might raise itself to confute this statement the croix de plume, or the nom de la bull, of the picture business, if that please you better, is handed to Robert H. Cochrane, then, as now, attached to the establishment of which Carl Laemmle is the head, the first man to write "publicity" for pictures.

It was back in 1906 that Mr. Cochrane entered upon the career that brought him to where he is now, and he started in by causing Mr. Laemmle to declare in Gothic type, "I am the greatest man in the film business." Well do I remember the copy that came into the office of a western amusement publication carrying that statement. It was the beginning of a definite and determined effort to popularize a motion picture man—and it succeeded.

Prior to that time motion picture publicity consisted of printing the lists of titles of pictures this, that or the other film importer or manufacturer had for sale at so much a foot. Sometimes the advertiser would add a few lines of description to give the expected buyer an idea of what it was about, but Mr. Laemmle was the first man to hire an out-and-out publicity man to tell the trade that he knew more about films than all the rest. That man was Bob Cochrane, a Chicago advertising agent.

Several years ago an advertising expert wrote the words "Keeping everlastingly at it brings success." Laemmle and Cochrane are the answer.

It was a long time before any other company, either manufacturer or renter, undertook anything like a definite campaign of advertising or publicity. Get the distinction: Advertising is conceded generally to mean display announcements which are written by an ad writer; publicity is considered to be text matter that is written by a press agent. The display is paid for and the publicity is not. The press agent's claim to usefulness was in his ability to get lots of "publicity" for nothing, and many of them still hold their jobs on the strength of the quantity of space they can grab from the guileless editors of trade and other.
could always get space in the daily papers when he wanted it. Epes Sargent also did some work for Vitagraph and Lubin. Whatever else was printed was picked up by the reporters of the several amusement papers existing during the early days of the picture business.

The seeming slowness of the picture makers and dealers to publicize their product was not altogether due to lack of initiative on their part. It was the lack of a medium of publicity. The daily newspapers could see nothing in the business. No one believed that it would last. With the exception of two the amusement publications did not reach the class which was interested in pictures, so there was almost no place to print news about pictures. The first break in this situation was made by Vitagraph and Pathe when those companies joined to publish the first house organ of the trade, "Views and Films Index"; but of course that paper was made up of the announcements of those companies only. After it, however, came the Moving Picture World, and then the campaign was begun.

The bulletin was the first definite form of publicity adopted by the manufacturers. It was a small sheet, varying from 6 inches by 8 inches to the size of a letter sheet, and carried an engraving from a scene in the picture and a description of that picture. The Edison company enlarged upon this idea by issuing a beautifully printed and illustrated booklet of its releases twice a month. Little items of news about Edison pictures and players were included in this publication, which was the idea of L. C. McChesney, advertising manager of the Edison company.

This idea was adopted quite generally by the manufacturers, and for some time constituted the greater part of their publicity.

About this period the Vitagraph company engaged Sam Spedon as its advertising manager, and he was among the first, if not the first advertising managers employed by any picture manufacturer. From that time on publicity commenced to establish itself in the business. Pathe engaged a publicity man named McCowan, followed later by H. C. Hoagland. Under Mr. Hoagland's direction Pathe publicity took on proportions. William Wright, sales manager of the Kalem company, conducted most of the publicity for that concern. Ben Schulberg started writing publicity for the old Rex company, and on the record he made there he was appointed publicity man for the Famous Players company when that concern was organized by Adolph Zukor.

When the Motion Picture Patents Company was organized something of a publicity campaign was started. Frank Winch was first engaged, but soon gave way to Chester Beecroft, who held that position for some time. The work was discontinued owing to the aversion of the president of the company to publicity of any kind.

Some time later Mr. Beecroft was engaged as publicity man for the General Film Company, but the policy of secrecy eventually put a stop to his activities there.

During this period the most persistent campaign of publicity was conducted by the Imp company, under which trade name Mr. Laemmle conducted his manufacturing business. Bob Cochrane was the man behind the gun, and for the first time motion picture players were featured in public print. It was Imp publicity that made Mary Pickford famous.

About the same time Vitagraph began to feature Florence Turner and Maurice Costello in its publicity, together with other of its leading players, and a new angle of publicity was started.

Real picture publicity was developed mainly by the so-called independent manufacturers of the early days. The Patents company and its affiliated interests were opposed to giving any news about their players, and very little was printed concerning their plans, all of which information was necessary to a well-rounded publicity campaign. This gave the independents a great advantage and told in their favor in the final analysis.

Publicity on a large scale was introduced probably for the first time by the Mutual Film Corporation. When it was organized a house organ called the "Mutual Observer" was issued, which was edited by H. J. Streycmans. This was later changed to "Reel Life." Under the direction of Philip Matinil a news service to daily and weekly papers all over the country was started, and much valuable information about Mutual pictures was printed. Arthur James succeeded Mr. Matinil in the conduct of this campaign, and finally Terry Ramseye, who now holds the position, took charge. It was while Harry Aitken was president of Mutual that the first use of magazine space for motion pictures began.

With the advent of new companies, which multiplied at this time, the ranks of the publicity men increased, and as many of the new-comers were theatrical press agents theatrical methods were introduced. Harry Reichenbach came into the game with the Jesse L. Lasky Photoplay Company and gave the trade its first press book from his experience of several years with theatrical producing companies. Mr. Reichenbach was afterward with the All-Star company, then to Metro, the World Film and several others. Arthur James went to Metro after he left Mutual, and is still conducting the publicity of the Metro company. Leander Richardson followed Reichenbach at the World Film and remained until the time of his death, when Lee Kugel, an experienced theatrical promoter, joined that concern and is now in charge of the publicity department.

Probably the first posters used were put out by Pathé for the "Passion Play," which appeared in the early days of motion pictures. Afterward Vitagraph was the first to issue posters with each release. E. G. Hedden of that company had charge of this work and got quite artistic effects with a combination of block designs, type and zinc half-tones from scenes of the play advertised. For a long time old stock posters, made at some time for theatrical productions and left on the shelves of the lithograph companies, were dug up and "stripped" with picture titles and so made to serve the demand of the theater managers for posters. Of course these posters seldom, if ever, fitted the scenes of the picture they were adapted to, but they served.

The first definite poster service made to fit the picture was known as the "A. B. C." poster, made in Cleveland by a man named Brewer. A. B. C. posters were all one-sheet in size and were sold direct to the exhibitor. From this beginning posters for pictures developed rapidly to the present proportions.

The popularity of individual players with the public and the desire to make others popular led the picture makers to issue large quantities of photographs and photographic reproductions by various processes for general distribution. Engravings were furnished to newspapers in large numbers to accompany stories about the play and the players. Thus the work of the picture publicity man became a real and highly important job, conducted for the most part by men of experience and knowledge of the business.

What motion picture publicity is and should be is discussed in all its diversified phases by our contributors in this issue. All of them are well and favorably known to the trade. The importance of their efforts is not to be lightly esteemed. They are the men who have animated the trade body and given it expression.

It would be impossible to mention all who have, at one time or another, wielded the typewriter in behalf of some struggling or successful motion picture company for their name is legion and space will not encompass them all. It should be mentioned, though, that woman, God bless her, has at least one successful press agent in the world of pictures. Her name is Mabel Condon, known from coast to coast. Miss Condon has never represented a regular producing company, but her efforts have been particularly active in behalf of the individual players.

Six Axioms on Publicity

By Arthur James.

1. Sixty per cent of the show business, and ours is a show business, is publicity.

2. Point out to me the exhibitor who knows how to advertise his pictures and I'll introduce you to a success.

3. General magazine advertising for motion pictures is an interesting method of throwing money out the window.

4. Expensive advertising plan books, with gold embossed covers and thick creamy paper, held nobody but the printer.

5. The local newspaper is the direct contact medium, and for motion pictures is unquestionably the right thing to use.

6. Unless the exhibitor is willing to advertise his show nobody can save him.
Beginning of Motion Picture Press Agenting

First Picture Publicity Man, Now Universal Vice President, Tells How He Started All the Trouble—Says Publicity Is Improving

W HEN I first took up publicity and advertising work in the moving picture field some ten or eleven years ago, I had easy going, because, as someone said the other day, I was the first advertising man in the business.

It is not such easy going today because the industry numbers among its members some of the most brilliant advertising and publicity men in the country. In fact, I do not know of any business in which the advertising shows such cleverness, both in idea and display.

About ten years ago, when I got my first glimpse of moving picture trade paper advertising, I was struck with the fact that it was years behind the times. In those days we used to see full pages devoted to the mere announcement, "Films to Rent," with not a word about the films, the actors, the quality of the goods or anything in the way of a selling talk. The advertisers did not speak of advertisements; they spoke of them as "cards."

With a virgin field of that sort in which to work, I said to Mr. Laemmle on the first day that he and I entered into partnership: "Not a single man in the business is doing any real advertising. If you will let me handle the publicity and advertising in my own way I can make you the best known man in the picture business."

"I'll not interfere," replied Mr. Laemmle.

"Will you stand for anything I do or write?" I asked.

"Anything," he replied. "The whole thing is in your charge. I rely on your judgment and your promise to handle the advertising in a way that will make it profitable."

In all my advertising experience I have never found a client like that. Many of them had promised to let me cut loose and smash precedent to pieces, but they had lost their nerve. But, to the everlasting credit of Mr. Laemmle, he stuck through thick and thin and stood for many things that I would not have signed with my own name.

He was game. I made statements over his name that at times threatened to make him appear ridiculous. I started off with the most blatant statements I could think of. The advertisements were worded in such a way as to make him appear pugnacious and vain, insufferably vain—anything to arrest attention. One of the first announcements said in effect:

"I, Carl Laemmle, am the most important man in the film business. I know more about films than anybody. I know what your exhibitors need better than you do.

I know how to interest the public better than you do, and I will teach you how to do it. All this will be part of my service."

Week after week we hammered away with this sort of drool. We used cartoons. Then we began to employ some of the best artists in Chicago and New York to make drawings to illustrate the ads. We published a series of ads boosting Florence Lawrence and next Mary Pickford and King Baggot and other players as fast as we added them to our staff.

Such crazy advertising coming into a field in which the most sensational announcement had been "Films to Rent" had a good deal the effect of a bombshell. At first it was laughed at and ridiculed. Then, as the former kings of the industry began to see that the Laemmle business was growing in a sensational manner, they began to rear up on their dignified hind legs and say that such methods were a shame and a disgrace. After that they cast about for advertising men and publicity men to boost their goods in the same fashion. They wanted some "shame and disgrace" of their own.

It was fun. It was never work. It was simply circus stuff, but it was applied to a business that was behind the times as far as advertising was concerned, and it worked. It stood the acid test in that it brought results.

Then came the big fight with the old film Trust. We attacked them week after week, proving to the exhibitors that we knew what the old trust was trying to do and showing them how to protect themselves.

We won the confidence of the exhibitors and hundreds of them took sides with us when they were risking their very bread and butter in doing so. I have always said, and I still say, that the old trust could have licked us to a finish if they had employed the power of publicity as much as we did. Instead, they took the stand of "dignified silence." Never in the history of the industry was there a time when a good advertising man could have accomplished so much for his employer as the advertising manager of the old trust could have done if he had been given a free hand. But he was all muffed up with "dignified silence"—and everybody knows the result.

I believe we were the first to start the plan of furnishing the newspapers and magazines with studio items and stories, as well as photographs or cuts of the various actors. At any rate, I know we had a good stiff battle before we could convince the editors that the public would be interested in that sort of news. One after another they saw the light, until now only the practically dead newspapers refuse to recognize the fact that the public is eager to read screen news.

Present-day publicity methods are a vast improvement over those of a few years ago, but there's still room for improvement and it is coming fast. A recent discussion carried on in the columns of the Moving Picture World shows that not only the film publicity and advertising men, but the moving picture editors of various newspapers are becoming aroused to the fact that we are all still guilty of weak methods.

For example, every moving picture studio is fairly alive with genuine news. If a newspaper man were turned loose in any live studio he could gather columns of good hot stuff. One trouble about the newspaper man, however, lies in the fact that as soon as a picture company employs him for this purpose he becomes imbued with the corporation spirit instead of the newspaper spirit. The result is that he soon becomes converted from a reporter into a publicity man and colors his news in too rosy a fashion. This has happened to us many times in spite of the fact that we give our publicity men carte blanche to handle the news in a news fashion.

Ever since I gave up the active work of handling the publicity and advertising personally my instructions to our publicity men have been to cut loose and handle the real news in their own way, the only restriction being to avoid making any statement that the company cannot back up. This works out better in theory than in practice, but it is improving all the time. It is not only the publicity men who are improving in this respect, but the corporations themselves. And it has been harder for the corporations to learn the lesson than it has for the publicity men.

Fortunately for me, Mr. Laemmle was born with an advertising sense. He knows the benefits of advertising and has demonstrated his knowledge of its benefits by the money he has invested in it. If our advertising campaigns had not had his hearty support, if he had lost his advertising nerve, if he had been afraid of doing new things, or if he had not made scores of brilliant suggestions, the advertising would have fallen as flat as hundreds of campaigns that have been ruined in all lines of business because the advertising man did not have the proper backing.

The “Up Forward” Publicity Man

By Fred Schaefer.

This being one of the rare occasions when the Moving Picture World solicits more copy from the publicity pen it is like being invited to a feast. In fact, it amounts to a direct bid to make a little after-dinner speech on paper. We shall try to make it cheery and optimistic and profoundly helpful.

The leading thought in a motion picture publicity purveyor’s mind often is: “Where am I heading?” More plainly, he asks himself: “Am I going to step up forward, or am I going to get off?” Generally he is such a versatile chap that he could get off and probably do better. But everything else being equal I should advise him to stay on and move forward.

What makes him hesitate about things is the apparent nerve-racking mortality among motion picture prospects. They come on in waves and the next moment there are winrows of still forms, and yet the conflict rages and things continue to happen.

Probably he see three classes of motion picture producers of contrasting methods.

The first is the casual kind of producer, who figures only upon the cost of his negative. All which comes after that finds him unprepared.

The second provides both for the cost of production and for the positive prints needed to afford physical circulation of his picture. But somehow he stops here.

The third has gone ahead, knowing exactly what it will cost for his production and his positive prints, and for marketing and advertising besides. He has a broad conception of his objects and of the conditions that prevail in moving a product. Incidentally, this man may spend more money than another, but he will waste less.

The last named man is far-seeing. He knows where he will finish. He is like the occasional individual who builds a house within the estimate—who has begun by putting everything into the specifications.

Half of the tragedies of motion picture adventuring no doubt are due to the errors in production, but the other half easily can be blamed upon lack of margin allowed for merchandising and publicity. All the money has been spent upon the picture, and when the added expense of properly marketing it is encountered the house of cards tumbles. In many cases it is at once evident that the returns cannot justify the total cost that will be involved, and the production is either sacrificed for less than the amount already invested or a desperate attempt is made to realize by dint of recapitalization and feverish promotion, whereas in the first place a competent survey of the entire route to be traveled would have insured the whole venture reasonable chances of profit.

One may ask what all this has to do with a publicity man and his activities. I hold that a publicity man is only nominally useful unless he can look upon a motion picture project comprehensively and profoundly; be able to advise the inexperienced or to hold his own with the expert. Indeed, if he has seen the inside of production and comprehended it and has cooperated in sales campaigns and delved in distribution practice, accumulating thus a priceless knowledge to add to his more ornamental gifts, such a publicity man is a gem. Such a one can pilot a venture from origin to fruition and make every move count. Such a one becomes ripe for high office. He is different from those who can do no more than take the jag end of a bank roll and ease its last moments.

It is merely an argument in favor of deep, serious study of the motion pictures business by its publicity staffs which I am urging. The publicity man’s opportunities are unlimited and brilliant for improvement, for amassing practical knowledge and for applying it. The probability that he is more often than not underrated, the possibility that in this industry he has sometimes to see his best inspirations neutralized or ignored, does not matter. If he profits by the immense facilities for learning all those unnumbered lessons which others persist in not learning he will get on. The picture magnate of tomorrow will be the man who can guide or handle intelligently the capital that waits to be assured of normal existence in the industry—the capital that is coming in to stay.

In fact, I want to predict that the magnate of tomorrow will be the publicity man of today; and I dare say that, true to form, he will be very much averse to talking a great deal about himself.
Function of Advertising in Distribution

Mutual Director of Publicity Discusses Policies and Methods—Discourages General Advertising of Brand:

LET us consider some primary facts. There are two kinds of motion picture advertising.
A—Advertising to sell film to the exhibitor.
B—Advertising to sell seats to the public.
It is principally about the Class A, or distributor to exhibitor advertising, that we are concerned here. I am seeking to make clear to the exhibitor, and any others interested, what he should do but rather what is being done to and for him in advertising.
Now let us sub-divide our Class A advertising, the advertising in behalf of the producer and distributor. Looking into it further we find:
1.—Advertising to present the merchandise, the picture.
2.—Advertising to make the picture appear a success—a sort of post-mortem jubilee intended to foster immortality.
3.—Advertising addressed apparently at the exhibitor or the public but in fact intended for the banker and investor, to keep up a front and maintain credit and borrowing power.
4.—Advertising to keep a star happy, or to promote a president or a general manager or other official in influence.
5.—Advertising just to be advertising, because everybody has the impression that a picture concern ought to do a lot of advertising.
Contrary to many hasty opinions, all of these classes of advertising enumerated, except the fifth and last, are usually amply justified commercially.

The motion picture did not become a business until it began to advertise. It is a better business today because it is a vigorous, perhaps often violent advertiser.

Something like six years ago a big advertising agency sent me to a very high official of a then dominant factor in the motion picture industry to mildly suggest to him that advertising might help his business. He listened about half a cigarette and, then looking me coldly in the eye, remarked:

"Young man, advertising is fandangle and a luxury which we can afford but do not need. If we should advertise and should get more business we would be much distressed. Let us not waste any more of each other's time."

This big man was sincere. He is now exceedingly well unknown and his concern is a commercial ghost.

Competitors arose who did advertise—anybody today in the picture business can write the rest of this paragraph for himself.

For the purpose of advertising to present the pictures to the exhibitor's attention—No. 1 in our schedule—there are four commonly used media; the trade paper, the direct broadside or circular, the local newspaper and the billboards.

The obvious absurdity of using costly billboards and newspaper space to reach the relatively few exhibitor readers is glossed over most frequently by an attempt to make the space appear to be devoted to the establishment of brand value in the public eye, among ultimate consumers. But the everlasting final fact is there, that the advertiser is using the space with the single aim of inducing the exhibitor to pay rental for film.

Upon the evidence now available no advertiser has yet been able to make motion picture brand value stand up in the attention of the public or exhibitor to a profitable degree. If anybody steps up to point a disputing finger at certain brand names I shall be forced to point back at the stock quotation and dividend records.

This is not a failure of advertising, but rather a fact of manufacture. Motion pictures can be branded but they can not be made to a brand standard, at least they have not yet been so made.

If picture brands had important value big stars and special productions could not dominate the market. The name of the star is the nearest thing to a brand in the picture business, but stars have a way of slipping out from under brand control.

Picture patrons do not call up the box office and ask if you have a Burr Oak brand feature. They want to know "Who have you got on to-night?"

Also it must be admitted that billboards and newspapers can have but small and indirect part in the selling of motion pictures to the exhibitor. I do not mean to decry either the billboards or the newspapers as media— they have a big basic value to the exhibitor, and beyond doubt the newspaper is the best existing medium for exhibitor advertising, the advertising which sells seats to the public.

With thus disposing of two of the media sometimes used—less frequently now than formerly—we have left two other avenues to the exhibitor's attention, the trade paper and literature mailed direct.

Direct literature is not just now as fashionable as it was two years ago. There is a prevailing notion that the motion picture exhibitor has gotten and still gets so much of this matter that he has adopted a practise of ignoring it all in self-defense. Experiment and investigation by the advertising experts of many concerns indicate that this notion is probably well founded. A piece of direct literature sent out in 1915 to 20,000 exhibitors drew the astonishing total of 3,000 replies or inquiries. A similar broadside, probably much better as advertising copy, prepared by the same man, mailed to 14,000 exhibitors in 1917 drew a total of twenty-five replies.

I am not sure the second one was wasted, since the proposition is said to have sold well, and the circular may have had a considerable introductory value, but most assuredly it was not the sensational success that the 1915 circular was. Probably the time is near at hand when the direct broadside can profitably go to work again for a while.

This leaves us with the trade paper to discuss. The trade paper, much debated and often berated, remains as the only medium which has been a consistent and continuous performer for the motion picture advertiser.
Probably every exhibitor whose business is worth considering reads one trade paper at least and dips into several on occasion.

It is certain that any proposition which is intelligently set forth in the advertising pages and editorial columns of the trade press becomes instantly known throughout the industry and to all exhibitors, in a degree very significantly related to its news value.

All real advertising is news in a sense. No other business has as much news in it as the picture business.

Every trade paper which presents the news of the business and gives service to any considerable number of exhibitors is a good medium—just as good as its exhibitor-reader circulation, which is probably very close to its paid circulation.

The exhibitor who reads a trade paper is interested in his business. His business is likely to be worth having. The advertiser may get some of that exhibitor's business if the advertising tells a plain effective merchandising story about a good product.

The problem is a much simpler one than a great many buyers of space ever suspected. Experience is slowly proving this and bringing an improved appearance in the advertising sections of the trade press.

Every once in a while some exhibitor takes his pen in hand to write to the advertising department of some picture concern to remark that a lot of money is being wasted in "colored inserts" in the trade press, or to offer a similar advertising criticism. The exhibitor feels that he is paying for the advertising. He is—assuming that the distributor-advertiser does business at a profit. However, commercial experience has proved that in any competitive line of merchandise whatever, the manufacturer-distributor who refuses to advertise seldom achieves a volume of business which permits a maximum of value in the product.

A good product calls for good advertising.

The distributor of pictures who is bashful in his advertising is likely to have something of which he is not extremely proud.

The distributor's advertising is to him as the lobby to the theater. If the show inside is not up to the screen test neither the lobby nor the advertising can long get the money. But that is no argument against using them if the goods can be delivered inside.

The picture concern which inspires good advertising made of good printing on good paper is more likely to offer a worthy screen production than the company which makes its announcements on pages which look like a shipping clerk's stencil.

Advertising Feature Subjects
By Robert Priest.

ADVERTISING a feature compares favorably with the preparation of a meal. A chef, with the same raw material as another cook, will serve a meal fit for the gods, whereas the other will merely "get by" with a meal. This is only another way of repeating the old truism: "Every man to his trade." The meanest advertising man, provided he has made a study of his business, will prove more effective with his "copy" than the brightest college graduate who is unfamiliar with the art.

The world is full of mediocre press agents, as it is full of ordinary workmen in every art, science, industry and profession. That is why we acclaim the expert when he springs into the limelight. Frequently a live-wire press agent, backed by a wide-awake foresighted manager or producer, will launch a campaign that startles even the old-timers. One does not have to tax the memory very severely to recall several spectacular instances attesting this fact.

We all remember features that started off like a house afire and then degenerated into a mere flash in the pan. That is what may be termed short-sightedness in the matter of exploitation. One might as well save his money as to dab a little bit here and a little bit there in a half-hearted amateurish way. That is, so far as getting any big returns or any substantial results are concerned. Generalities or flash advertising never made anything popular or created a demand for it.

Every student of the motion picture knows more than one feature that would have "gone over" equally as big as "My Four Years" or "Tarzan of the Apes" if their management had been foresighted and game. And on the other hand, we can easily assign the reason why conspicuous success was achieved by other features. For instance, J. J. McCarthy and his constituents staked their last dollar and every ounce of energy on the premiere of "The Birth of a Nation" and their foresightedness and sportsmanship are what achieved the unparalleled success. The two-dollar ticket had to come—but who suspected it? Try to think of some other manager who would have had the nerve to put "The Birth of a Nation" in the Liberty Theater at two dollars a ticket. I know some pretty big theatrical managers who thought the people who were trying to put this particular feature over at two dollars were fit subjects for the observation ward. But after the first night—

Look at "Bill" Parsons and Harry Reichenbach; they put "Tarzan of the Apes" over, not because it was "Tarzan of the Apes," but because they were foresighted and game. Just now the town, and in fact the whole industry, is talking about "Cecilia of the Pink Roses." Why? Not because it is "Cecilia." Whoever put that feature over worked like the staff of Cosmopolitan Magazine. There was an extraordinary instance of wonderful variety dovetailed to a pyramiding base and it had the effect of creating the demand sought.

Advertising is not so terribly difficult as one might lead you to believe. Think about it for a minute. Where is the director who would begin the production of a feature without a scenario or a working plot? That is all that is required for a successful publicity campaign. Figure out in advance what you want and must have and then follow your schedule. It is as simple as one, two, three. But first know what you want and what you are aiming at and then select your cast (?) writer, artist (for creating designs), and a "head" to place the copy.

Don't envy the other fellow—if you haven't initiative—imitate him. We have several good models in the film industry.
How Shall I Advertise Pictures

Metro Pictures' Publicity Director Advises Simple, Strong Effects With Maximum of Smash and Minimum of Copy

PUBLICITY is not a business, it is a profession; it is not a science, it is an art, and it begins and ends with an understanding of human nature. With motion pictures the publicity problems are peculiar and especial because the screen itself is the greatest advertising medium in the history of the world. In securing publicity for motion pictures the task is one of interesting and inducing the public to come into the theater. After that the pictures are their own greatest advertisers, and no newspaper or group of newspapers can compare with the screen itself.

There never up to date has been any successful advertising or publicity for brands of pictures with the exception of two types of comedies. There is no such thing today as a standardized show in a picture house and, therefore, the star system has been in vogue. The best that exhibitors have been able to do is to establish a reputation for their houses in the matter of the class and type of pictures shown because no brand name, exclusive of the show itself, will fill a theater. The problem of the exhibitor, therefore, lies in the exploiting of a show as a show, booming its merits and acquainting his public with the nature and quality of the goods he has to present.

To begin with, I do not believe that the public is seriously interested in the name or personality of a manufacturer or distributor of motion pictures. There is a trade interest, but not a public interest. Some interest attaches to the personality of the director, if he be a very great director, but the rest of the interest lies in the play itself and the persons who perform in it.

My suggestion, therefore, to all exhibitors is to forget entirely to mention the personality of the head of the manufacturing or distributing concern and use the space to better purpose. Personally, I never have been called upon to sound the praises of any business individual in authority in the two great companies I have been privileged to represent, and I have the greatest sympathy for those good men and true, my brothers in a great profession, who have been required, under penalty of complete disfavor, to toot eternally about President Sniffins or General Manager Bullthrow as gigantic figures in the mighty industry of motion pictures. I have been unusually favored by an association with business men who were too hard-headed to care about the empty sounding of their personal praises.

There are several simple rules which all publicity men who know their business are bound to follow. Chief of these are strength and simplicity in advertising both to the trade and to the public. Originality is a gift the gods bestow, but striving after simple, strong effects, with a maximum of smash and minimum of copy is a thing by which the everyday man can secure reasonably satisfactory results.

Another simple rule is to avoid hackneyed and meaningless phrases, originating in the advertising agencies, such as "service" and the like. Perhaps the word service meant something once upon a time, but it has come to be the hallmark of the trickster or the incompetent.

Another rule is the avoidance of needless waste in the matter of accessories to advertising. One of these is the so-called plan book, sales book or campaign book. Of any ten of these put out today by motion picture companies at least eight are precisely alike except in the matter of cover and type. They constitute a tremendous waste of money in a given year and could well be replaced by less elaborate and more practical forms of advertising matter.

Good cuts for newspapers, both in illustration and in advertising, are essential and unless they are really made to conform to the standards of showmanship they should be thrown away. Posters, lobby display, neighborhood and newspaper advertising are the four basic necessities once the show with box office possibilities is booked. Long runs are desirable because they admit of proper advertising and if the production is worth while they justify the expenditure. Plain, practical advertising is to be desired at all times and never should the show element, the especial point of lure for the public, be overlooked. No national advertising campaign can make a show locally successful. The people of a community must be appealed to and nothing else matters.

General magazine advertising of motion pictures, because of the fleeting-here-today-gone-tomorrow element of motion pictures is a shocking waste of money that must be charged into the rental prices to exhibitors. The really well circulated motion picture magazines and the local newspapers are the only practical media for our business under present conditions.

I am not against any decent medium of advertising, but I do oppose those avenues which pile up the costs and make motion pictures more and more expensive to the exhibitors. This money should be spent in production, in scenarios and in talent that will make everybody leaving the theater satisfied and anxious to come again.

It is impossible to cover in one article the different methods by which pictures may be presented, or to dwell at any length on lobby displays, because both are as varied as the ingenuity, imagination and industry of the exhibitor or the publicity department that co-operates with him. It is possible to point out that unceasing energy is essential to publicity success. If you have a motion picture to offer to your public don't make the mistake of figuring it will "get over anyway." Get lack of it, push it, drive it, work for it and with it with might and main, and remember that advertising is the life and health of your game.
Doping It Out for the Papers

Publicity Manager for Pathe Exchange, Inc.,
Says "Have Something to Say and Say It Quick"—Also Advises Study of Mediums

FIVE and a half years ago, when the writer first came with Pathe, the newspapers and general magazines who devoted any space at all to motion picture publicity could almost be counted upon the fingers of one hand. Today their number is legion. The appetite of the public for motion picture publicity, like Shakespeare's bug in the rose, has grown with what it feeds upon. Motion picture publicity has jumped from the swaddling clothes stage to the paraphernalia of man's hood. It is recognized as essential to the successful conduct of the business. It has been found that it pays handsomely. It is not too much to say that without it the business could never have reached its present importance. Therefore it goes without saying that the proper conduct of a publicity and advertising department should be a matter of solicitude since upon its efficiency depends so much which is vital.

The motion picture business, like the dragon's teeth of old, seemed to jump from nowhere, full armed and in the panoply of might. Having no traditions of long standing of its own it had to hew its own way and make them. In publicity there is little doubt but that it followed more or less the exploitation methods of the stage. Too frequently valuable time and space was devoted to the old "lost jewels" style of publicity. The picture was lost sight of in the exploitation of the star. The business still suffers from the effects of this type of publicity. It was fine for the star. It shot salaries up from two figures to four and five, but it put the emphasis in the wrong place. The star became greater than the picture. The tail wagged the dog.

Motion picture publicity, like ancient Gaul, may be divided into three parts—trade paper, newspaper, and magazine, with a further subdivision of the latter into general magazines and fan magazines. The same cut-and-dried story will not do for all these publications. Trade paper publicity as I see it should be "sales" publicity. It should be prepared and written with the needs of the exhibitor in view. He should be informed as to the picture exploited from every angle. He is to sell the picture to the public. He should be given information which will help him to sell it. Therefore the "selling points" of the picture should be brought out. Press agent slush as such deserves little or no place in a trade paper. It may flatter some one's vanity; it may add somewhat to the total lineage to the publicity man's credit, but it does little to sell pictures, and that is the prime mission of the trade publication—to sell. Every picture worth while has its selling points. Therefore it is the publicity man's first duty to dig out those selling points and make them known. A biography of the star's Pomeranian does not help sell the picture. The best of the trade magazines recognize that fact, and with their "exhibitor's help" strive to aid the exhibitor in putting over the picture with the public. The right kind of publicity for the trade magazines is along those lines—"exhibitor's help"—and this without prejudice to the real news that comes along pretty regularly with every live organization and which every trade magazine is glad to get and print.

Time was when the same stories that were sent to the trade magazines were sent by the same mail to the newspapers. Here was a horrible waste of paper and postage. The motion picture editor of a newspaper was in those days a person to be pitied. Upon him fell the duty of reading reams of drivel to find the kernel of news. Newspaper publicity should be specially prepared with the needs of the newspaper in view. The long story which can land is the exception. The newspapers want short stuff, snappy and to the point, and so written that it does not have to be rewritten. Newspapers will print what is palpably a "press agent's yarn" provided that it is clever and worth reading. First-class feature stories of considerable length will frequently land, but they must merit the space; and at Pathe we have found that the way to get them across is to make them "exclusive," with a good art display, specially selected and truly illustrative of the story. By following such methods the writer remembers with satisfaction getting across a full-page story on Pearl White with some thirty Sunday newspapers of importance, illustrated with pictures specially taken in accordance, with a regular "scenario continuity" carefully planned out beforehand. "Have something to say and say it quick" is a good motto to have in writing publicity for the newspapers. Furthermore one's newspaper list should be carefully studied. Many papers give little space to photo play publicity; others devote much. Hit or miss methods will fail. The newspapers should be classified according to the kind and amount of material which they want, and the publicity material should also be classified in accordance with this list. Time and trouble expended upon this will be well repaid, as the clipping returns will show.

The "fan" magazines require material which differs in almost every respect from that sent to the trade papers and newspapers. As they are important and decidedly worth catering to each of them should be studied to meet their requirements. Specially taken photographs, clear-cut and snappy, gossipy interviews of real interest, exclusive articles on subjects worth while, "personality pictures" which is likely they could almost be counted upon to find these in the "fan" magazines, and such should be the character of the material furnished. Truly it is a far cry from the old days when the same old bunk went to every publication regardless of its nature and requirements!

As for advertising motion pictures, here again the method should be adapted to the medium. Every one has a different idea as to what constitutes good advertising. Advertising is not yet a science since it does not follow exact laws, but its essentials are generally understood. The back numbers of the Moving Picture World of several years ago strikingly illustrate the distance we have traveled in our trade paper advertising. Bombast, exaggeration, superlatives and a certain crudity of appearance were the rule in those advertisements a few years back. Compare them with those of today with their finished appearance, their fine art and, to a certain extent, their moderation.

Almost every company has a certain style to its advertising which makes it individual. Probably each of us thinks his own the best. At any event the individuality of content and treatment shown by the advertisements of each company makes the advertising pages a treat and a source of unfailing interest.

In pictures we advertising men have had to blaze our own trails. We have a constantly shifting product to advertise, unstandardized and to a large extent untried. Each week sees a new problem of merchandising as new pictures are put upon the programs. Each picture must more or less stand upon its own merits. Unlike Colgate’s products, Ivory Soap and other much advertised commodities, which are the same today as they were months ago, and therefore are bought by the public with confidence—motion pictures made with the same star, directed by the same director, produced by the same concern from stories by the same author, will vary greatly in quality. Therefore past advertising counts for little. We must virtually start “cold” with each new picture.

The nature of the business is such that trade paper advertising is not, in its final analysis, the direct producer of sales, but an aid to sales. It makes it easier for the salesman to dispose of his merchandise. Exhibitors are busy men with little time to read. The writer believes that “brevity is the soul of wit” in trade paper advertising, and that the brief, punchy message, with an art display that will seize the eye, is the summa bonum of such advertising.

Obviously advertising to the public is an entirely different proposition, but who of us would be so rash as to attempt to say what is best in advertising motion pictures to the public? Many men, many minds, said the philosopher. There would be no surer way to find the truth of that statement than to discuss the best methods of whetting the public’s appetite for motion pictures by paid advertising. There is little doubt but that such advertising is more and more proving its utility, and that the time may come when with standard pictures we may create a demand, expressed at the box office, for certain advertised brands and put our pictures upon the same basis as tooth pastes, soaps and shoes. Certainly the largest concerns in the business now enjoy the first requisite of successful national advertising—namely, a wide and enviable distribution, without which national advertising could not pay. Pathe has made considerable use of the newspapers in advertising its pictures and with satisfactory results. We have been careful to “gait” our advertising to the public we are reaching and to the medium we employ. Pathe is also making considerable use of billboards, and recently has gone into the Saturday Evening Post. As a result we are helping the exhibitor sell our pictures. National advertising is not merely coming; it has arrived, but there is no doubt but that present efforts will appear small in comparison with that which the future will bring forth.

In summing up our chosen and well loved profession it may not be amiss to say this: That in no business is it so essential for a man to be not merely abreast of the times, but ahead of them. Conditions are constantly changing. The advertising and publicity man should not merely change his methods with them, but ahead of them. The fate of a number of film concerns at one time rich and famous but now forgotten illustrates the penalty attached to lack of progressiveness. The laggard has no place in a swiftly moving business like this.

"I, Me, Myself"

By G. W. Landon,
Advertising Manager, Nicholas Power Company, Inc.

CONCERNING the subject of this sketch let it be said that the first two initials of his triple-barreled name are the same as those of the “Father of our Country.” This handicap alone were insurmountable for a publicity man if it were not balanced by the fact that he is a blood relation of the man who was termed “the biggest liar in the United States”—Melville D. Landon, better known as Eli Perkins.

He was projected upon life’s screen at a very tender age: and being bare-footed and scant of clothing he feels that he was “framed” well, if not good; so he has never been a screen favorite.

His career? A checkered one—from dry goods to motion pictures. The former used to be bad—the latter?

His age? He’s sensitive. For the rest, he’s not very long for this world—only about 62 inches—is convivial and a finished speaker. He is certain of this because once when making a speech at the Pleiades Club some one was heard to say at its termination, “thank Heavens, he’s finished.”

Is rich in clubs which keep him poor: being one of the incorporators and the oldest inhabitant of the Pleiades Club, a charter member of the Writers, a member of the Twilight Club and an alumnus of Grammar School No. 68 of Harlem, New York City, where he was born.

He has been back on the job for nearly a year as advertising manager for the Nicholas Power Company. He feels it a compliment to be there on which he hopes to make good and at the same time justify the faith of those who put him there.

Money Wasted in Picture Publicity

Director of Publicity and Advertising of Famous Players-Lasky Says Publicity Must Have Something Behind It that Can Deliver the Goods

PUBLICITY is not the eighth wonder of the world, all evidence to the contrary notwithstanding. It works within certain prescribed limits and by a very definite lot of rules, despite the fact that it is based on elements of human psychology. Publicity can do a whole lot in this fast-stepping world, but taken by itself and without the backing of the knowledge that has been formulated concerning it, it is as valueless as a dried orange peel. Publicity must have something to be public about and it must have behind it the philosophical understanding of how to get public about that fact.

But most of all publicity must have something behind it that can deliver the goods. That fact has been found out in the world of business in all sorts of lines. It is being found to hold particularly true of the motion picture business.

There are a lot of things about the motion pictures that are worth publicity—a lot of things that advertising can help. And there are a few things that advertising can help for only a very limited space of time. Let's grant at the outset that we have something to shout about.

The exhibitor must certainly convince himself of that fact before he has got even a start on the road to exploiting his business. If he is lukewarm about his wares, at any stage of the game, he may be able to camouflage his half-heartedness into enthusiasm, but the deception is sure to work out wrong in the end.

There's a lot of good money wasted on publicity and advertising in every business, and the motion picture industry is not an exception to the rule. Money is wasted on exploiting pictures that will not stand up to the test. Honesty in advertising is as essential as in advertising a watch. There must be a guarantee back of the advertising in both cases. In the case of the pictures, that guarantee is in the mind of the man who is shouting his wares. He knows he has a good thing to advertise and it acts as a complete guarantee of good faith. That is what Famous Players-Lasky tries to put behind its pictures—the guarantee of good faith in its stories, its stars, its settings, its directors and its sincerity to achieve an ideal in pictures.

Money is wasted in not knowing how to exploit a picture. Money is wasted in over-exploitation where it is not necessary and money is wasted in under-exploitation where a little more pressure would have done the trick.

Not every one knows the difference between good and bad advertising. The successful publicity expert is a combination of natural ability added to a lot of experience, for there is nothing more valuable in motion picture publicity than experience.

Every motion picture company aims to help the exhibitor from the very outset. Some of them do it very successfully. Others are more of a hindrance than an aid, by asking the exhibitor to base his appeal to the public on absolutely wrong lines.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is continually paving the way for proper publicity for the exhibitor. Its entire publicity department is maintained for just that purpose. Its evident results in keeping the stars before the public, its exhibitors' service department, its service to the thousands of newspapers in the country, its free mats and cuts and stories, its house organ for the exhibitor, its 500 columns of publicity matter weekly in the newspapers of the United States, and above all, its big advertising campaign are first and foremost arranged, conducted and maintained with just one person and his prosperity in mind and that person is Mr. Motion Picture Exhibitor.

The exhibitor who links his own advertising in the newspapers to all this special exploitation work of the company whose pictures he shows simply arrogates to himself the benefits of this display, backed by a powerful organization. The exhibitor has not been slow to realize that this is the chord upon which he can play tunefully and continually. Every bit of advertising that appears, every printed photograph of a star or scene, every line of reading matter sent out by this organization and every individual in the country who has learned the distinction between Paramount and Arclight pictures and "just movies" is directly beneficial to him.

He must of course go further—he must let it be known in every way by lobby display, by the medium of his screen, in his programs, in his mailing list, by words of mouth and by advertising, that he is showing the pictures whose trade-mark the public his come to look for.

But all this aid would be a hollow mockery, if the producing company was not backing up its advertising by giving exactly what it claims to give. Famous Players-Lasky feels that the exhibitor need not worry over that point. There has never been a time in the whole history of the industry when greater care, expense and skill have been brought to bear upon productions—and the names of the stars whose services are enlisted speak for themselves.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has unbounded faith in the exhibitors of America. It has seen the business develop from its humble beginnings to its present magnitude and has noted with gratification the growth of the showmen in a parallel degree.

That this faith in the exhibitor is reflected by the faith of the exhibitor in the producing company is both a matter of congratulation for the present and an inspiration for the future.

You can attract a lot of attention by standing on a street corner and pointing toward the blue sky, but what's the use? Why not have something definite to point at—a little information is thankfully received.
Campaign Books for Motion Pictures

By Nat Rothstein

Universal’s Advertising Manager is an Authority on this Feature of an Advertising Campaign—Has Issued Many Beautiful Examples

Writing advertising campaign books for serial pictures is very easy. All you need is some paper, a pencil and a ruler. Time is unnecessary, at least it isn’t much of a factor in the Universal Advertising Department, for ad campaign books must be produced in the time that we sandwich in between our regular daily duties, which has averaged around fifty pages of display advertising every week, together with other advertising work that reaches a total surpassing the product of any advertising agency in America with equal equipment.

But it is a labor of love. It means the helping of the exhibitor over the rough spots to success. It smooths the way by making things easy, simple, clear, concise and resultful.

The average exhibitor is not an advertising man. Those who do possess the advertising instinct don’t have the time or don’t understand the physical production of good ad matter, therefore Universal advertising campaign books for serials have filled the gap between just ordinary results and extraordinary results on serial pictures.

More money is spent to help the exhibitor put over his serial for the proportion he pays for his goods than is spent for dealer helps in any other line of business. For example: A shoe dealer buys, say, $3,000 worth of goods. All he receives from the shoe jobber or manufacturer is a few electro of the latest styles in footwear. There is no such thing as a consistent completed line of follow-up ads. In Universal serial ad campaign books the exhibitor finds a completed highly efficient series of teaser or advance ads, followed by a smashing opening ad for the day he shows his first episode—then he finds episode ads that he can use while his serial is running to boost it along. He finds an elaborate variety of players’ cuts specially designed for the serial. He finds serial trade-mark cuts, any number of highly specialized publicity stunts, novelties, and other matter so arranged and so modestly priced as to allow him to take advantage of all the helps at very little expenditure of money, but with very good results.

Universal ad campaign books have actually done more to boost serials by helps these books contained than any single or combined factor in this end of the cinema business.

When the writer came to the Universal organization four years ago there never existed any such thing as an advertising campaign book. His long years of merchandising training stood him in good stead, for he at once applied the sound principles of merchandising by the printed page, thus enabling the exhibitor to see at a glance and to know what to expect, and besides enabling the film salesman on the road to make his call worth while, with the campaign book doing the advance work by paying the way.

Universal advertising campaign books have always been very elaborate with the costs running up into the thousands of dollars. Printed in as many as six colors, with reproductions of posters in miniature, it enables the exhibitor to see the matter he is to use exactly as it will appear.

On each of these serials advertising campaign books have been produced with complete and elaborate helps of every conceivable type. In the production of the campaign books the Universal has been instrumental in building the serial business directly through which other producers have profited as well as the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

By virtue of the elaborate matter turned out by the Universal, exhibitors have come to look upon serials with greater respect and with more seriousness than before the advent of these books.

That the principle of showing the exhibitor his goods on the printed page has been resultful is evidenced by the bookings on Universal serials all over the world. Universal serials today are being shown in every civilized country on the globe. In England reproductions in the exact colors and physical size of the campaign books printed in this country are made and used with effective.

It has awakened the English exhibitor to the value of good continued photoplays and the English public have and are responding.

These books contain anywhere from 36 to 68 pages of highly interesting matter, so logically arranged and presented as to tell the exhibitor the story of the merchandise being offered and containing such a generous measure of assistance as to make each book a veritable gold mine of useful, valuable and practical information.

In the production of these campaign books it required the exploration of new fields of ideas, and as the writer mentioned at the beginning, all it required was some paper, a ruler and a sharp pencil.

All that is necessary besides these physical properties is an inexhaustible brain, saint-like patience, and “stick-to-it-iveness” plus versatility and a few 30-hour days.

Be it known, too, that the producing of the ad campaign books has been “sandwiched in” between the production of over fifty pages of display advertising per week plus mountains of other necessary matter for the exploitation of Universal pictures.

But workers in the Universal ranks have always been known as hard workers and the Universal advertising department is no exception, rather the rule.

All matter that helps the exhibitor directly helps the producer. If the exhibitor makes money and prospers the manufacturer prospers. If the exhibitor slips, the producers must slip with him. One depends upon the other in the film business the same as in any other legitimate business, so whatever assistance can be rendered the man who buys the goods results directly to the manufacturer of the goods.

The Universal slogan has always been and will always be, "Help the exhibitor make money." If he isn't a showman, prepare ways and means to assist him in becoming a showman, for to the showman of the 24-carat variety the sale of meritorious productions is half the labor than to a man who lacks the knowledge and understanding of what constitutes really good money-making pictures.

By helping the exhibitor we are simply helping ourselves and means making the business of moving pictures a more stable industry for all concerned.

Pete Schmid

One of the Rising Young Publicity Men Who Was Developed by Pictures.

ONE of the most consistent and conscientious writers of publicity for motion pictures is Pete Schmid and his steady progress up the ladder of success is the best testimony to his ability that can be offered. Pete began his business career as a stenographer in 1907, and admits that he was glad to get six dollars for a week's toil. But that was in the dry goods line, so Pete got into the amusement business in a hurry where he first worked for the White Rats and the Actors' Union and then joined the staff of The Player, the official organ of the White Rats.

Pete admits that he was once bitten by the actor bug and for a time filled "club dates," doing a "single" singing act, specializing in comedic songs and yodeling after which he wrote and "plugged" songs for six months. When The Player ceased publication he joined the staff of another amusement publication as reviewer and editor of the motion picture department. Then came an offer to become publicity man for the Bosworth, Inc., a picture company, and he was started on his present career.

Mr. Schmid's connection with Bosworth and the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company led to his engagement as publicity man for the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, whereupon it may be said that he had officially arrived.

With Artcraft Pete had charge of the publicity for such stars as Mary Pickford, D. W. Griffith, Douglas Fairbanks, Elsie Ferguson, George M. Cohan, Cecil B. De Mille, W. S. Hart and Geraldine Farrar—all big attractions.

When Artcraft was absorbed by the Famous Players-Lasky Company Pete went along and became a member of the publicity staff of the big corporation where he has charge of all the trade paper publicity. One of his most important assignments was the conduct of the Fairbanks million dollar Liberty Loan campaign from coast to coast. On a few hours' notice Pete jumped into this campaign, accompanied Fairbanks from New York to San Francisco, arranging the details en route. Thirty cities were visited and much space was obtained in the way of front-page stories in the newspapers. Needless to say, the million dollar subscription was raised.

American Film Abroad Is American Publicity Abroad

By Paul H. Cromelin, President, Inter-Ocean Film Corp.

A MOST pleasing fact to us of the film exporting business is that when we sell American films to a foreign land we are selling American publicity, too. We are selling American realism, American physical prowess, American grit and stick-to-liveness. We are not especially engaged in selling American publicity. But consciously or not, we do it. We send the call of clean living, open-minded, democratic America to whoever will hear. And it is not essential that the hearer know our language, for the language of the screen is universal.

We are told that countries which are at present enemy countries wait for the war's end to oust the American film from its world position. Idle hope! The publicity of idealism, of democracy, has "gotten across" too well to be succeeded in the world-public's heart by portrayals of might and ruthlessness.

The world-public no longer worships heroes because they are strong men.

It likes them because they are right!

Blame the publicity gospel of American films for this! Millions of illiterates the world over have been unable to read our President's messages, but with their eyes have grasped the American ideas of righteousness for which he stands—via the screen. Wilson and the motion picture are the two strongest American influences abroad.

Do not misunderstand me to infer that American films in the foreign lands are American propaganda in foreign lands. We are not using our position to "propagand." But we can't help publicize America with our films—publicize the splendid things she champions. There is a difference between propaganda and publicity, you see. A prominent South American told me recently that the American films showing through the length and breadth of his continent had done more to strengthen the feeling of good will toward us than all of the Pan-American congresses.

"Do you know why we espouse your cause down there, despite obligations of neutrality?" he said. "Well, it is because the movies have made us feel we know you well—your life and manners, your spirit of democracy which is akin to our own. You are close to us, in short, and we feel for and with you."
"Zit" Tells How It's Done

In a Telephone Interview Zittel, the Famous, Explains His Unquestioned Success as a Live Wire Press Agent

HELLO, Bryant, 9600? Let me talk with Mr. Zittel, please—Mr. Hoff calling.

"Hello, Hoff."

"Hello, Zit. The World is going to carry a series of interviews with noted press agents in the special publicity number and we would like a story from you, as the richest press agent in the business, on how you did it and how the other fellow can do it."

"Well, I don't know that you have picked the richest press agent in the business to start with, and I'm so jammed up that I haven't time to write anything, anyway. But I'll tell you what I can do. Put a stenographer on the wire and I'll dictate something to her right now.

"Ready? Well, here goes:

"Ninety-nine press agents out of a hundred are not getting anywhere because they are working too cheaply. They are being underpaid, so how can they get anywhere? How can they expect to make themselves rich if they are just earning enough to get by?

"The day has long since passed for the press agent with his typewriter, cigarette and a hang-over from the night before. The successful press agent must be a man of big, constructive ideas, possessing an imagination and constructive genius capable of making money for his employer. To do this he must spend money.

"The fellow of narrow vision stuck away in a corner somewhere with his typewriter and a yearning ambition to sneak by some friendly editor with a stick or two does not fill the bill. His actual value to his employer is measured by that ambition. The ideal press agent recognizes that it is impossible to get something for nothing and wastes no time on the effort. He gets something for something! And he gets it where it will do the most good! He leads his employer into the profitable paths of publicity and he turns that publicity into cash through selling power. If he realizes this and his employer realizes it he is pretty likely to be paid what he is worth. If the employer doesn't realize it he'd better get a new employer.

"Boost your employer whenever you have the opportunity! Wherever you meet people bring his name into the conversation and dwell upon his good points. Verbal publicity is of equal importance as the kind that comes from printer's ink and in this way a good press agent can do much valuable work.

"The most common mistake of the average press agent is accepting too many clients at a small figure and doing too little for each, at the same time wearing out his welcome through repeated and continuous demands upon his friends for space. The temptation is to write yards of copy, whereas it is apparent that conditions are such that little can get by. Verbosity is the short, direct path to the waste basket.

"Work for one man, and work for him hard. Pick that man, don't take anything that comes along. Lots of things are impossible. Select a person or a proposition that is capable of being developed—something that should be notable but is not when you take hold of it. Map out your course and follow it; don't let him tell you the details. Does a surgeon accept every case that is brought to him? Does he risk his reputation by operating when he recognizes the patient as hopeless? Does he guarantee results when he does undertake to operate? Or does he permit the patient to dictate his methods when he takes the case in hand? Not at all. The rules that govern the surgeon are applicable to the press agent. I have made them my standard.

"Live well, dress well, act the part of the millionaire. Be your employer's equal; try to be his partner. Recognize the dignity of your position and live up to that dignity. Don't waste time trying to 'square' things in a gin mill.

"Be independent. Never accept a contract, for the man who demands one admits his weakness by wanting to have his freedom tied up.

"You cannot 'bull your way' onto the billboards; why try it on the newspapers? Buy space. I buy my way through where I can, and if I cannot buy front covers or pictures, I will buy advertising pages in order to get what I want on a business basis. The papers that won't take my money on that basis I trust to the story and pictures I send them and to the good luck that they use it.

"Don't make the mistake of trying to show your employer how to save money. Teach him how to spend money and thereby make more money. He has efficiency experts and accounts to show him how to save. He employs you for your department because you know more about it than he does. When you make money for him he will never question the fact that it cost the initial investment. He will look over results and judge you accordingly.

"Don't use language that he cannot understand and, above all, don't put such language in his mouth. It makes him ridiculous in the eyes of his associates who know his measure in that direction. Ten to one he has employed you because you enjoy a better education than he. But don't force that fact upon him everlastingly, or he will hold aloof from you. More than half of your success is dependent upon the enjoyment of his entire confidence. You of all people must possess that. And you will not enjoy it long if you make him feel inferior. Because his command of language is not equal to yours is no indication that he is not a smart man, possibly much smarter than you in every respect.

"You will never get far tooting a horn that the public has grown accustomed to hearing. Find the unknown that should be heard. Both he and the public will appreciate what you have done. And don't imagine it is unethical to think well of yourself and of the services that you render. Often you can best serve your employer by keeping in the public eye yourself. And that goes in the face of the traditions of the press agents to the contrary.

"Plenty of folks will say: 'Oh, that is all right for Zit, with the power of the Hearst newspapers behind him.' True enough, but I had to make good just the same. I had to make good for myself and establish Zit before the power of the Hearst newspapers represented anything to or for me

"I am no newcomer to the motion picture. Twenty years ago I established a free moving picture show at Ehrich Bros. Drygoods Store, Sixth Avenue and Twenty-third Street, New York City, with a daily change of program. Mr. Percy Waters will tell you that the service cost us only $35 a week, but that was something in those days with an untried experiment. We made it pay, and that is the purpose of all business.

"As an example of what can be done with publicity, I have doubled and tripled and quadrupled the earning power of a number of stars by the application of the principles I have advocated here, and they have never ceased to thank me. A man whose name is known throughout the world—a trademark of tremendous value—has never hesitated to credit me with the pioneer work that established that value.

"You cannot put over something without value. It is a waste of time to try. The quality must be there to accomplish results.

"Don't flit about. Enter employment with the idea of permanency, expecting to share in the Prosperity you aid in creating and insist upon your rights in that direction. If circumstances cause you to quit, quit for keeps—don't make the humiliating admission that is implied by your return to the starting point.

"How can you get rich? Ask someone who knows more about that subject. I have made a million and a half for one employer, but I am still on the job. But I guess I could worry along the rest of my days without it if I had to. But there is no use my indulging in further violation of my own rule against verbosity, so goodbye."

And the interview was at an end.

Rosenbaum Sees Great Possibilities
Old Theatrical Agent Tries "Movie" Publicity and Likes It. Offers Some Advice.

I

N VIEW of the fact that I have only been in the movie game since last September I surely have the privilege of telling the moving picture industry all I think I know about how to get the best results in exploiting pictures. Of course, the fact that I spent seventeen years in the theatrical business as a press agent and manager has no bearing on the case.

When the moving picture industry as a whole begins to improve on the methods of showmen and begins to look ahead, instead of living for the day only, this glorious industry, and it is a glorious one, will begin to get the standing that it deserves. Just about present the two industries which should be so closely allied are as close to one another as the Pacific and the Atlantic. Some day the brains of these two great industries will start to dig a canal that will join them together, and not until then will the film industry reach the pinnacle of success that its older ally has attained.

There is quite a difference, to my way of thinking, in being a showman and merely an exhibitor. An exhibitor is a man who is satisfied to lay out a program, present it to his public and let it go at that. A moving picture showman is a man who places an environment around his picture and creates atmosphere enough to attract the theater-goer. Competition is so keen in the screen game that the man who sits outside his box office and waits for business to come will be wearing last year's shirts, suits and shoes for the next few years to come, but the fellow who studies his public, who does things differently than his competitor, is the fellow who gets results. There is no such thing as luck in business. Strong as this statement may seem, I am fully convinced that it is true. Taking advantage of present conditions is what is generally termed by the stagnant competitor as the other fellow's luck.

It is my contention that there is room in this glorious United States for every moving picture house now in existence. There is a reason, a big, vital reason, for the failure of the majority of houses. If I were to conduct a theater, before opening its doors I would have at least a week's rehearsal with my entire staff from the engineer up to the treasurer, teaching them the power of courtesy and attention to the public, for after all, every attache of a theater is merely a servant, and as such it is a duty to give to those for whom you are working every bit of efficiency that is in your system and usually you will find that where you go into a theater and are treated discourteously by the ushers or other menials the cause of this treatment is due to the fact that the head of the organization or manager is of this type. As a whole, I find that the men connected with the moving picture industry are more considerate of their fellowmen than the theatrical manager has been in the past.

When I started getting acquainted with the various editors of the trade papers I was treated so courteously that before I had attempted to deliver the goods for my firm I knew I was going to be very happy in my new work. If the exhibitor and the producer and exchange men would give the same co-operation to each other as the newspapers give to the publicity departments, all would be well.

There are more opportunities for a man in this business in one week than there are in the theatrical business in a year. All it needs is co-operation on the part of the exhibitor and producer to demonstrate this. In no other line of work is the press agent treated with such courtesy and respect as he is in the film industry. In my seventeen years in the theatrical business I have been usher, treasurer, manager and press agent and producer. Some of the stars whom I have had the pleasure of exploiting are Donald Brian, Richard Carle, Eva Tanguay, Nora Baves, Dorothy Jardon, Mme. Dazie, Victor Moore, Bert Williams, Mollie King, Harry Kelly, the Dolly Sisters, Thomas Jefferson, John Emerson, Will Philbrick, Jeff D'Angeles, Mae Murray, Ina Claire, Jack Norworth, Billy Reeves, Frank Tinney, Anna Held, and last but not least, Billy West.
Great Values in "Stunt" Publicity

They Are the Headlines of Amusement Advertising, Declares Advertising Man of the First National Exhibitors Circuit

STUNTS are the headlines of amusement advertising. They jolt the preoccupied mind of the public from its habitual channels of thought and focus attention upon the follow-up advertising which must accompany them in a well-planned advertising campaign. One of the exhibitor’s most difficult problems is to get people to forget their own business long enough to think of his. Stunts turn the trick.

There are stunts and stunts. To be effective advertising, a stunt must make people think consciously or subconsciously of the attraction it is meant to advertise. A stunt which attracts attention only to itself is wasted effort. Its only effect is to make people ejaculate wonderingly: “What ‘t’ll?” Their minds trip over it, perhaps even resent it, and pass on.

P. T. Barnum was a master of stunts. He once packed his first show, a dime museum, by the clever use of one man who wanted to earn the price of a meal—and five bricks. His once famous plowing elephants were another great stunt. Dig up his biography and read the story of his showmanship. The brick stunt will work again in any town in America.

The average exhibitor’s best held for stunts is the lobby of his own theater—that is, if he operates a continuous house on a busy street. A roomy lobby so situated is one of the best advertising mediums in the world. Its possibilities are unlimited, but its true worth may not be realized if the poster boy, janitor, or some other employee of equal mentality is delegated to “take care of the display.”

The lobby is the show window of the theatre. Did anyone ever hear of a successful store whose show windows were trimmed by the janitor? Yet hundreds of exhibitors allow such minds to arrange their lobby advertising. They buy a set of frames of standard size into which the appointed functionary neatly places precisely the same kind of display matter the year round. Of course, such an arrangement is informative and people can find out what is “on” by examining the “display,” but as for its reaching out and getting business—not on your life!

The window trimmer of a department store is a well paid person of some imaginative power who has nothing to think of but “selling the street.” He usually co-operates with the man who writes the advertising. Exhibitors should realize that “selling the street” and press agency or ad-writing are two different trades. Hire some of a trained window trimmer’s spare time, work with him until he gets the showman’s angle and some picture sense and see if it doesn’t pay.

Of course, a theatre of the first class does not have to “circus” its lobby. Such houses confine their stunts principally to the presentation of their programs. But ingenuity and good taste will accomplish wonders in the lobby of any theatre.

The powers of curiosity, suggestion, sentiment, humor, pathos—all these are at the command of the studious lobby advertiser. A woman’s dancing slipper and an empty champagne bottle suspended by bright colored ribbons suggest things. Neither object is offensive. Both will get by the censor. A battered musket or baby’s cradle properly used are symbols that generate thought. These are mentioned simply as samples. Maps, newspapers and magazine clippings, letters and telegrams make attractive and convincing lobby advertising when cunningly used. The art of suggestion is as effective as the appeal to curiosity. Back of it all is the mysterious force known as psychology. Theatres have been packed by lobby advertising which at first glance seemed positively foolish and foreign until analyzed for its appeal.

A good lobby display requires the same careful thought that is expended on the copy for a full page newspaper advertisement. A stunt of some kind is the equivalent of headlines and illustration. Signs, show cards or photographs are relatively the descriptive copy which interests the reader sufficiently to induce him to buy a ticket. The whole makes up the advertisement.

The ideal lobby, like the show window, would be in effect a stage on which all sorts of goods might be displayed in attractive variety. There would be no permanent frames or fixtures. Its general appearance should present an ever changing picture. “Selling the street” requires thought. The problem is how to treat each subject. Repression should be studied in lobby advertising as in music or speaking. Stunts which shout should be employed only when necessary, for a lobby which is always noisy in appearance is sure to become a bore instead of an attraction. When a popular star is the attraction, stunts are seldom necessary. Good taste in the arrangement of posters, photographs, etc., makes their appeal stronger but in such circumstances having the star is the stunt. Save “circus” stunts for the times when they are needed and they will be more effective.

The theater is an oasis to which people go to find variety and relief from the daily grind. Good lobby advertising can be made a part of the entertainment. Comedy lobby advertising of comedy subjects is especially appreciated by the public and pays handsomely. The exhibitor who keeps his lobby alive creates the impression that his show is just as live. Passersby will come to watch it for new and interesting sights, sounds and smells.

Think what it is worth to a theater to have the people who pass it always on the lookout for “what’s doing” in the lobby. Many exhibitors realize the value of good lobby advertising but many, many more think of the lobby as a job for the janitor and an entrance to the theater. It is really the most valuable advertising medium within the reach of many exhibitors and will pay for a lot more thought than it gets.
What Can Advertising Accomplish? □ By Dwight S. Perrin

Publicity Director for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation Sees Large Results When Producer and Advertiser Get Together

WHAT can any motion picture producing or releasing organization do through the medium of advertising and a service department to enable the motion picture exhibitor to make an assured profit on the pictures he plays?

At every point of contact I have in the motion picture industry I hear grown men expressing varying degrees of bewilderment over supplying the answer to this inquiry. To answer this frankly and truthfully it may be necessary to hurt the feelings of a few persons; perhaps the feelings of a great many.

Personally I have been raised and trained in a profession that respects the people it serves. As a newspaper editor, and formerly as a newspaper reporter, I was trained to respect the feelings, the judgments, the likes and dislikes of the readers of the newspaper I served.

Any good editor or reporter knows how to get over his story or his points to the readers of his newspaper. And herein lies the great difference between serving or attempting to serve intelligently the exhibitors of America; of trying to give them without cost additional assets through which their motion picture productions may be brought more vividly before the public and as a consequence draw more receipts into the box office.

Fourteen thousand persons can read a powerful newspaper editorial and be affected and influenced. Fourteen thousand exhibitors of motion pictures can be reached and given profit-making assistance and material, but, even with this material in their hands, one would be amazed to find fifty out of one hundred taking advantage of the things with which they are supplied.

If I walk into the store of a successful neighborhood grocer in a residential section of a large city, or into the store of the largest grocer in the average small town as the representative of Quaker Oats or Cream of Wheat I can at once gain the attention of the merchant by telling him that I can double his sales of either of these products.

The grocer is not only willing, but eager to have me offer to arrange his window displays and his center-aisle counter displays. He is eager that I authorize a house to house canvass of the districts where his middle-class wage-earning trade lives to sample the homes of an available or prospective clientele with small packages of these foodstuffs. He is not only willing, but waits around to hear me get behind his counter and “talk” my products to his customers. As a result of his receptiveness he sells more, or some one even more skilled, increases his sales right under his eye. He takes all of the advertising matter within reach, and what he sees me do for his product even stimulates him and his clerks in his method of selling the other products in his store.

But apply these well known and long-tested methods of sales stimulation to motion picture showmanship and see what happens.

The average exhibitor of motion pictures feels contented with himself. He regards himself, without outside assistance, as being a good showman. He thinks that none of these men from New York or Chicago understands him, his field or his particular house. He thinks that they know nothing of his public. He does not stop to measure his clientele on the yardstick of human nature. He does not admit that humanity measures up about the same regardless of geography.

In other words, the average American exhibitor resents instead of welcomes us and what we can give him.

His attitude towards what we provide and the additional elements of service for exploiting and advertising that we are willing to provide in a critical and negative vein. Recently even so well-established a manager of motion pictures as Charles G. Branham of the Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, fired an illogical and inaccurate broadside at the accessories supplied him by the larger companies, complained technically of the “screen” on the electrolyte cuts and in general rejected as unfit all of the material placed in his hands for the exploitation of his shows.

To show how ill-taken were his points on the accessories of the Goldwyn company, if he had them even faintly in mind, I want to point out the following facts:

The cuts supplied on Goldwyn accessories are 55-screen, the standard newspaper screen of the country. They are picked and made and examined under the supervision of an executive who is a photographer, router, etcher—an all-round engraver.

The newspaper matrices of the company are made from 55-screen cuts that have never been used in printing electrotyping, thereby insuring impressions from surfaces which have not been mashed, worn or flattened by previous use.

The press sheets on each production are made under the direction of an executive who has operated some of the largest newspapers and monthly magazines America has ever known, in addition to owning a large newspaper personally. These press sheets are built to contain and do contain only the material that a careful and self-respecting editor would permit to be printed in his own newspaper; and the stories supplied are infinitely better written throughout than the average of any editorial page or any of the news columns in Mr. Branham's city.

The rotogravure one-sheets of the company are designed and laid out and inspected by a man in the Goldwyn organization who knows every detail of the rotogravure process and who incidentally was the editor of the pictorial section of the New York Tribune from the day of its inauguration as either the second or third pictorial section on any great American daily paper.

But expert service of this kind Mr. Branham rejects and complains of. It is a typical exhibitor attitude. Two hundred other exhibitors would have two hundred individual viewpoints. The individual local showman wants his own kind of exploitation. Lacking the mechanical resources to do it in any way equal what is given him and most of the time being beyond the reach of an organization to manufacture for him exploitation publicity which would in any way equal the material supplied him by one of the three or four larger companies, he rejects this material under a blanket indictment of producing or distributing company intelligence.

The trouble today in the motion picture industry does not rest with the producing or releasing companies in the matter of service and advertising assistance. It is to be found in the failure of so many exhibitors to absorb the materials provided by the producers.

The producers are willing to give—and do give at tremendous cost to themselves. The exhibitors are not willing to receive. Of course, there are hundreds of alert and progressive exhibitors to whom this does not apply. They make effective and intelligent use of what they believe is best of what the producers supply. But somewhere in the circuit of producer-exhibitor cooperation there is a flaw.

Is this the producers' fault, or is it the exhibitors?

Must Satisfy the Showman

By H. J. Shepard, of the W. H. Productions Co.

As in the case of any other commodity which the public is buying, advertising plays a great part in the exploitation and final success of any motion picture production. And the final success of any picture does not lie in the success the production company or the exchange have made in terms of dollars and cents for themselves, but it lies in the praise and opinion of the public, in terms of their dollars and cents to the exhibitor. The exhibitor is nearest to the public. He knows his public, because he watches them night after night, knows what they applaud and what they dislike. He knows what to say to them, how to "reach" them. Every exhibitor would like to talk to each individual in his audience, or in his prospective audiences. But the exhibitor is a busy man, and, although he knows what to say to them, he cannot translate his personality on paper, because he is not an advertising man. His business is good showmanship, and he requires someone who can understand his suggestions and can use them effectively.

It is as important to the exchange or production company as to the picture itself, that the exhibitor should in some way convey to his audience something relating to his showing. The importance of this service to the exhibitor, through the exchange, is, however, often either overlooked or disposed of in a perfunctory manner, so that there may be something which the distributor when questioned can point to as "service" and ease his conscience qualms. A great deal of the publicity and advertising matter sent to exhibitors is amateurish and meaningless, too vague and too general. It is advertising, but not a tangible box office asset.

That advertising is as necessary a box office asset as the quality of the picture, the policy of the theater, even the cleanliness and ventilation of the theater, is evidenced by the number of high priced and exceptionally good productions that have been killed by this vague, meaningless sort of advertising and publicity matter. While, on the other hand, how many times have productions of a fair quality been box office successes merely by the proper publicity and advertising—the kind that gets to the head and heart of the public.

Every exhibitor is realizing more and more the importance of the proper kind of advertising service. He demands it of his exchange. But, again, exhibitors are not advertising men, nor have they the time to analyze the values of the "service" usually doled out to them. The majority of exhibitors, although they themselves may possess the true showman's instinct for the proper choice of advertising which will show results at the box office, have so many other details to look after outside of exploiting each production they book, that it is utterly impossible for them to create the practical advertising and publicity matter for themselves, which they may be certain will secure the results at their box office. Nevertheless, due to the inconsistent and impractical publicity and advertising matter emanating from a great number of the producing and distributing organizations, those exhibitors who desire properly to exploit the productions they book are obliged to devote a great deal of their limited time to the writing of their own publicity.

The distributors are realizing, too, that although the final success of any production is in the box office returns, that these returns are the outcome of, and successful in proportion to the method each individual exhibitor employs in exploiting his pictures. Production companies who know, for instance, that their product is good, that the box office punch is there, should compliment these superior productions by lifting their service above the mediocre to a level deserving of the quality of their productions. That is the finishing touch to the "reach" of a picture—these are the tracks along which the production must glue to the heart of the masses.

The advertising, however, must satisfy the competent showman and at the same time be so universally human that every distinct type of exhibitor may be able to utilize this advertising with as little call upon his time and thought as possible. Each subject must be given the same care and attention in preparation of advertising and publicity, whether it is a one-reeler or a five-reeler, as the direction, plot and photography of the production. These are the factors which build the foundation of solid confidence in an organization.
Publicity Should Inform

Foursquare Pictures' Man Insists that Advertising Must Be Addressed to the Exhibitor and Not Written to Jolly the Boss

THE editor called me on the phone and said in the commanding tones editors have a way of using: "Write me something about your ideas of publicity methods as applied to pictures. And get a move on; I want early copy."

Every man who has taken orders from an editor never fails to quake—even though he may have graduated from the early reporital stage—when he is given a fresh assignment.

I will not lie about it, however. The invitation to go ahead and say something about motion picture advertising was not exactly unwelcome. My ideas may be neither startlingly new or epoch-making; at the same time they are mine and I entertain for them a certain affection. It is not unlike the feeling a man may have for his dog or horse—if he be fortunate enough to possess either.

But to get back to my subject, or into it, since we haven't yet started, I will begin by stating that, more than many other businesses, motion pictures need advertising. Of course I refer to that part of the machinery identified with production and distribution; for the exhibitors—God knows—must advertise or go supperless to bed, to make no mention of having probably skipped breakfast and lunch.

Having made a fine picture is certainly an achievement, and should give the person responsible for it a jingly twitching at his pockets that feels like money. But the successful producer, who is wise in his generation, will be found to resemble the smart storekeeper in a hick town who, when asked if he kept a certain nationally-advertised brand of soap, retorted with a grin: "No, we don't keep it, we sell it."

It's like that with the producer—and the distributor, too—who has a good picture. He doesn't keep it. Running it off in the projection room for his own pleasure, and that of his friends, never would increase the bulkiness of the bank-roll; and your astute producer and distributor is well aware of this fact.

As a newcomer to the motion picture field I quite naturally feel I have much to learn. Yet there are some methods, now practiced by those who dictate advertising policies of various concerns and individuals, which I think I will not attempt to learn. Because they start nowhere and end in the same place.

In my brief experience I have made a discovery; your average producer or distributor (both, if you please) is drastically modest. He is like a violet, in this respect, on a lovely morning all covered with dew. He does not wish to see his name more than five times on every text page of each trade publication, nor in type larger than a point in such ads as he runs.

This lack of modesty, in the course of things, has developed the imagination of the press agent representing such modesty, who in his zeal to please the boss has completely exhausted the available adjectives in the English language, and, in some rare instances, invented new ones.

Frankly speaking, I regard swell-chestedness and superlatives as a pair of twins destructive, in the long run, to whoever uses them. Conceding that they impress, for a time, the ignorant or specious exhibitor, there is precedent enough to prove that they ultimately defeat the very purpose they are intended to further.

There is just one excuse—and only one—for publicity (by which I mean paid ads and articles of news or feature interest available for printing in the reading pages of a trade publication). That excuse is to acquaint exhibitors with facts (not buncombe) they want to know.

Foursquare Pictures, Inc., holds that view. George Backer, president of the company, is a stickler for facts and for consistency. He will not tolerate a misstatement concerning any Foursquare product; and no pecuniary gain could induce him to move a hair's breadth from his principles. Jacob Wildberg, our treasurer, is another man of the same sort.

Is it any wonder, with two such men behind me, that I find among my various duties in the Foursquare organization a genuine pleasure in the advertising and publicity department?

I won't deny that an ad must have its punch, or that a story intended for publication, a degree of readability. But adjectives in ads and flub-dub press stories are a drug on the motion picture market—a combination that deceives no intelligent person and is becoming less read every week because of the species of dope employed.

I mentioned in a preceding paragraph that there is only one excuse for publicity of any sort about a picture which those controlling it want to book. That is to reach just as many exhibitors as is possible.

If we pause carefully to consider the function of advertising it is apparent that the speed of its operation is the real reason for its being. Were there an abundance of time for the purpose we could spread the information by word of mouth.

But time, where motion pictures are concerned, is more precious than in any other form of salable merchandise; which is the main reason why printers' ink is a necessity for the picture. Because once ready for the market the distributor (and the producer, unless he has sold outright the negative) must shoot, and shoot quick.

In preparing advertising copy I hold to the view that it should be highly informative. Pick out the selling point in the picture—the one the exhibitor will be interested in—and tell about it. Specific elements in that picture are the things to emphasize, not some general utterance about its being the "best ever." Even if the exhibitor reads such a statement he will not believe it. And above all things, be brief, illustrate the ad (if it...
THE RIDICULOUS DISTRIBUTOR

"Three will be healthy a week is possible between Dale's nature."

A press story should never be written unless there is something to say. Then it is well for the writer to give every publication one which differs in its phraseology from all others and to remember the geometric rule that "the shortest distance between two points is a straight line."

I might continue further in setting forth my ideas on the use of the daily newspaper, the nationally-circulated magazine and billboards—not to mention other valuable mediums—as measures to create patrons for the exhibitors who have booked pictures a distributor has to sell.

But the editor told me to write "about a thousand words," and editors, we know, have a diabolical faculty in wielding the blue pencil.

A FEW STRAIGHT TIPS

PICTURE PUBLICITY SHOULD BE CONDUCTED ON THE BASIS OF GIVING BOX OFFICE VALUE TO EXHIBITORS

WHEN Henry E. Dixey some years ago produced "The Man On the Box" there was a line in the play that is a classic—"What's the use of lying when you're all alone?" The aptness of this truism occurs constantly in reading a film trade paper. It seems to be the object of so many publicity men to weave fanciful romances, apparently for the purpose of affording either amusement to the exhibitor or making a healthy looking "string" for the boss.

It isn't possible that the press agent thinks he is putting it over on the management of "Hilsdale's Palace Theatre." The manager of this theatre is no fool. He knows that although The Hilsdale's Home News (subscription $1.00 a year: outside the county $1.50, and no farm products taken in exchange) uses the press agent's bung for space fillers, it will not bring patrons into his theatre. And it is this point that one must particularly observe in publicity—all copy issued should be of a constructive nature. The sort that will make more money for "Hilsdale's Palace Theatre."

Furthermore, there should be better co-ordination between the publicity department of film companies and trade papers. The aim of both should be to benefit the industry. To afford the exhibitor all information possible that should make it profitable for him to enter into contracts with producers for their output. So all publicity matter must have a news value.

To illustrate: Quite recently one of the large companies, through its publicity bureau, sent out a story concerning one of its stars, who, to give her art full sway, was compelled to eat a quart of pickles in order to make her bilious so that she could simulate seasickness in a picture. What earthly good is such a tale? What "dampflouth" would want to see this star because of this tale—unless he wants to see whether or not the press agent was lying?

Another favorite yarn often used and which lacks value of any sort relates to "John Henry Ironsplitter." We are informed that he recently disposed of his patents for manuecuring beer bottles and has formed The Exalted Motion Pictures, Inc. John Henry's press agent sends out a story that his boss is making a tour of the United States (from 42nd Street to Bronx Park on the subway). Mr. Ironsplitter wires back to the home office that the exchanges report a healthy condition of the potato crop and should bring lag returns to the Exalted Company.

We are also acquainted with the weekly platitudes of our beloved centre pole of the industry, Jacob Bang-starter, who furnished the exhibitor with "weakly" drool of what the public will want a year after next in the way of pictures: what sort of stories are going to be the style for eleven reel features in 1942. That he stands for purity on the screen, at the same time calling attention to the box office value of "Was There a Mitigating Circumstance to Her Sin?"

All this rot leads to nowhere. We constantly hear the hue and cry that the motion picture industry is not given the consideration that it deserves as one of the biggest institutions in the United States. The reason is obvious. The heads of most of these concerns place themselves in such a ridiculous light, by means of pilling publicity, that the exhibitors, let alone the public consider these executives largely as jokes. And yet the publicity man continues to send out weird stories carefully "carlton copied" and curses his luck when he sees what he thinks should have been a page story, given a "three agate line" mention.

The press agent can perform a great service, not alone to the man that hires him but to the industry that supports him, if he will carefully study the policy and style of the different trade papers and write his news items with the individual touch that these papers desire. In this way he is sure to get a proper display for his items of interest and also be of service to the publication that generously accepts his copy.

It has been often said that the surface of the motion picture industry field has only been scratched. If this is true no one is more responsible than the press agent, who keeps patrons out of theatres by writing pure bunk about his company and its stars. Truth is stranger than fiction, why lie?

In dealing with the exhibitor, for he is the man the press agent should try to reach above all others, stick to the truth: tell him just what he is going to get with his pictures; give him information that he can use in his local papers to boost his box office receipts.

Any organization putting out a picture a week should have quantities of news concerning the making of the picture; matters of interest about the actors; valuable selling points for the exhibitor, or in other words, how to put the picture over.

This is valuable to all concerned and does not abuse the patience of the trade paper editorial staffs by handing out inane inanities.

Constructive news, making for bigger box office values for the exhibitors, should find a ready reception in the offices of trade publications.
The House Organ and Its Place

Editor of the Moving Picture Weekly Tells How a “House Organ” Can Become a Valuable Advertising Medium

It is impossible not to become personal in an article such as this, for experience is the only standard by which success or failure may be judged. The history and present status of the Moving Picture Weekly, the house organ of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, may be interesting as illustrative of the general propositions set forth above. The Universal has never had a man who had fought for his advertising. The house organ, the old Impet, was a man who had fought and won. It is the only one of its kind that has R.H. Cohan, its first editor, gave it a character, which it has striven to maintain in each of its subsequent issues, of fearless, uncompromising candor and aggressiveness. Even before he left Universal, exhibitors came to look up to the Universal organ as an exponent of popular taste. When it has fallen from that character in any degree, then the results are always noticeable.

One of the dominating features of the Impet, the Universal Weekly and the Moving Picture Weekly has always been the Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talks. They form the keynote of Universal advertising, Universal publicity and Universal salesmanship. Thousands of exhibitors read them religiously every week and a weekly comes out without one, as has happened once or twice, the editor hears about it instantly. With inspiration such as this, it would be a strangely passive editor who failed to carry out the pepful platform.

The Moving Picture Weekly has been all through the experience of serving two and three masters, but is now thoroughly committed to the “For Exhibitors Only” policy, though it had to give up many thousands of paid advertisements in doing it. The single-minded policy has enabled every page in the book to conform to one of three uses: selling film, helping the exhibitor to make money on the film he buys, or building up the prestige of the Universal name. The Moving Picture Weekly has no other purpose. It has been demonstrated that it could make money. That was not its purpose, and it could never have fulfilled its purpose while making money. It finds its greatest purpose in helpfulness to the exhibitor and in carrying the universal message into every moving picture theater in America.

So much for the personal. Speaking impersonally, the house organ must never be allowed to become stale. It should be entirely new not only in material each issue, but in make-up and features. The trade paper has an advantage which is inherent in human nature in that it is paid for, and it is only human nature to try to get your money’s worth out of what you pay for. To overcome this disadvantage the house organ must command interest by the smartness of its appearance and content. The cover is the first consideration, and if it does not look attractive it is quite likely to be laid aside till a more convenient season; which usually never comes.
Once the reader's attention has been aroused by the cover, it is the aim of the editor to have his material in a house organ so cunningly arranged that the reader will not lay down the book until he has finished it. No house organ should be so big that it cannot be entirely absorbed at one sitting and without tiring the reader. The routine and help should be so arranged as to be easily detached and used separately. They should never be put all together in a block, but should be scattered through the book. And every article, advertisement or help should be carefully measured by the editor's scale of requirements, for paper, engraving, ink, labor and printing are mighty high.

An Originator of House Organs

H. J. Streycrman, Publicity Man and Motion Picture Expert, was the Father of Several.

In the motion picture business the house organ has been a much abused instrument, for the value of this adjunct to exploitation is measured entirely by the uses to which it is put. Unless the volume of business done is sufficient to absorb the cost it is a prohibitive proposition. The modern press book of today has in a large measure made the house organ obsolete for the small producer or distributor, but it is a desirable aid to the exhibitor when warranted as an addition to the trade paper announcements and the press books. Special exploitation of pictures when released, not covered, of course, in the press books, which are printed some weeks in advance of the date the films are issued, and statements which would not be accepted in a trade paper on account of their being of an editorial nature, find a proper outlet in a house organ.

The worth of a house organ depends entirely upon the manner in which it is edited and the impression it creates in the minds of the exhibitors who receive it. The film man who believes that the house organ is the road to freedom from the editorial watchfulness of the trade papers and who thinks he can start his own paper and say anything he wishes has a low conception of the mentality of the exhibitors, for it is even harder to establish a house organ than a trade paper because it is obviously biased and published in the interest of the company that pays the bill.

I published what was practically the first house organ in the industry in 1910 for the New York Motion Picture Company, called "Film Fancies," and it could properly be called the first press book, for I wrote it in such a manner that its contents could be adapted to various methods of exploitation. In those early days there was little or no advertising done in the daily papers, and in fact we were continually bombarded in the columns of the biggest and strongest papers, which, having done their best to kill the industry and failed, are today clamoring for the advertising patronage of motion picture people. The battle was fought out on the screens and in the lobbies, and the pictures won.

Banners, slides and heralds were the advertising bulwarks of the picture house, and in "Film Fancies" I gave them material for this purpose. I personally edited each picture, and gauged my adjectives according to the individual merits, and the exhibitors knew they could accept my statements and go the limit in advertising the subject when shown at their houses if my announcement so indicated. "Film Fancies" was a twenty-page magazine, printed in two colors, profusely illustrated, and issued weekly.

The next house organ I originated was the "Universal Weekly," of thirty-six pages of the samie type space as the Moving Picture World, with cover in two colors. I only got out a few copies of this paper, as differences arose between Kessell and Baumann and the Universal and I cast my lot with the New York Motion Picture Company, and shortly thereafter became associated with the Mutual Film Corporation, just being launched. Again I originated a house organ, patterned after the "Universal Weekly," and it proved of material advantage in carrying messages to the theaters of the country. Conservatism was the keynote of this publication, which I called "The Mutual Observer."

Bert Adler, for years with Thanhouser, was the originator of "The Thanhouser News," which was a chatty sheet, covering the doings at the New Rochelle studios.

A house organ of great profundity was "The Implet," edited by Thomas Bedding for several years. Bedding is a scholarly gentleman, who evidently inherited an editor's desk as a birthright, for he has been identified with motion pictures since their inception, and has been the author of much literature that has been distributed in the trade.

Tom Quill, now in the lithograph business, started the Selig bulletins some years ago, and K. R. Nehls, now with the American as general manager, first attracted attention for his publicity work in this direction for George Kleine.

It will be news to many in the trade that the spectacular campaign by P. P. Craft some seven years ago covering "Dante's Inferno" and "Homer's Odyssey" was the work of Ben Atwell in conjunction with Frank Winch. Atwell, who is now with the Marion Davies Film Company, has been a prominent figure in the world of amusement, and ten years ago had the distinction of being the youngest managing editor of a metropolitan newspaper, occupying that position with the Chicago Journal.

With the advertising and publicity accessories now being provided to the exhibitor by first-class producing and distributing companies the house organ has lost its power of years ago as a business getter, for the business is more stable and there are not the frequent changes of management in the theaters, nor the influx of amateurs, apt to be hurred by the glowing self-praise usually found in the house organ. The larger theaters "are from Missouri," and as a rule want to see a film before they book it for a week's run, which is the customary time for a first run, and a great many of the smaller theaters are guided entirely by the bookings of the larger houses. The house organ, therefore, to be really useful to the person for whom it is intended should contain elaborated details of stories which appear in brief form in the trade papers and breezy news items for use in the programs.
Pity the Poor Press Agent

Press Agent of the Marion Davies Film Company, Inc., Relates Some of His Trials and Tribulations

WHY attempt to write anything about the press agent? He is almost always funny, because he is constantly attempting to attain the impossible, and to do that he resorts to such strenuous and drastic expedients that he falls victim to the peculiar relation of the sublime to the ridiculous. This applies with particular force to the theatrical press agent, but is also true of the picture publicity purveyor. When he succeeds, as he occasionally does, he is a hero—when he "falls down," as he frequently does, he is not only the butt of ridicule for those whose interests he is seeking to promote, but of the wide, wide world!

In order to keep his star or attraction before the eye of the public he must create news, and it must be striking news in order to successfully compete with the idiosyncrasies of presidents or ex-presidents, the eccentric doings of suffragettes, the picturesque and pyrotechnic outbursts of perpetual candidates, the upheavals of nature, and wars, murders, explosions, fires, etc., ad lib, ad infinitum. In other words all the world is against the press agent. His best "plant" may be utterly swamped by the legitimate developments of an hour, or, worse still, turned into a huge joke by the stupidity, perverseness or the over-developed sense of humor of someone upon whom he must depend, yet whom he dare not take into his confidence.

If the press agent can create real news—something authentic, logical, possessing human interest and involving action, and more particularly an official record—the editor must publish it to satisfy his readers, no matter how thoroughly he understands and appreciates that the news was manufactured and "planted." His greatest protection against the press agent's ingenuity is ridicule, and once that he scents a vulnerable spot in the "plant" he will turn the guns of ridicule upon it, even though the guilty press agent be his own brother. Then in the twinkling of an eye the press agent and his story are alike undone. The most remarkable example of this editorial alertness that has ever come under my observation occurred some twenty years ago and the author of the press agent's destruction is familiar to New York World readers under his signature, Louis F. De Foe.

Mr. De Foe was in those days a very energetic and highly responsible young reporter for the Chicago Tribune. That enterprising newspaper scented a sensation in the making "somewhere in Europe" and assigned Mr. De Foe to arrange for pages to be printed in German, French, Italian and Yiddish when the "story" developed. To find typesetters capable of producing these pages in the desired languages Mr. De Foe was sent skirrmishing along Clinton Street—a district devoted to foreign language newspapers, lithographers, junk shops, second-hand bottle dealers and similar concerns that choose low rent locations because of the character of their business. About the third place he dropped into on his quest he saw the printer's devil hanging up fresh proofs of a poster showing a ferocious appearing lion mangling a number of persons in the auditorium of a theater, with the caption, the man-eating lion who caused the panic at________'s theater.

Now safely on exhibition for the first time since, in an arena of stout steel bars.

De Foe searched his memory without recalling any such thrilling episode in the amusement institution mentioned and at once jumped to the conclusion that a "plant" had been arranged and that the posters were in the making for its exploitation. When he reported that night on the subject of German, French, Italian and Yiddish typesetting he laid on his city editor's desk a copy of the proof, which he had managed to purloin, with a memorandum to the effect that "something was scheduled to come off." The result was that the present eminent dramatic reviewer was ordered to attend every afternoon and evening performance at the third-rate theater in question until further orders. For days and for weeks he was fed up with wheezy and rheumatic song and dance teams, prestidigitators, mind-readers and the like that constituted the bill, until one evening an animal act was introduced. In the act was a mangy, toothless, superannuated lion. As soon as the brute appeared a dozen stage hands set up a tremendous hue and cry, and, armed with sharp steel bars, prodded the "man-eater" toward the footlights. In sheer desperation the weary bedeviled beast jumped into the orchestra pit to escape his tormentors, landing in a bass drum in which he was hopelessly entangled.

The musicians fled with the audience tearing after them and in a trice the house was emptied. In the excitement someone "pulled" the fire alarm box and the street was filled with patrol wagons and fire apparatus when the surging, battling crowd reached the outer air and safety. Meanwhile the "man-eater," finding exertion essential to untangling himself from the wreck of the bass drum, coiled himself up within its shattered shell and went to sleep.

By the time the police got through calming the crowd, arresting the "careless" trainers and attending to the other formalities of such a situation every newspaper in Chicago was represented by an excited young reporter, eager for details, both real and imaginary. All jumped to the story for a big spread—that is all except the Tribune, which gave the laud to the theater and to the other newspapers, reproducing the poster as well as a precise statement of what had happened by way of em-phasing and exposing the "plant." In this instance the justice of the Mikado was visited on the offenders—the punishment fit the crime. While the management was busy fighting to save its amusement license from revocation the erring press agent who had risked human life in the panic he had created to make a story was quietly discharged. Thanks to Mr. De Foe's alertness that sort of publicity promotion was discouraged in a manner that has not been forgotten in Chicago in all these passing years.

The suspicious watchfulness of the press is shared by all who come in contact with the press agent, particularly public officials. I rode by a round-faced, jovial Irish traffic copper stationed at Columbus Circle the other day and his merry wink recalled an episode of something more than four years ago when he, single-handed and alone, all but wrecked one of the largest shows in America in his efforts to prevent a publicity promoter from "putting one over on him." We were employing a band of wild men from the woolly west to lend color to the production—cowboys who rode like Sentuors. In order to attract attention to them we turned them loose just before noon daily and had them ride down Broadway.

Now, all sorts of parades and "hally-whoos" are forbidden on Broadway without a special police permit, and that is just why we did it. We calculated that some traffic policeman, alert in the enforcement of the law, would arrest the outfit. Of course, no Metropolitan newspaper could resist the temptation to photograph and describe in detail such an incident when the cowboys were before the bar of justice. The cowboys, in turn, would plead that they meant no harm, but had to exercise their wild horses and, being strangers, naturally selected a route where there were sights to be seen. A small fine would square everything and the publicity would be worth the price. For days we paraded, inviting arrest, but the policemen along the line smiled wisely and merely said: "You fellows know better than that, get out of here.

The chief of the cowboys was one "Wild Bill," who lived up to his name, at least in appearance. He vowed he would force an arrest, and the next noon they passed my good-natured copper friend, then stationed at Forty-sixth Street and Broadway, and he met that worthy's smiling relapse with a vile epithet.

"What ya mean by that?" demanded the policeman.

"Wild Bill" leaned over the neck of his horse and repeated the insult, while his companions guffawed.

There was a lightning swing of a club, followed by a crash and a groan and "Wild Bill" landed in a limp heap on the pavement. Before his companions could pull themselves together the angry copper had dashed through their ranks, clubbing right and left with one hand and dragging cowboys from their saddles with the other. Broadway was carpeted with cowboys—the worst liked lot of wild men seen in many a day. The horses ran in all directions, but a full dozen of their riders were too badly beaten up to attempt to follow. When he cooled down the policeman summoned a patrol wagon and bundled the whole crowd off to the Forty-seventh Street Police Station. Yours truly wasn't looking for any exploitation on that incident, but put in many an anxious hour trying to beg the papers to suppress publication. A band of cowboys who took a collective beating from a lone crossing copper could hardly be counted upon as an attraction to draw turn-away crowds to any box office.

The man who wrote the song "There's a Broken Heart for Every Light on Broadway" must have had the press agent in mind. The press agent is the chap who introduce gay in "Gay White Way." He is the author of most of the thrills and 98 per cent of the laughs that are associated with that institution, but few people have any idea of the rebuffs and the sickening bumps that he encounters in his gladsome career. The incidents referred to are typical of a bulging library or unwritten history on the subject.

Publicizing Pictures

By Kilbourn Gordon, General Press Representative for William A. Brady.

In these days when on every hand is heard something of the high cost of print paper and the scarcity thereof; when, due in part to this and in larger degree to other causes, space, at least in the newspapers is tighter than ever before, it would appear that brevity and meat are two words that should be constantly kept in mind by those whose business it is to publicize the pictures.

The day has past, if ever there was such a day, when great masses of mimeographed material and pictures despatched weekly far and wide find a welcome at the dramatic or motion picture desk. They usually find the waste basket unopened, and there is a reason for this. I have yet to find a newspaper that objects to anything worth printing. On the contrary, they welcome anything that even by a stretch of the editorial mind might be considered suggestive of news; but they abhor bunk, and bunk in quantity they've been fed for a long time. In consequence many are "fed up" and will not take the time, if they have the inclination, to look through what in the course of a year must amount to a ton or so of stuff in the endeavor to dig out a story, squib or what-not worth their while.

In publicizing "Stolen Orders," for example, prior to its presentation at the Park theater, it was our endeavor to send out only such stories as might have a direct appeal through timeliness, or the possession of a news angle, however remote. The presence in the production of United States battleships furnished such a story: the use of a dirigible balloon and a hydroplane another; while the fact that one of the scenes showed a gambling house operating full blast, with chemin de fer the game, came in very well in connection with the raids the district attorney was then making on various fashionable gambling clubs. These stories were short and enjoyed quite a little circulation.

If brevity is the soul of wit also is it the essence of space, for without it and something worth telling the chances of seeing one's handiwork in print are reduced to a negligible minimum.
Obstacles to Good Press Work

By Henry MacMahon

General Press Representative of Educational Films Corporation Reveals Weaknesses in the Picture Publicity System

PUBLICITY should be informing, entertaining and punchful. Many concerns go on the principle that the fewer the facts they give to their public, the better the results. The exact contrary is true of the written word. The more real facts you present, the better the public is served. The Munchausens and Cagliostros of modern press agency are passing now that the Arch Pretender of Europe is being thoroughly exposed and lying and deceit are relegated to the discard.

The facts, however, are not sufficient. It is necessary to select an entertaining angle from which to view them. Every press story should have a central point, a theme which the surrounding facts illustrate. It is the ability to seize this central point that constitutes journalistic ability. To many persons life's panorama presents a flat, gray, unrelieved surface; but the clever, trained intelligence picks out the interesting, salient feature and plays it up.

The third element of good publicity is punch or wallop. There must be an object to hit, a careful calculation of time and resource, a well-directed swing, and the landing upon the object with just the right amount of force to make the blow tell. The successful press agent knows what he is driving at, and possesses the driving power. He lifts the merely informing or the merely entertaining into the realm of dynamic energy by making it a missile to arrest popular attention or stimulate action at the proper psychological moment. In other words, he puts information or entertainment to work.

Why are these qualities of instruction, aesthetic pleasure and force so lacking in the run of film publicity? First, because of its vast volume. There is so much to be taken care of that almost necessarily it becomes a plodding routine. Many of the press executives are overworked. After a time they entrust the actual writing to understrappers and fritter away in business details the strength that should be devoted to composition. There follows the deadly atrophy of newspaper sense, and pretty soon the whole office is grinding out tons of copy that bears not the faintest relation to the needs of the public press.

Prexy—meaning the president of the "fillum" corporation—frequently jumps in and aids the process of decay by demanding superlatives, nauseous self-praise, and the "claim-it-all" style of puffery. The writing inevitably becomes false and impossible. The motion picture editor of the daily paper shucks the whole "fillum" envelope unopened, and the trade editor tears his hair and groans over the weekly Herculean labor of picking kernels of solid nutriment from the noisome mass of Augene refuse.

But worst of all, perhaps, is the want of close cooperation between journalism and the picture industry. The press agent, as I knew him in the first twenty years of my newspaper experience, was a mixer. He lived in the newspaper offices, did the boys many favors, asked assignments from the editors, wrote the stories to which he was assigned or which he had tentatively suggested for their approval. He had but one theatrical attraction to cover, and he covered every possible side of it. Now he sits at a desk, bosses a multigraph and a flock of assistants, and sends out thousands of press notices a week by mail and special delivery. The personal touch is gone, and it is imperatively to the interest of the industry to win it back.

A further cause of the poor average of publicity is the lack of faith in the American public's intelligence. We in the trade have been taught to death regarding the supreme value and importance of "selling copy." Sales arguments in every paragraph, in every sentence, in every line—such is the unceasing cry of the sales-maniacs. But take it from an old campaigner of many press battles, the only publicity copy of any sales value whatever is instructive, entertaining and forceful articles about your attractions; articles that the trained editor will put in his paper as news. Do not be afraid that the public cannot understand you if your aim is high. That public craves knowledge, inspiration, the fillip of imagination, the shock of fancy, the up-stirring of humor, the sense of power in great achievement; and you can't possibly cater to its high and spiritual amusement needs by the methods of the dry goods merchandiser or the vendors of plumbing fixtures, soap, shingles, drugs and patent articles.

The incidence of the war ought to cure many of our present publicity evils. Flub-dub about worthless pictures will be eliminated as soon as the Government has put the kibosh on these "non-essentials" and there are no more worthless pictures to scribble about. Overwriting will have to go because it will become too expensive. A few trained specialists will replace the flocks of mechanical assistants, the younger groups of whom will substitute the rifle, the bomb and the bayonet for the pen, the pencil and the typewriter. Quality not quantity of copy will be the desideratum. Conjoined with this should be the active aid of a trained newspaper man in every branch exchange office of the country. This, in order to localize the film news in every large center and present it to the local motion picture editors in form suitable for local requirements. A good story will be the be-all and end-all of the publicity man's existence, and in planting this he will best serve his master since live columns in influential newspapers are worth more than all the conventional junk that ever cluttered the mails and annoyed the gentle souls of the overfatigued editors.
Press Agent's Debt to His Profession

"Publicity that Will Not Stand the Acid Test of Serious Thought is Fatal" Says Well-known Writer

WITH the splendid opportunity for the study of the subject offered by the wide activities of the newspapers of the different world powers at the present time, a conscientious student of publicity, which is such a large and important part of the theatrical business, is so busy absorbing knowledge that it seems a waste of valuable time to air any personal views. That being the case—and using the one personal pronoun that will appear on this page—I will merely do a little thinking out loud with a view to suggesting to fellow showmen more important thoughts along the same line.

Of course that rare member of the theatrical profession who was prone to speak disparagingly of "press agents" has no longer any excuse for his ignorance. For three years he has followed the great publicity campaigns of the different governments at war. He has seen them cleverly molding public opinion of neutral countries in their favor, building up the morale of their own people, preparing them for new diplomatic moves, the launching of loans, the levying of taxes, the conservation of food, the prescription of man power and, even in the case of Germany—thank God—for news of halted offensives and tremendous losses. What could drive home both the importance and the dignity of "press-agenting" more than the vital part it is now playing in shaping the destiny of nations?

More impressive, even, than the efficiency and the magnitude of these nation-wide publicity campaigns is the success of the Allied group in retaining the confidence of their readers while the methods of their enemies have resulted in the gradual awakening of a distrust which has now completely nullified their efforts in the greater part of the world, not excepting large numbers of intelligent readers among their own peoples.

The big lesson to be drawn from the success of the Allies' publicity methods as opposed to the failure of the German "inspired articles" is the relation of "good publicity" to veracity. From the very beginning of the war the truth has been the mainstay of our writers, while lies have been the undoing of the German efforts.

Strange as it may seem to many who retain the mistaken idea that press agents cannot stick to the truth and still be press agents, publicity that is not founded on fact is bound to prove disastrous in the long run. Just as lies circulated by a government during the present crisis do that country's cause incalculable harm, so lies circulated through a business firm's publicity department will fail to increase that company's profits.

Thoughts along this line point to another dangerous reef where it might be a good idea to anchor a buoy. The reading public of our day is highly intelligent and woe to the writer who insults that intelligence! To the late Alexander Dowie of Zion City fame was accredited the speech; "I don't care what they say about me as long as they say something." Assuming that brains are at a premium, there might be some sense to such a statement, but, taking into account the fact that our average school boy thinks for himself, publicity that will not stand the acid test of serious thought is far more fatal to the man or the goods it advertises than silence. "Getting your name in the papers," unless the story that contains the name redounds to your glory, is worse than useless.

This thought may be brought home by recalling the announcement made at intervals during the past decade by different motion picture producers that Director So-and-So made a record by turning out several high-class, artistic productions in two weeks, four days, eight hours and thirty-two minutes. Imagine the long-suffering public storming the box office to enjoy one of these carefully staged offerings! Which is about on a par with the long, bouquet-laden article accompanied by photographs calling the attention of the world to the fact that "somebody" is again out of a job, having tearfully handed in his resignation to take up a new line of work to be decided upon in the near future. Overworked stars is another case in point. Imagine enjoying the performance of pretty little Miss Dimplechin when you have read that the poor girl has been working like a truck horse night and day and is laughing for your benefit in spite of the cramps that threaten to double her up like a jackknife at any minute.

Examples of publicity that defeats its own ends are more easily determined than are the more common forms of wasted efforts; articles with sufficient news value to warrant their appearing in print but lacking any element that awakens the favorable thoughts or live interest desired. The effect of this latter style of publicity which can well be termed neutral, if indeed it should not be branded as negative, might be likened to calling a busy man on the telephone when you have nothing to say to him. When your next call is announced do not be surprised if your prospect refuses to listen.

In a nutshell: the subject of publicity is a tremendous subject. It is a dignified subject, an important subject, and a subject that will be better understood and appreciated by the layman as the years pass. In this connection theatrical press agents of today find themselves shouldering a responsibility which is the direct result of the lack of serious thought given their profession by their predecessors.

To the failure of theatrical men of former times, to realize that theirs was the same profession that served the nation and the world in the molding of public opinion upon questions of vital importance, can be laid the fact that press agents' stories are too often considered open to doubt. To present-day publicity men is delegated the solemn duty of so establishing the ethics of their profession that articles inspired by business firms—or motion picture companies—will be recognized as being just as reliable as printed words inspired by the Government.
Where Do We Go From Here?

By Vivian M. Moses

Publicity Manager of Select Pictures Corporation Quandaries Over Squandered Space and Remarks: “Let’s Shoot the Dope Straight”

LET’S shoot the dope straight!

Man to man, brother to brother, eye to eye—cut out the devious by-paths that circumvent the hill of Fate, and steer an air-lined direct route of Sincerity.

News is news—just as much as pigs is pigs; and news is just as solid and tangible a fact as pork meat. As such, news is entitled to the front page—the front rank—the high seat. This, if you please, with the trade paper in mind—and it is the trade paper that we are dealing with.

Why tell how Lottie Coughdrop has refused a marvelous offer of marriage to an Italian nobleman, because she cannot bear to disappoint the thousands of fans who watch for her pictures on the screen? It means nothing in the life of the exhibitor; it adds nothing to the value as a star of Lottie Coughdrops: it produces nothing for the company that has put forth the publicity. Let us chronicle, rather, the less picturesque, workaday fact, that Norma Talmadge has begun work on such and such a production, based on a nationally advertised stage success—“De Luxe Annie,” for instance. This is important news to the exhibitor, and the homely, brief story disseminates information which is valuable to the producer to have told to his companions in the trade.

Returning to Lottie Coughdrops—for we will say her diligent P. A. keeps her ever before us—let us substitute for the story of the Italian nobleman, and his spurned offer of an honorable marriage, an honest-to-Gawd story, in which either Lottie or her producing manager tells the exhibitor that she has decided not to attempt any more out-vamping-Theda roles such as she had been doing for several productions past. Let Lottie say frankly, or say it for her, that super-vamp stuff sits badly on her lithe screen figure; let her say that she thinks the public is entitled to a rest. Or, brethren. If this be not the dope, we can just as well, and just as legitimately, play the reverse English on Lottie. She can be made an exponent of vamping to the nth degree. And the direct message can be given to the exhibitors that Lottie will continue her vamp roles “as large as life, and twice as natural,” or words to that effect.

The point is, getting Lottie’s name into print by the Italian nobleman route is valueless; getting it into print, even in less prominent type, and in less space, in connection with news of production is highly desirable. And, remembering our trade paper angle, any announcement on Lottie’s behalf as to the type of role she intends to play is legitimate news, prime for exhibitor consumption.

There is a subtle, wonderful, tonic quality about sincerity which accomplishes work that no amount of arch cleverness can possibly encompass. The earnestness of sincere endeavor shines through the crudest, roughest dress it is given. Splendid sincerity will leap from a story even if it is shackled with halting diction and lame composition. Such an announcement will run like quicksilver to the understanding of men, and plumb the bottom for which it reaches. There is no gainsaying sincerity: like an all-solving agent it encompasses doubt and suspicion, and overwhelms them. Meanwhile, side by side with your clumsy, sincere story, may travel a beautifully commonplace hokus pokus of fiction, seeking the same goal—and it will get nowhere. Where are the screen stars set up and maintained by endless sheaves of tales of lost diamonds, stolen bull dogs, gold mounted limousines, made-but-for-me perfumes—and the like? Where are the milk baths of yesterday—the tan bark tales of winters gone?

Trade papers are made for tradesmen, and we who write for them are tradesmen. So are their leaders, whether they be producing magnates, sales seeking exchange men, or inquisitive exhibitors. Let us then, in our trade papers, talk shop, not moonshine. Let us remember that Maybelle’s summer home on the Sound gets no money at the box office; that Harold may be a hell of a hunter, but since he never portrays anything but parlor types, his prowess as a Nimrod butters no bread.

It is well to write of Alice Brady that she will permit no doubling in her productions, but insists upon acquiring such skill as is necessary personally to do whatever work the double was to have been employed for. This is legitimate news. It tells the exhibitor that in the forthcoming production he is going to get honest goods. It insures him of a sincerity and earnest determination on the part of the star to make her picture as good as it can be made. Suppose, however, our story had been that Alice Brady was a devotee of dancing, and, together with some other person, had rented a studio for the sole purpose of there indulging in Terpsichorean delights, for which she stole every possible moment from her production work—what would the value be? Yet both these stories have been written, and sent out over the trade journal route (never mind who the stars were), and one found space in the columns of the trade papers as readily as the other. What was the result? In the one case, the chronicling of a legitimate piece of news, directly concerning a forthcoming production; in the other case, a waste of the time of all the people who worked on the story—author, editor, proof readers—and all the paper and ink which it took to print it; the sole accomplishment was getting a name into print, which could have been got into print in a way that was valuable.

Let’s shoot the dope straight!

This is a period for economies, and true scientific saving. And this applies to the direction of our energy as well as to our materials—time, and printers’ pabulum.
Putting Over Features on Broadway

How the "Tarzan" Campaign Was Planned and Why the Same Policy Holds Good for the Smallest City

W

ITHOUT ego, without any attempt at self aggrandizement and at the behest of the editor, I will attempt to chronicle, in the following paragraphs, the efforts which film authorities credit with having attracted unusual attention to the most recent picture
I handled, "Tarzan of the Apes."

As stated in the headlines, "Why the policy holds good in smaller places," the results in every instance in which the picture has been shown and the effort made to parallel the New York principle of explo-ation have been abundantly satisfactory to impress upon, even a doubter, the efficacy of the method used.

First. When "Tarzan of the Apes" ar-dived in New York in the form of a sample print, the producer did not like it and was skeptical as to the possibility of showing it on Broadway to profit. He was for disposing of it at once.

Second. No one, with whom we spoke regarding a Broadway showing, but that warned us to wait for an important theater, and cautioned us against going below
Forty-second Street.

Third. We were warned time and again to change the ending and make it a happy one, instead of leaving the audience in doubt as to the denouement.

And without ego, as I said above, I took directly the opposite path to that advised and in every instance went directly opposite to suggestions of well-known film men.

I contracted for the Broadway Theater in preference to either the Park or Forty-Fourth Street. I cut the ending to a more abrupt finale. I objected to Mr.
Bernstein's removing any one scene because of its seeming improbability.

Result:

"Tarzan of the Apes" played to profit after we had spent twenty-five thousand dollars on the Broadway engagement independent of the theater rental.

There is an old theatrical adage that credits shownmen with poor foresight and poor deductive powers.

I have taken it upon myself in all my work as a publicity man in the film business to discount every suggestion made by one of the so-called "Wise Men" of the industry. I have yet to work in co-operation with any producer who was capable of looking at the box office value in a film. I have yet to encounter one big producer who, aside from estimating in advance the earning power of conventional program pictures, can judge the value of a special feature within seventy per cent of its actual worth. So that I was justified in going opposite to the suggestions of kindly intending "Wise Men."

Even before we leased the Broadway Theater, I made a contract to dress the lobby with living monkeys and had secured the only two available apes in the East. I had sent out twenty-five thousand "broadside" picturing as vividly as ink can picture, the story, its great popularity as a fiction document, its wide-spread favor as a novel and the fact that it was better known than any other American novel of recent date.

Before we engaged a theater or considered doing so, there were few exhibitors who did not know what "Tarzan of the Apes" meant. It was a catch title. The busy exhibitor reads few light magazines or novels and I know that our hardest work lies in acquainting our consumer with the importance of the subject.

Still pictures, six to the set, broadsides in five colors, with one side pictorial and other text, descriptive of the story, and containing newspaper criticisms on the book, reached every exhibitor in the country before we announced our Broadway showing. Then using but three trades papers, I began exploiting the picture.

"Tarzan" is essentially a sensational subject and I used only sensational display advertisements. That our trades paper campaign was extraordinarily beneficial is attested by the fact that we heard personally from seven hundred exhibitors who requested rental or percentage terms and gave us some of their open dates.

Then we began our New York campaign. Through the commissioner of highways we secured a permit to place a huge banner across Broadway. The nights being lightless, this banner was the most prominent advertising feature possible and attracted wide-spread attention.

I began by using small space holders in the daily papers, with one paper each day carrying a large and sensational announcement. The big display was circled each day and thus, without lavish expenditure, I reached the entire daily paper circulation in greater New York at least, once a week.

Two days before the opening, the newsboys went on strike and for ten days there was practically no newsstand sales. The newsboys and newsstand strike began on Friday. By the following Monday I had printed six hundred thousand sensational cardboard postals of con-vienient size and used seventy-eight bonded distributors from various distributing concerns and, safe to state, believe that we reached over half a million homes in Greater New York.

Later I used the same method on Long Island and in the closer sections of Jersey.

When the newspaper circulations became normal again,
I again resorted to circling displays, using two papers a day for the talking advertisements, and so attractive did these displays appear that letters of commendation came from Mr. Erlanger and Jos. M. Gaites and other noted showmen and since then "Hearts of the World," "Kaiser," "Four Years in Germany" and other heavily advertised pictures have resorted to the style.

During the run of the picture, the huge ape was allowed to escape and invade Broadway on Saturday night, during the rush hour, with the result that the Associated Press syndicated the story throughout the country and every paper in the East played it up on the

The picture may have been a bit "worthy," but we were determined to have a "Tarzan of the Apes."
front page. There was compiled the following: 116 columns of reading notices, 42 special stories, 197 photographs, 11 cartoons and drawings published in the daily papers of New York and Brooklyn during the seven weeks' run.

The business at the theater remained as great during the newspaper strike as before and later and thousands of people came to the theater with the throw-aways in their hands.

The abrupt finale did its share toward arousing discussion, as in no few instances did the spectators come to various employees after the show and vent their disappointment in the ending and discussions among groups of the spectators in the lobby were rife after each showing.

The display of live apes and smaller monkeys and the decorating of the lobby in jungle style with tropical effect, made the patron entirely susceptible to the style of picture he was about to see.

Two hundred and fifty book and drug store windows were decorated with lobby frames, in which the theater name was featured. Every day during the run of the picture the snipe posters were changed. After each snow storm, and there were many during the engagement, we banked the snow piles with lathed cards and snipe.

We secured a prominent phrenological scientist to read the Ape's head in the presence of newspaper men. Members of the faculty of Columbia University and the heads of the Bertillon department and finger-print department of the New York police force used the monkey to experiment with, always with representatives of the press present. And the result, you know.

And that no advertising campaign, conducted in New York but what it can be paralleled in any town, is demonstrated by the results in fifty cities which have followed absolutely the campaign book issued in conjunction with the picture and where, in every instance the business has been record breaking.

Advertising and exploitation is merely a matter of studying the box office angle of your subject and then emphasizing that part of your picture.

Of course, all the exploitation and advertising and all the expenditures made could not have been done without the broadminded scope of William Parsons, the producer, who deposited a sum of money in a bank and then said, "GO TO IT."

Producers who expect to realize benefits from huge expenditures, must give their exploitation departments an opportunity to use their originality.

A publicity man capable of holding down a desk in a large organization has reached his position by means of demonstrated ability and should either be given carte blanche—or the gate.

Producers who have come from some commercial line, or from some other branch of the amusement profession, know little or nothing about advertising. His advertising man does. If you are driving a thoroughbred—give him the reins.

Troubles of a Press Agent
By Leslie Jordan,
Press Representative, International Film Service and Graphic Film Corporation.

HOW to become a successful press agent is a query calling for much cogitation. Offhand, the answer doesn't seem difficult: Make your stars and productions a little more talked about, see that the limelight of public inspection shines upon them a little more luminoously, than on rival stars and productions living in your vicinity—take the measure of your brother press agents and compete with them. And if you can't come out at the head of the list, make the aforesaid brothers break some records.

All of which sounds very simple but, unfortunately, there are difficulties. The life of an unsophisticated purveyor of amusement news is far removed from a path of roses and, even after his eye teeth have been sharpened, he will find the thorns have a habit of making their unwelcome presence felt.

And the fundamental thorn, the one from which all others receive their daily nourishment, is the doubting mind of the editor, the ever-present suspicion that somebody is trying to "put something over" on him.

In reality the press agent is the most guileless of individuals. He makes of himself a human dynamo, gathering scraps of interesting information from the air and generating news items. Like a bloodhound on the scent, he puts his nose to the ground, runs a piece of news to earth, serves it up in delectable form to his friend the editor, oftentimes only to have his veracity doubted. And to have the microscopic eye of an unbelieving editor turned upon his work, with the question mark ever preeminent, naturally hurts a self-respecting press agent's feelings.

Of course there may be times, when news is scarce, he allows his imagination to take flight, but if, in the flying, the public eye follows him with interest, surely, on these rare occasions, they are entitled to their little aeronautic adventure into the realms of fancy.

Primarily the press agent came into being for the benefit of the editor—the connecting link between the theater and the stage—and while he may now hang his Panama on the theatrical hatrack, he still retains an overwhelming desire to rest his feet, affectionately, on the editorial desk.

Possibly some future generation of press agents may enjoy the ideal condition this picture calls up. It may be that our sons and daughters, and the sons and daughters of present-day editors, may live together in complete harmony and contentment—but only if we, of this generation, are able to purge from the editorial mind the lurking and unwarranted suspicion, it apparently entertains, of our absolute trustworthiness from a legitimate news standpoint.

And so, for a press agent to be completely successful, it seems to me he should do more than promote stars and productions—it's up to him to do his share in a campaign to restore absolute confidence of our endeavors in the editorial mind, to make a study of the psychological conditions responsible for the existing suspicion therein and eliminate it completely by playing the game from the opposite angle.
Publicity Men In Organization

Get Together Meetings of Original “Space Grabbers” Develops the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, the Livest Organization in the Trade

MUCH water has passed under bridges since the day when the late Charles A. Dana exclaimed in a burst of editorial irritation: “The press agent is a pirate on the high seas of journalism!”

Perhaps it was Tody Hamilton or one of his conferees in the early school of P. T. Barnum publicity, who had succeeded in “stealing” a goodly portion of Dana’s jealously guarded space in The Sun, thereby calling forth this oft-quoted epigram of denunciation.

But since that time the press agent has almost succeeded in living down a reputation for flamboyant hardihood in his profession. He has almost succeeded in becoming a business man. In the course of the transformation, he may have lost something in picturesque interest, but it is also evident that what he now lacks in colorful irresponsibility, he has made up in solid achievement as a sales stimulator.

The growth of the business of producing and distributing motion pictures into the fifth industry of the United States during the past three years has developed a new breed of press representatives. It has also developed new problems in the publicity man’s never-ending task of keeping the names of his firm and its products before the greatest number of people in the most persuasive manner possible—at the minimum of expense.

With the idea of taking up for general discussion various matters coincident with the intelligent performance of the day’s work and the mutual increase of efficiency, a number of the more prominent advertising and publicity men in the films got together around a table in the Hotel Claridge one Wednesday afternoon early in August, 1916, and decided to form a regularly incorporated club.

This was the beginning of the organization known as the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., which is now generally credited with being the livest and most effective body of its kind that has yet grown up in the amusement field of this country.

In setting down a brief record of the association, it might not be amiss to state that the individuals who took active part in its organization, were originally members of the publicity committee of the now defunct Motion Picture Board of Trade. They were men of the stamp of Carl H. Pierce, T. M. Alexander, Arthur James, Pete Schmidt, Harry L. Keichenbach, P. A. Parsons, Paul Gulick, Lyman O. Fisk, Julian Solomon and others.

Having formed a habit of lunching together almost every week for something over a year for the purpose of discussing matters relating to the effective promotion of film sales, the members of this publicity committee decided to form an association of their own, when the parent organization finally succumbed to an acute attack of pernicious anemia. Upon making known their desire, Arthur S. Friend, attorney for the Jesse L. Lasky Company, courteously offered to draw up formal articles of incorporation free of charge and also to donate his services as legal adviser. This generous offer was accepted with a vote of thanks and on September 12, 1916, the articles of incorporation were finally approved by the proper authorities, and the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., came into being as a full fledged corporation for the transaction of certain definite activities, under the laws of the State of New York.

The aims and ideals of the association can be briefly stated best in the opening paragraphs of the by-laws, which read as follows:

“It shall be the purpose of this association to voluntarily foster the interests of motion picture advertisers and to promote a more enlarged and friendly intercourse between persons connected with the business of advertising motion pictures and general motion picture advertising, and to reform abuses relative thereto; and to voluntarily diffuse accurate and reliable information affecting the standing of persons engaged in, and with reference to the conditions, customs and usages of the trade or business of motion picture advertising, as well as affecting and relating in general to the motion picture industry.”

During the two years that have passed since the formation of the association, much constructive work has been accomplished; and at the same time, to quote a line from the annual report of President Arthur James, “the organization has succeeded in pulling up some of the weeds that were rapidly casting a shadow on our business standing in the world at large.”

In co-operation with the National Board of Review, the association has waged a successful fight for the suppression of objectionable advertising in territories where it was formerly a practice to exploit decent screen plays under a camouflage of misleading words as highly spiced and appealing to the morbid passions of humanity. In the states of Texas and Washington, in particular, successful warfare was carried on against such objectionable showmanship, until now the instances of this sort of thing are few and far between.

Through friendly co-operation with the trade press of the industry, a higher standard in advertising and publicity ethics has also been maintained.

At the outbreak of the war, the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers was the first organization in the United States in its field to mobilize and place before the federal authorities a detailed recruiting plan with lithographic posters, lantern slides and other patriotic propaganda material.

The message of the American flag—“If it’s worth living under, it’s worth fighting for”—thus spread broadcast, was soon on the lips of millions of American citizens, while military and naval authorities of the standing of General Leonard Wood, Brigadier-General Walsh, Captain John F. Lucey and Rear Admiral Usher, endorsed the work as the best advertising on behalf of recruiting put into effect by any civilian organization.

This group of motion picture advertising and publicity men was also among the first in the country to adopt resolutions urging Congress to repeal the "Zone System," as applied to second-class mail, and to institute a vigorous campaign against the effect to increase postage rates on periodicals, thereby preventing the wide dissemination of reading matter—and incidentally, publicity.

The association has also taken prompt and unanimous action against the present evil of buying up old pictures and reissuing them under titles differing from the ones they bore when first produced in order to mislead the public into the belief that the stories are new and original.

In formally turning over to the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers the task of managing the big international banquet to be held in New York, some time in September, to signalize the work accomplished by the screen in furthering America's war aims, the National Association of Motion Picture Industry has paid the smaller organization the most striking compliment that has yet come its way. But to those who have followed the record of achievement already compiled by the press agents' league, there is no doubt but that the commission will be executed with neatness and dispatch.

The officers and members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, include the following well-known advertising and publicity men:

President, Arthur James, Metro; vice-president, P. A. Parsons, Pathe; secretary, Allan Rock, Press Service Bureau; treasurer, Paul Gulick, Universal.

Board of directors, Arthur James, Metro; Allan Rock, Press Service Bureau; Terry Ramsaye, Mutual; P. A. Parsons, Pathe; Paul Gulick, Universal; Paul N. Lazarus, Vitagraph; Julian M. Solomon, Jr., Famous Players-Lasky; Jacques Kopfstein, Charles E. Moyer, Famous Players-Lasky.

At the present time the following members of the organization are enlisted in the patriotic service of the colors:

Service Department and the Exhibitor

By Julian M. Solomon.

Advertising Department, Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

It is remarkable what a small proportion of the exhibitors take advantage of the service offered by the producing corporations. After three and a half years of serving the exhibitor, the results show that the number of those willing to avail themselves of the opportunity of co-operation, offered by the producers, is surprisingly small. In the days when the Bosworth office, as a separate unit, was serving the Paramount exhibitors, at that time numbering about 4,000, we had what was called a red tab list which contained the names of all of those who accepted the offer of Bosworth, Inc., publicity and service aids. At that time only about two per cent. of the names on this list availed themselves of the opportunity to get the publicity and advertising service which was offered gratis. Since the amalgamation of the various units into the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation the list of exhibitors has increased very materially, but the proportion of real live advertising exhibitors in the smaller towns is still appallingly small. If one eliminates the first run houses—those playing the films within the first two weeks after release—the percentage remains the same.

Each time an offer of service is made to our list of contract holders, the same exhibitors reply every time. In other words no matter what new stunt you offer, you find that the same few live theaters are accepting your offer.

I venture to say that if one would take the files of the World for a year or two years back and look at the Advertising for Exhibitors Pages, he would find a very small proportion of the (15,000) exhibitors in United States were contributors to this column. A comparison of the names of contributors, with our own live wire list, I believe, would be startlingly similar. In fact, I believe that we can find about 95 per cent. of your contributors are on tour "extra live" list.

In spite of this fact, I am of the opinion that the quality of showmanship being displayed by the exhibitors, is increasing almost daily. This is being evidenced through the replies received to queries and problems published in "Progress Advance"—our house organ. The function of that magazine is to assist the exhibitor in exploiting the plays which we produce or distribute, and we find that the number who are taking advantage of this, is increasing constantly at an encouraging ratio.

On the whole I think that the present day exhibitor is far more progressive than the exhibitor of two years ago. It is not a matter of desire but a matter of evolution. If he is not progressive with the present pictures, and present cost of doing business, he has to quietly lay down and die, and each year sees the passing of more and more of the old school and the advent of the real honest-to-goodness showman. The signs of progress are certainly encouraging enough to continue offering, and giving service to the exhibitor.

"THE SOUTH IS BOOMING," SAYS WEAVER.

"The South is booming. Business is better than ever, and the people all have lots of money, which naturally makes the pictures' business good and makes the outlook for fall and winter particularly promising," declares George F. Weaver, the World Pictures branch manager, who was in New York City paying his home office a visit last week. "The South is cotton crazy," continued Mr. Weaver. "Even the old colored men who have been town characters for years in the smaller towns and have been notorious for never doing any work have felt the infection of the South's alertness and are astonishing their townsfolk by trying to rent patches of ground for the cultivation of cotton."

Quite Some Words Concerning the Noble Science of Writing Lengthy Stories on Short Topics for Scare Heads

[Editorial Explanation.—Considering war's rape of the ranks of Press Agentry, and desiring to serve ness have been devised as First Aids to those aspir- ness have been devised as First Aids to these aspir- persons who leave non-essential occupations and turn their hand to useful employment at the Wheel of Mimeography. Knowing absolutely nothing about the profession of Press Agentry we claim special fit- ness to serve as guide to those who know still less.

Press Agents have always come from somewhere no matter where they may go. It has been ever thus since The Dove rushed the first piece of publicity into the Ark with the request: "Please Play Up." There is no sign to this day of any change in possibilities.

Publicists will continue to come from somewhere, equipped mentally in ripeness of experience, and if these halting efforts at First Aid to Oodles of Copy will encourage some brave heart to tackle the easiest job in the world we shall rejoice in the opportunity that has been shoved upon us by the Simon Legree who dictates what shall be done hereabouts.—The Idiot.]

First Aid to Born Press Agents.

What we need is more press agents. The search for jobs may be left until there are more pub- licists to fill them.

Anybody can become a press agent. Just ask anybody and they'll tell you that the great secret of their life is their gift of a talent to write pieces for papers to print.

Unfortunately, for the reading public, these writings of gifted everybody seldom get into print until they be- come defendants or corespondents in divorce proceed- ings. More often, however, they are poets.

Verse, worse and then some, fill the mails that carry to newspapers the gifts of born press agents. To en- courage this great industry we have started this College of First Aid.

It's folly to let the impression continue that to become a press agent one might better have originally enjoyed good health and newspaper training. This, Melanchon, is all wrong.

Many a good newspaper editor has become utterly ruined through shifting his job to that of press agenting. Given a mimeograph, running loose at their behest, newspaper men have been known to turn out publicity that would suddenly become waste-basket fodder at their very own hands in their former occupation.

Food Will Win the War.

Press agent is one thing, but to be a Director of Publicity is an entirely different matter. They never run two alike in the same font.

Being a press agent is a job; being a publicist is an occupation—but when one becomes a Director of Publicity it is a cinch.

That's why all press agents have a cinch.

The life of a publicist is one round of joy. Being a man of imagination, his principal idea of a wonderful time is expressed in writing about the summer homes, automobiles, lap-dogs and swimming pools of the company stars while he must content himself with a cozy little flat in Harlem.

Space must be stolen and editors become willing acces- sories before, after and during the fact. So few editors own the paper they work for that they must look first to their own job—and then at the publicists publicity.

The Skipper of a mimeograph, as has been so well said and often, must be a man of ideas. His first idea must be to get a job. His subsequent ideas must tend to the hold- ing onto thereof.

Having the ideas and the job, his troubles begin.

Who, among the bosses, looks upon the press agent with friendly interest? Nobody.

Pay Your Tips in Thrift Stamps.

Who, among the employees, fail to wave, where the publicist can hear: "It's pretty soft for you?" Not one.

As for the bosses, some of 'em hire press agents for the sole reason that they like big words in their "state- ments of policy." The bigger the words the longer the article. The longer the story the better it is for the scrap book. The thicker the scrap book the quicker the press agent "gets the gate."

Everything in show business works for the benefit of the publicist—excepting the fact that the publicist is the only employee who never gets a benefit.

The men who work at the public through box-office windows have a club and enjoy an annual benefit. And the publicist, who never gets a benefit, is compelled to work for the treasurers' benefit publicising.

The publicists have a club, but have never had a benefit. Matters were moving smoothly toward that juicy consumption at $7.00 per and everything looked rosy—until the bosses stepped in and grabbed away the one soft piece of work the press agents ever had in sight.

That's the way with bosses. They know they can do it and they do. However, the publicist, without the bosses, would prolapse—fall down or out, as the dictionary says.

Therefore, while publicists endure bosses must be en- dured. If there were no bosses, there would always be the Efficiency Department—so what's the use (of the E. D.?).

Stand by the President.

Speaking of the bosses, James Gordon Bennett, second, had the right idea. When he died and his will was read most words in it were devoted to founding a home for aged, infirm, penniless or incapacitated newspaper workers. That's what we call class.

Who shall be the first film magnate to endure himself similarly? The line, may it be said, forms as usual, to the right.

The E. Pluribus Filium Co. Home for Publicity Di- rectors!

(Due apologies are extended to Terry Ramsaye for borrowing the name of his great and promising organiza- tion—accent on the promising.)

Think, Mr. Boss, how great the honor would be to have the name of your "personal star," your favorite film brand or the moniker of your organization perpetuated while mimeographs shall last!

There's no real necessity of going the full James Gor- don Bennett route. Do it now!

May we hope that the organization known, on the curb, as the All Mighty Press Agents will make a few speeches about this at their next $7.00 dinner? Even press agents get old. Even publicists, eventually, might use a home.

The work of publicising shows, films and theater must go on, even if press agents never have a home.

"Home is where the hat is," has long been the motto of the publicists.
The Man Behind the Man Behind the Gun.

Therefore, Melanthoch, when you leave your childhood scenes between Cuttyhunk and Pumsutawney to venture into the toil of press agenting don't depend upon any boss doing a Bennett. He may and then again he may not.

But what the boss is sure to do is this: He will see that the skids are always well soaped. Only ceiling-walkers have been able to beat the system.

"Here's your job," says the boss.

And as he turns away he softly murmurs: "I'll dare you to keep it."

So saying he forthwith begins to co-operate with the publicist to that end.

Sometimes matters go on this way for a whole week. Frequently a leaf representing one month is torn from the Charter Oak Meat Co. calendar before anything happens.

Occasionally it takes several months; in rare instances, years may lapse before the same boss says the same thing to the man he has hired to take the place of the man he has fired:

"Here's your job. I dare you to keep it!"

Surely, his faith in everything but a German's word of honor will lead you always into other and better jobs, Melanthoch. The process has established the most famous saying known to the curb:

"Who are you with now?"

Only last week one of the New York banks gave a dinner and a pension to a man who had been in continuous employ of the same money changers for fifty years. But he was not a press agent.

Be a Doubleyou Ess Eser.

Good publicists must have imagination. The better the imagination the better the publicist. Every day some good press agent imagines himself right out of a job.

But he's a consistent bird, this press agent as a clan. He imagines himself right into another. Thus onward he goes, always onward, imagining himself into better jobs.

It's when his old imaginer won't turn over that the film boss who impersonates James Gordon B. will endear himself. That home for incurable press agents would be a great help. Certainly, at least, a considerable help.

The noble art of space-stealing is the only virtue on the calendar that hits on all cylinders. It never misses. It never back-fires.

Books of synonyms have been compiled to canonize the ancient art. Adjectives were especially created for the use of publicists.

To others who use them they are as Liberty Bond buttons on the lapels of a German reservist's coat. "They make," as has been said by our betters, "what is, what it ain't."

Bring with you, Melanthoch, your own ideas, for the old ones have been well massaged. And the war as per our best little guessers, won't last very long after Pershing's Crusaders have sat upon their palms.

These have been used: Service flags; God-mothering Regiments; Letters to President Wilson and answers from Joe Tumulty; Smokes for Soldiers and Sailors; Letter-writing Clubs for the Boys Over There; Red Cross, Thrift Stamp, Knights of Columbus, and other "drives" around the mimeograph; office staffs knitting sweaters during business hours; tambourine caddy for the Salvation Army—all these and many other patriotic movements have served time as space stealers.

The Lord Loves a Self-Commencer.

These have not: matters of business policy as relating to the conservation of platinum in thinking up main titles; ditto as to ebony, ivory, concrete and other precious materials used in the Efficiency Department; the relation of steam dredges in reducing the overhead on mimeograph ink; how a famous film star who used to cry "Line Up!" in back yards of tenements attained a voice in grand opera; Government ownership of reel-bands; the boss's opinion of his competitors; the high salaries paid to press agents as compared to the pittance drawn by the stars they write about; motorboat trips by canals and inland waterways by general managers of exchanges visiting territory; finger-printing film stars animal pets; conservation of copy paper—and one or two other methods of selling films to the exhibitor by publicity methods.

Said the boss to the man he had hired:

"Here's your mimeograph, Your working staff, Your typewriter, desk and—your job."

Allan Rock

COMMENCED his career in the motion picture industry in 1913 with the organization of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, and until last year served the interests of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. On January 1, 1918, Mr. Rock organized the Press Service Bureau for the purpose of utilizing to a greater extent the newspapers throughout the country for a wider publication of motion picture news. Since the first of the year Mr. Rock has strengthened his organization by the addition of a motion picture department to handle the exploitation and merchandising of feature films.

Through the syndication mediums offered by Mr. Rock film publicity representatives are utilizing to the fullest extent the new field of operation presented to them. The publication of the novelization of film stories in newspapers is being recognized by P. As' as valuable in the successful marketing of a production. Mr. Rock was elected to the secretariaship of the A. M. P. A. in September, 1917.

JOHN FLINN TALKS ON INDUSTRY'S DOINGS.

At a dinner given by The Hundred for One Club last week John C. Flinn, director of advertising and publicity of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, made an address concerning the motion picture industry and what it has accomplished during the past year. The club membership is made up of one man from every industry, and Harold M. Pitman, of the counsel for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is the member representing the motion picture enterprise. Mr. Flinn spoke at his invitation. The dinner was well attended. Mr. Flinn's speech received much appreciative applause.
Publicity

What It Is and Should Be and What It Very Often Is Not. Western Men Lead In Hustle

INTRODUCING the general subject of this special number, the editor points out that publicity is not paid for as opposed to advertising, which is. This may be a good enough rough definition, but we think that a better definition may be had, for sometimes advertising is publicity and some intended publicity is merely advertisement. There seems to be a more adequate rule.

Publicity is the creation, through propaganda, of a tradition favorable to a person, place or thing.

This may seem a bit too sweeping to those who recognize only the newspapers as a source of publicity, but it is close to the mark. Publicity popularizes the institution rather than some single feature of that institution. The man who advertises "Mary Pickford in a New Film" is an advertiser, but he is not a publicity man. If you are keenly eager, as the result of publicity, to see Miss Pickford, you may respond to this appeal, but the announcement by itself will not attract. Getting a little more definite he may advertise: "Mary Pickford in How Could You, Jean?"

This is better because it is more informative. Now you know what you are going to see. Perhaps the title sounds interesting. You may not care for Miss Pickford's work, yet you may want to see what it was Jean did to call forth the shocked reproach. It is still an advertisement, but to a mild extent the title is publicity. But a publicity man would probably write it:

See Mary Pickford Kiss the Cow in "How Could You, Jean?"

Now advertisement becomes more strongly publicity. People who like Miss Pickford will be more than ever determined to see her in order that they may witness the unusual oscillation. People who do not care either way will wonder what it means and go to find out. It may arouse some talk, and talk—word of mouth advertising—is pure publicity with 100 per cent circulation. If a cut of Miss Pickford whispering her love secrets to the milk business be added to the bare announcement, the publicity value of the advertising is increased. She doesn't really kiss the cow, but it looks as though she were about to, and the visual appeal of the picture is added to the mental argument of the type.

But advertising Miss Pickford in one subject is but a limited form of publicity. It is but a meagre contribution to the tradition of excellence already built up about the star. It will derive more from previous publicity than it will add to it, but it will add to that tradition if the current offering be well played.

Advertising without the element of publicity is of no value whatever. The advertisement merely makes capital of the publicity, and if there is no publicity from which to draw the advertisement will not pull. The mere announcement of a certain star in a named play will not draw unless either star or play enjoys publicity. It is no disparagement to Miss Pickford, for example, to say that nine-tenths of her success is due to publicity, for publicity is nothing more than the creation of a tradition in her favor, a capitalization of her personal charm, her acting ability and the adequacy of her productions. The first two were publicity when she was still employed by a company so averse to publicity that it is said to have discharged one actress for permitting her name to be given out. The publicity worked in spite of this restriction and "Little Mary" was known and loved long before Mary Pickford was heard of, yet she did not return full value to her employer until further adroit publicity by the Lmp made her more fully known by her rightful title. On the other hand, all the publicity for book and play served better to advertise "Three Weeks" than the vogue of the star, for the preponderance of the publicity was in favor of the play, and the star capitalized this publicity to her own benefit in furthering her reputation as a leading player of vampire roles.

Publicity is the establishment in the public mind of the belief that the motion picture furnishes good entertainment in general and that certain stars provide better entertainment than others through their greater abilities. In the days when the players were unknown or provided merely with local names according to the fancy of the audiences, the motion picture had to carry the publicity load. When the players became known, the vogue of the pictures was greatly increased, for now the fans had something definite upon which to pin their loyalty. The person, the individuality, always possesses a stronger appeal than an object. It is easier to centre admiration upon Mary Pickford or Charles Chaplin or Bill Hart than to like pictures as such. There is more the suggestion of intimacy, of close contact, and the bulk of the prosperity of the business is and ever will be due to the stars.

It follows then that publicity should be the exploitation of star and, through the star, the production companies. On the other hand, many companies seek to take the position that their stars are popular because of their affiliation with this or that company. Undoubtedly this is true at base, for left to themselves the stars inevitably commit self murder so far as public favor is concerned. Were they always permitted to do as they want instead of as they should, they would last no time at all. A few years ago Augustus Carney made a hit in Essanay films, but left to gain greater opportunities with Universal. He did as he pleased, and pleased no one but himself, and he has been forgotten. The list might be extended indefinitely. To this extent, at any rate, good management enhances the star's ability, but both good management and a star are essential to good publicity.

It is perhaps only natural that the publicity men employed by the companies should seek to gain publicity for brands rather than for the stars, and even at the expense of the stars, but even where they seek to advertise the stars they frequently fail through the use of material so poor that it is not printed or that fails to gain effect where it is given space. The press story is the best form of publicity, but it must be a readable and plausible press yarn and not of the “dog” variety. The stolen jewels plant was barred long before pictures became important, but the raided flat or dressing room is still prevalent, and it would take a certified accountant to figure out how many automobiles have been purchased by press agents for their stars. The announcement of a new car for this or that player no longer thrills the reader to the marrow of his bones, but the bulk of the copy pleases the boss, and it is easy to write so the press men keep on buying more automobiles than the country can manufacture. It never was good publicity, and it never will be, but probably the supply of mental autos will never be exhausted. The near-fatal accident in which the victim “pluckily insisted upon finishing the picture” are more numerous than owners of Liberty Bonds, but they keep on coming, though they no longer fool anyone and frequently tire many, and stories of million dollar stars are as numerous as $50,000 pipe organs in ten cent theatres, though it is never added that the star pays all production costs out of the million.

Read over the trade papers, the local photoplay page and the motion picture magazines intended for public sale and it is seldom that a really good press story is discovered. Most of them are dulled through repetition or else hopelessly impossible through lack of plausibility. Press agents seem to feel that so long as they send out a certain number of mimeographed sheets each week they are performing the services for which they draw salary. They are not. They are swindling their employers unless they can write stuff that will be accepted by the press and the public alike. It is seldom that in any batch of flimsy ten per cent can be found available as even passably good and the greater the volume of press work the smaller the amount of really good copy.

The house manager is generally as bad. He uses the mats supplied by the companies or follows the ready-set forms. Few set out to build up on the suggestions given, and fewer still realize that the best publicity for the stars and pictures is work they do themselves for the stars they play in the method best suited to their own town and even to their own clientele in that town. It has been estimated by a man who has studied the matter closely that not more than two per cent of the exhibitors are good advertisers. They do not know and do not seem to care what publicity means. They advertise perfunctorily, they clip and paste the reading notices the company supplies and they complain of bad business. The bulk of them make no effort to do more.

Strange to say, the smaller the town the more enterprising the exhibitor is, as a rule. He has to hustle or get out, and so he either hustles or makes place for someone who can, and broadly speaking, the bulk of the good advertising is done west of the Mississippi. Not all hustlers have taken Horace Greeley’s advice by any means, but the further west you go, the higher the general average rises until the Pacific Coast yields by far the best average results.

And yet it is very simple. All an exhibitor has to do is to interest his own patrons in the stars he offers at his house and to interest them in the house itself. The first can be done through the use of press matter in the program and newspaper, and the second by maintaining a clean and inviting house, giving to it an atmosphere of briskness and then talking about its general excellence. It means the possession of some ability as a writer, a fair knowledge of type and type setting, enthusiasm and common sense. It is perhaps to be regretted that the companies give as much aid as they do. The exhibitors, as a class, hustled to much better effect five years ago when they had little or no aid than they do now when it is easier to lay back and complain that the companies do no more, than it is to get out and make individual effort count. More space is being taken in the newspapers. A greater number of lithographs are being posted, but the business of publicity is in most cases less successful today than it was four and five years ago. Let’s wake up.

The Personality of a Theater as an Advertising Factor
By Harold B. Franklin.

EVERY one prefers to meet with a delightful personality—he it a man or the edifice he has built. As a pleasing personality popularizes the man so will a personality popularize your theater.

The same reason that prompts the merchant to erect a magnificent department store, with a reputation for service and fair play, should prompt the progressive manager to make his theater a daily reminder of the high standing of his institution among particular people. Do you think that a bank builds its sumptuous home, costing millions, merely to satisfy a whim? No! It is there in actual stone and bronze as a monument of its stability and strength—merely an advertisement—expressing boldly its personality.

Every business reflects the personality of the man who holds the reins. He should possess imagination, sense for style, and ability in organization. Mere business ability by itself does not make a permanently successful manager or theater. Is the theater a jumble of rush, push and disorder? That is the spirit of the manager. He is not big enough to make an atmosphere. On the other hand, there are theaters where things are organized, systemized, and where the rule is prompt, respectful and intelligent service. There is a zest, a push, a go about everything that is infectious and contagious. The appearance and conduct of your theater reflects the patronage you play to. Every nicety and refinement is a means of bringing a new patron.

You have advertised your theater as being foremost in your locality. Prove it! Make good to your patrons! After your patron buys his ticket it depends entirely what impression your theater makes whether he comes again or not.

A theater sells two things—entertainment and service. Give them choice entertainment and generous service. Make your theater wear a smile. The proper frame of mind for your patron is important. Enthusiasm should be apparent. The public does not like dead ones. The big theater succeeds because service is given on a lavish and efficient scale. Make your theater big!

Courtesy, a big factor in the personality of your theater, can be counted in dollars and cents. It increases your business because it makes friends of your patrons. Thus out of polite acts dollars are coined. It's the way you run your theater that makes it different, not the walls or decorations. The supervising mind of the manager is always in evidence in every detail. Make the personality of your theater stand out. It is the best advertisement you can get.

Johnstown Publicity Man Tells Why "Aids to Exhibitors" Fail to Aid in the Proper Advertisement of Films

In PICTURE advertising, we are asked to believe, is the big force that must be put behind pictures to put them over. If this is true, and I believe it is, then the better the advertising the greater the results are going to be.

Publicity men for producers are constantly dinn ing this newspaper idea at us. But they evidently don't believe it themselves, or, if they do, they have a rather curious idea of what theatre advertising should be. I don't know where the producers dig up the men who map out the press sheets, or whether they are Broadway press agents or folks who hold their jobs by virtue of relationship with company officials. What I do know is that they are either unaware of practical advertising needs, or don't care a continental whether or not the exhibitor gets what he should have.

Instead of seeing that advertising aids sent out on pictures are the sort that will get business, the majority of the producers seem to be sitting back while their press departments use up all the available adjectives and coin, a few new ones, and prepare cuts that are in many cases worse than useless, calling the result "advertising" and "press matter." If some of these press sheets have any self-respect they must be ashamed to be seen around a newspaper office.

A good cut, one that means something, and that to some extent interprets the idea of the picture it is designed to advertise, gives a newspaper advertisement distinctiveness and pulling power. If every newspaper particular picture, let the advertising carry a cut of the star, but let it be a good cut; a cut that expresses something, and not a junk portrait. Every cut should be designed to dominate the advertisement it graces, and it should mean something, not merely fill space.

A World cut on "Journey's End" as it shows up in the "End" as it reaches the exhibitor, press sheet.

The majority of the press sheets and the majority of the cuts furnished now represent wasted money.

The World Film Corporation's press sheets and cuts are about the most consistently bad that I've seen. The cuts seldom mean much, and even if they did, they wouldn't get it across in the form in which they reach the exhibitor. In the World press sheets, the cuts are proofed up straight, but the ones the exhibitor gets for his advertising have the name of the star or stars, the name of the producer, and the title of the play, stuck all over them in type. Then, here's a fair sample of the text from one of the "sample ads" that the World publicity men prepare for the use of the exhibitor:

"A big, smashing, forceful picture, crammed with intense dramatic action and powerfully telling a tremendously interesting, delightfully entertaining story."

No, this isn't copy for Griffith's "Birth of a Nation," but for Kitty Gordon in "The Interloper." There are six of these sample ads, and one of these, only one, gives any hint of what the story is about. It tells us that "The story told in this production is of a wife who finds that she is dearer to her husband by far than his first wife ever was, and in making this discovery she is buoyed up by the satisfaction of not having destroyed her husband's faith in his first wife's memory as she had the opportunity of doing."

If this is really the story of the picture, how does it become deserving of the description in the paragraph above? If it isn't, why hasn't the World's ad man dug out the advertising idea and brought it out forcefully, in a way that will put it across? That press sheet cost money to put together, distribute and print, but it doesn't show it.

Occasionally, the World digs up a subject for a cut that means something. But, when it does, the cut is ruined by the type matter that is smeared all over the face of it. If the World wants to put out a press sheet, let it plan the matter to get results for the exhibitor, not to fill space, or serve as an excuse for what the exhibitor should be getting.

Universal is another concern that ruins its scene cuts by smearing star and firm names and picture titles over them. Why don't they play up their trade-mark in an unobtrusive way, and make cuts that express the idea of the picture? Dig up a Vitagraph press book on a Blue Ribbon feature. Take a look at the newspaper ad and the cuts the Vitagraph press department tells you to run. Then compare it with the illustration on the cover page of the book. The cover page generally contains a cut that really expresses the idea behind the film, but it, of course, isn’t to be given to exhibitors for advertising purposes.

Take a Select press book, and look it over. See what sort of cuts they offer you for your advertising—and notice, at the same time, that the star name and film title, with the Select’s trade-mark, of course, is plastered quite prominently on each cut.

Metro doesn’t make any scene cuts on its weekly releases, and the advertising copy carried in its press sheets wouldn’t go very far toward putting the picture over. Metro, by the way, does make better than average star cuts.

Before me as I write is a Mutual press sheet on “Hearts or Diamonds,” a William Russell picture. There are five “suggested ads,” of which three are single column—or supposed to be. As a matter of fact, each measures two-and-a-half inches in width, and a newspaper column is less than two-and-a-quarter.

Another measures seven-and-an-eighth inches across—a half-inch over three columns. The fifth “suggested ad,” designed for two columns, will really fit into two columns.

And so it goes. Run over them all, big pictures and small, and only in rare instances will you find a well-planned, carefully thought-out advertising campaign. Just for instance, take Brenon’s “Fall of the Romanoffs.” The press sheets shows five “ready made” ads—in other words, cuts made from ink sketches. Each of them contains exactly the same wording—“Herbert Brenon’s ‘The Fall of the Romanoffs,’ with Hildor, former confidant of the Czar.” Not another word; not an attempt to put over the idea of the play. And the illustrations—!

Every scene cut has the name of the producer, the star, and the title of the film scrawled on its face.

Impossible to Get Cuts.

The lack of good cuts is not the only thing that bothers the exhibitor. Say that he’s willing and able to prepare his own advertising. Say that his good money is pining to be spent for the acquiring of newspaper space to advertise the producer’s pictures. He knows that the companies are spending money to have cuts made for him and that this is a part of the charge that enters into the calculation of what he must pay for pictures, but he can’t get the cuts.

For instance: Bluebird is making scene cuts on every picture, and lately this concern began making special ads on every picture, some of which are excellent and most of which are supposed to be available for exhibitors. Kindly note that I say supposed. We run the Bluebird program regularly, and I haven’t seen a cut on a Bluebird film for over a month. The Pittsburgh exchange insists that it can’t get them. Why not? Is not a certain percentage of the film rental we are paying going to make those cuts? Of course, they’re not what they ought to be, but we should have something, at least, to help us get the pictures across.

Here is another little instance: “Raffles,” with John Barrymore, is just going the rounds in this territory. We booked it for a three-day run, with the assurance of the salesman that the exchange could and would provide press book, scene cuts in several sizes, and “ready made-ad” cuts. After writing and telephoning Pittsburgh, we received, two days before our run opened, two scene cuts. They were both double-column cuts, and they were both the same! It was too late then, of course, to get anything made. So we had, for our advertising on “Raffles,” one cut. This cut brought out the idea of the production wonderfully, at that. It showed a young man and a young woman sneaking a kiss past the censors—just that! Imagine how that cut brings out the merit of the story of “Raffles!” Imagine! A young man really kisses a young woman in the story! Something unusual, indeed, in motion pictures, is it not?

The Foundation of the Game.

Proper handling of the picture, first, and proper advertising, second, is the foundation of the motion picture game. Make a picture of average worth, Mr. Producer, and then see that a real advertising campaign is mapped out for it, for the use of the exhibitor. By this I don’t mean that we must have elaborate, costly campaigns. Just see that the advertising prepared for the exhibitor gets the big idea of the production across. You’ll discover that it won’t take a tenth the urging it does now to get the exhibitor to book your stuff, when you’ve shown him how to put it over, and demonstrated that you intend to keep on helping him put it over.

Why not get down to brass tacks? If the press departments of the producing companies were giving exhibitors either what they need or what they want, there would not be so much of a kick coming. But they’re not.

Exhibitors are spending the money on newspaper advertising. In the larger cities, most of it is well spent. In the smaller towns, a great deal of it isn’t. The exhibitor takes the word of the producer that the cuts he’s furnishing and the advertising matter he hands out are all that are needed to put the film across. Both producer and exhibitor are suffering.
The first step, it seems to me, is for the producers to gently inform their press departments that exhibitors are to be furnished with cuts and advertising that count, and that the present super-abundance of adjectives is to be cut out. Then a survey should be made. Find out the average space that the exhibitors—not in the metropolises, but throughout the country—generally use. Plan advertising to meet the desires of these exhibitors, who know their local conditions, and who know what they can afford to spend. Provide them with advertising that advertises, and they'll use it, instead of tossing it into the waste-basket, as they usually do with the stuff they get nowadays.

The producers all believe that proper advertising will put their pictures over. They tell us so, at least. They are maintaining press departments that are getting out press sheets for the purpose of furnishing the necessary advertising. Most of the money they are spending in this direction is wasted.

A producing company, preparing advertising for the use of exhibitors throughout the country, can afford to hire the best brains in the business. If what they preach to us is true—and I believe it is—good advertising will put the films over. If any exhibitor is shown that the pictures of any company, coupled with the advertising it furnishes, will make him money, he's going after those pictures with both feet.

It would appear, therefore, that it's time to quit talking of "service," and provide a little of it. There are going to be a great many changes in the next year or two in the picture field, and this advertising question is going to have a great deal to do with the nature of those same changes.

Incidentally, these are war times, and the money that is being wasted on useless junk can be used quite handily by the government, the Red Cross, the K. of C., Y. M. C. A., or any of the other war agencies that really need it. Let the producers either cut out the junk and quit pretending to give us what we need, or insist that press departments send out something worth the money that is expended.

Famous Opera House Is Picture Theater
Daniel Connor Tells How He Won Success in Piper's at Virginia City, Nev.

D ANIEL CONNOR is one of the earliest of the film managers. Far back when the motion picture was still a curiosity rather than an accepted form of entertainment, he learned the business under his brother, who still has a motion picture show on Coney Island's famous Bowery. Later he started a touring show and eventually he landed in Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev., one of the most famous playhouses in the country during the boom times in the silver district. Virginia City went to seed with the passing of the bonanza days and Piper's gradually fell from its proud estate, but the town is coming into its own again and Mr. Connor has put Piper's back on the map, as he tells in this story, using for advertising type "packed in" during the early sixties for Mark Twain's famous newspaper. He is a veteran among the veterans and it is fitting that he should be the one to rehabilitate the house that was once the glory of Golden West.

It was away back in 1898 that I started operating a picture road show with 6x9 hand bills. The first big opposition to cross my path was Lyman Howe, a few year later, introducing a display of lithos from 24 sheets down and liberal newspaper display. He used mechanical effects to bring out the different sounds the pictures called for.

Right here for the first time my eyes were opened to the value of advertising and effects. I added the big billing, took big newspaper space and bought pictures that suited novel effects.

So, I had real live chickens, sparring one of electrical dogs to supply the real yelp rendered in the picture; used choir boys and organ, wind, water, lion growls, whistles, charged cylinders, etc. I don't really know whether it was the advertising or effects that sprung the business—but in all the years I took no chance—used them all—and—good music.

I opened Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev., as a picture house in 1910. The town looked "ripe"—the streets were jammed and no amusements in town. But they simply wouldn't patronize "only a picture show." Drama companies would draw packed houses at $1.50, yet a picture show almost nothing at 10 cents. I stuck like a Greek for three months—a $30 General Film show doing from $4 to $12 a night; no higher.

There was no operator here until I broke one in. When I got loose from the operating room I went after my old standbys—mechanical effects and newspapers. Booked a Kalem war reel, raised all the windows and broke loose with a real Vermin battlefield. The noise brought a stampede. I followed up with a Selig and got the lions growling. Then I bought on wind, water and steamboat whistles.

It was something new and staggered the natives. It created talk. They had never seen pictures put quite right. I put in a five-piece orchestra, and gradually modulated my noise effects to natural when I got them coming—and I am here yet—all battle scared from fighting and keeping out opposition. I may add that now opposition's career is brief, though often.

I got Sargent's little receipt book on advertising display, etc. Studied out "points," rules, learned cases. I "hung around" the old "Enterprise" printing office, established by Mark Twain back in the 60s. Soon I followed up with a Selig and got the lions growling. Then I bought on wind, water and steamboat whistles.

Special Theater Advertising Displays

Method Employed by Seattle's Leading Exhibitors to Distribute Publicity in Places Where It Will Attract Greatest Attention

JESEN & VON HERBERG, of Seattle, is one of the largest exhibitor users of newspaper ads in the United States, indeed one of the pioneers in this line, as they used page ads as long ago as 1908. They average about 2,000 inches of advertising a week. But their scope is not limited to newspaper ads alone as they use 150 twenty-eight sheet billboards a week, eight-sheet specials, window cards, framed and unframed, together with special made up photograph displays of which 40 to 50 are placed in the most exclusive specialty shops and jewelry stores. From 1,200 to 1,500 window cards are used each week, and approximately 300 to 500 one-sheets. When they play a feature pictured from a well-known story, the local book or department stores are always glad to co-operate with them by putting in a window display, knowing that all their available supply will be quickly sold through the picture campaign, for first, Jensen & Von Herberg sell the picture for entertainment or story value.

Slides and trailers comprise the advertising on their screen. They have abandoned heralds except for very special occasions. The slides are made up from scenes in the play, and also straight word slides, while the trailer is made up of the title of the play, a few chosen scenes to arouse interest in the coming feature with a follow-up title stating when the picture will be shown. Slides are exchanged between our theaters; that is, the Coliseum today show is advertised to three different audiences in the company's other theaters, and so on around. This form of advertising is felt to be particularly valuable as they are talking to 100 per cent, prospects, the proof being their presence in a picture theater. Also the telephone is used to call attention to certain groups or associations that a picture with particular appeal to them is at one of the company's theaters. For instance, the musically inclined were all notified that Geraldine Farrar was coming in "Carmen."

Slides, lobby, newspaper ads, cards and billboards all are hooked together to hammer home just one point, for every picture has one big selling point (the peg so to speak on which the story is hung), and this is what Jensen & Von Herberg attempt to get to the people. As all their runs are short, they feel that they must concentrate on the one thing, to get their message over, and to do this, to pound away on the big interest point of the picture. For instance, Charles Chaplin's "A Dog's Life" was his first million dollar comedy; or when you saw Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Year in Germany," you lived with him, his four years in the Hohenzollern hell of empire-grabbing intrigue and treachery; "Believe Me, Xantippe" was a mystery plot in which a $40,000 bet, a $100 forgery and a million dollar girl all lent interest. Even the "Xantippe" was a subject of interest, because like "xylophone" it sounded different than it looked, and like "Xmas" it was something to look forward to, and simply pronouncing it stumped most of them.

BELGIANS VISIT FAMOUS PLAYERS' STUDIO.
The Famous Players-Lasky studio in Fort Lee, N. J., was recently given a most surprising honor when members of the Belgian and Italian missions to this country, together with American soldiers, visited the big glass studio to see how Paramount and Arclight pictures are made.

John Emerson and Anita Loos, who were preparing plans for their first Paramount film, "Come On In," starring Shirley Mason and Ernest Truesd, immediately ceased their work and acted as hosts to the distinguished visitors. The thorough manner in which the settings used in pictures were built surprised the guests. A Belgian street scene recently used naturally attracted considerable interest.

In the visiting party were Major Osterrieth, chief of the Belgian Military Mission; James G. Whiteley and Count de Reussesse of the same mission; Lieutenant Garibaldi, of the Italian Military Mission; Mrs. Whiteley and Colonel Short and Major Ellis, U. S. A.

CARMEL MYERS TO VISIT CANTONMENTS.
Carmel Myers, whose work in such Bluebird productions as "My Unmarried Wife," "The Wife He Bought," "The Marriage Lie," and similar successes has brought her to the front rapidly during the last year, has obtained a short leave of absence from Universal City and will devote the time in making a tour of the cantonments of the South. The Bluebird player has left for New York City, and after a few days in the metropolis will start in her trip through the South. Arrangements have been made for Miss Myers' appearance at the various Liberty Theaters so that she may deliver a final message of cheer and godspeed from the people of southern California.
Go Over the Top With Pershing

Magnificent Bronze Trophy to be Offered by the Moving Picture World to Stimulate Effort of Exchangers Handling “Pershing’s Crusaders,” Official Government War Film

Just now the most comprehensive motion picture review of the status of the United States in War is found in the subject known as “Pershing’s Crusaders.” This subject was first shown at the Lyric Theater in New York, but has since been revised and retitled and is now being offered for exhibition through the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit. The states of California, North Dakota and Michigan are invited to participate.

There are many reasons why this subject should be given wide publicity, chief of which is that it gives us so much information concerning the preparation for war that has been and is still being made in America, and because it shows better than any other motion pictures we have seen what our boys who have gone “over there” are doing. For this reason, if for no other, we should put this picture “over the top” with a vim.

How this effect could best be obtained has been a matter of considerable discussion between the officials of the First National Circuit and the Division of Films of the Committee of Public Information. The Moving Picture World representatives were called into the conference and the suggestion was made by them that a prize be given to the exchange which can show the largest per cent. of bookings in its territory in a given time.

Following up its suggestion The Moving Picture World offered to take charge of the entire campaign, securing a suitable trophy and judging the reports for the final award. The offer was accepted, and we now have the pleasure of printing upon this page an engraving of the trophy, designed to our order and accepted by all interested parties as most suitable for the purpose. This sketch has been placed in the hands of a designer and will be executed in bronze. An idea of its size can be gained when we tell you that the spread of the eagle’s wings will be three feet from tip to tip. The tablet will be lettered as shown in the cut, the blank panel being left for the winner’s name. At the bottom of the panel is a figure modeled after that shown upon the cover of The Moving Picture World.

The eagle’s claws are so made that they will grasp the staff bearing the Stars and Stripes as shown in the engraving.

This beautiful and patriotic trophy will be given to the exchange which wins the contest and will form an office decoration of itself.

“Pershing’s Crusaders” has been released and is now being booked generally, so that the contest is practically on. The date of its conclusion has been fixed at September 1. This will give the exchanges interested a full six weeks from date of this publication to get busy.

Each week as the contest proceeds the reports received will be tabulated and printed in The Moving Picture World so that the standing of the exchanges and the progress of the campaign may be known.

In the event of two or more exchanges reaching a booking percentage exactly equal, The World will, in that event, present to each contestant thus coming into a tie, an exact duplicate of the trophy here illustrated and specified as first prize.

The judges of the contest have not yet been named, but will be in the next issue of The Moving Picture World.

With this incentive the managers of the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit exchanges are urged to get busy to prove to the Government that it is possible for the regularly organized motion picture distributors to get the widest possible circulation for this excellent patriotic subject.

Don’t make any mistake about the genuineness of the trophy. It will be of bronze—not pewter, as was the Kaiser’s gold cup. It will be made as designed with a three-foot spread to the eagle’s wings. The National banner—“Old Glory”—will be as fine a flag as the manufacturers produce. In fact, there will be nothing cheap or phoney about it. As a trophy it will be worth working for.

As for the picture every exchanger interested now knows that it is the best war picture showing actual scenes of Uncle Sam’s preparatory campaign. There ought to not be a picture theater in the country where it should not be shown. The per cent. of houses in each exchange district is what counts in the contest, so go to it, every exchange has a chance to win.
In thus commending the efforts of our very obliging contributors to our readers generally, we desire to thank them for their kind co-operation and, without committing ourselves to any hard and fast agreement, we hereby signify our willingness, even determination, to reciprocate in some suitable and sufficient form at some time in the indefinite future, reserving to ourselves the inalienable right to make such use of the symbolical blue pencil and the traditional waste basket as the exigencies of the occasion may demand or our editorial will shall dictate. Nevertheless, we thank you.

HERE is a Governor after our own heart. The Honorable George W. P. Hunt, governor of Arizona, in his address upon the convening of a special session of the Legislature of his state on May 21, 1918, took occasion to discuss the necessity of instruction for the foreign born. In the course of his remarks he observed:

In giving the instruction heretofore suggested as a patriotic measure, we should not overlook the value of the motion picture as a medium of education. No better method is available for bringing home to the alien mind the true meaning of American citizenship and a general knowledge of our country's national life.

It may be that other governors have held similar sentiments, but this is the first time that one has come out with so strong a statement regarding the educational value of motion pictures. We venture to say that Governor Hunt knows his "movies."

THERE is a lot of reason in the published request from motion picture players for exemption from taxation to the extent of the cost of their costumes. Like the tools of the carpenter or other artisan, costumes are the tools of the players' trade and are singularly unsuited for other than the purpose for which they were designed. As to the broader claim for exemption from income tax on the ground that their incomes are earned in the form of a wage as against the income which is derived from dividends or the profits of a commercial investment much has been said by legislators for and against. In this claim all men and women who work for a salary are interested. It would seem that some differentiation in the scheme of taxation favorable to incomes earned should be made, but it is doubtful if the tax authorities will take the time necessary to study the question. All we can do is to be cheerful; it's worse in Germany.

NOTHER Sunday picture show decision has been rendered. This time it is against the show and by Judge Fayvett of the New York Supreme Court, sitting in Brooklyn, in an action brought against Nathan Goldstein of Patchogue, N. Y. The Court in this case, despite the precedent established by the late Judge Gaynor, decided that it was not lawful to operate a picture show on Sunday. Referring to the Gaynor decision Judge Fayvett is reported to have said that it was out of date and that conditions had changed since that decision was handed down. The case has been appealed.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD wishes to announce the acquisition for its staff of A. H. Giebler, an experienced newspaperman, who has become Los Angeles correspondent and will co-operate with G. P. Harleman in the conduct of the Los Angeles office. Mr. Giebler is not unacquainted with the motion picture business and motion picture folk. Some years ago he qualified as the motion picture editor of a St. Louis daily paper and, for a long time, wrote the MOVING PICTURE WORLD's St. Louis letter. For the past year Mr. Giebler has made his home in Los Angeles and is known to most of the trade there, so that he is eminently well fitted for the position he now fills. Mr. Harlan will continue to represent the Moving Picture World in Los Angeles in the capacity of business and advertising manager of the Los Angeles office.

Neighborhood Theaters

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

Much valuable space is lost, both inside the theater and around its best construction, because of a very common and human "urge," the get-rich-quick, build-quick "urge," where ample space is to be had, and from the necessity in some cases of squeezing in a desirable locality, too cramped for audience comfort or badly proportioned.

No lasting satisfaction is to be reasonably expected where the much-pained foot is compelled to fit the boot.

There is not the slightest doubt about the value of certain peculiarly-situated localities, especially in large cities, where theaters are crowded themselves without any apparent reason. There are sweet spots in every town, which seem to draw the human flies—people go there, the why and wherefore is of importance minor to the fact. Lines of cars may converge to create such a place, or it may be a center of interest because of shopping during the day and bright lights at night.

A public square, or a broad way may thus be the ideal site.

There may be only one such centre in a village, but the average town and city, those presenting scenes of activity, have many sites suitable for theaters, especially when the character of neighborhood and price of admission are taken into intelligent consideration.

That price of admission rightly adjusted, there comes a vital thought.

Nearly all people go along lines of least resistance.

They prefer the nearest show if it is a good one.

Moving picture theaters are being planted in the midst of residential groups, whether of the poor or of the well-to-do, and they are prospering invariably, when they are rightly conducted.

Most of them are susceptible of being improved, but the greatest difficulty encountered, as anyone can find out by investigation, is to keep satisfied audiences composed of patrons who attend several times a week, if not thirty times a month, including February—their money counts.

Ask neighborhood exhibitors what worries them most.

The people of a neighborhood can be fooled once, twice, thrice, or even a dozen times by outside promises on lurid paper not fulfilled inside, when people come to view the performance, and they may never complain, the money loss is so small, but they can find some better way of passing their leisure time—they can quit—and thus attendance falls off in proportion to the deception practiced on the "steadies."

The anxious exhibitor looks about him for reasons.

It is not easy for him to get at those quiet people who make up their own minds, who know the difference between promise and performance, but he succeeds in a number of cases and he boils down all information from his patrons to a point where he can solidify opinion. Without any known exception he reaches one inevitable conclusion.

The greatest audience demand is for something new.

The way for exhibitors to get what is new is to ask for it, insist on it, demand it, and point out that constant repetition is not to the benefit of their business, nor to that of moving picture production, nor to any department of the industry.

The neighborhood theater will eventually get away from commonplace—it is bound to do so.

It should be the ideal meeting house of intelligent people, their club, their house of social harmony and good feeling, the pictures it shows progressive in spirit, the music rendered well, whether the selections are popular or classic, and some provision made for those mothers who are unable to get away from home because of their anxiety about their young children. What a boon to those mothers if there was a room attached to the theater in charge of maids capable of looking after young children while their mothers enjoyed a little rest and recreation, for they who need it most get it least.

Instead of holding itself aloof from its patrons, the theater should be the congenial, friend-making place of its neighborhood, an ideal institution of its kind, considerate, helpful and sincere in all this, for in attaching people to its interests it is establishing itself more strongly in their hearts. People are its friends. Between them and imposters of any kind the theater should take its stand.

A Few Screen Problems

By Edward Weitzel.

There are rumors afloat that the two and three-reel picture are to be put upon the market. Such an experiment will be keenly watched. A grave stumbling block in the path of the producer has been the lack of interest in anything but dramas of five to ten reels. Many a story with sufficient vitality to make an engrossing two or three part photoplay is stretched and padded into a five-reel feature and its attenuated skeleton crawls along at a small pace, in place of continually pressing on ahead of the spectator's imagination.

Why there should be such a prejudice against the shorter screen dramas is hard to explain; but it exists to the same extent on the screen that it does on the stage. Managers of the older form of amusement know to their cost how eagerly the general public keeps away from a program of one-act plays. Even with a bill made up of the works of such writers as Dunsany and Synge only the smallest theaters in New York and Chicago can be filled, the mass of amusement seekers in other cities and towns of the country being absolutely indifferent to the matter. The producer of screen fiction has been severely criticised for ignoring the tense red-blooded little dramas, alive with action and vivid with humanity, which brought D. W. Griffith to the fore. Apparently, there has been no demand for them during the last three years.

A New Form of Screen Art.

Some day a photoplay will be produced which will have the simplicity of settings and absence of backgrounds that attended the first performances of the plays of Shakespeare. It will, of course, not relegate all other forms to the rear, but may serve admirably to emphasize the value of human interest and act as a basis upon which to determine how much pictorial effect can be used without detracting from the dramatic strength of the plot.

Several of the most famous producers of Shakespeare's works have been accused of obscuring the intellectual beauties of his plays by too lavish stage settings. Granting the truth of the contention, the overdone scenes generally lasted long enough to lose their hold on the attention and permit the actors to center the eyes and sympathies of the audience upon the business of the play. The screen, with its unrestricted change of location and its ability to present marvels of scenic beauty in rapid succession, is in danger of constantly diverting the mind of the spectator from the human interest of its story. Pictorial effect should be the servant, not the master, of screen drama.

Striking an Average of Intelligence.

An important point is just how to average up the intelligence of screen patrons. So far there has been no attempt to inaugurate a highbrow screen drama. The producers all hope to have their pictures shown before all classes of amusement seekers. —Take the titles as one example of the difficulty. One set of spectators will read a title, settle back and let their eyes roam around the theater while other people are still spelling out the words or asking, in an impatient whisper, as the thread of the story is taken up again pictorially, "What did it say? It went so fast I couldn't read it!"

Continuity is another perplexing question. Some minds are capable, and more than willing, to supply certain obvious connections in the story; others, through lack of imagination, not to put it too harshly, are heard complaining: "I didn't understand what that scene meant; they should explain things more."

Close-Ups

By Robert C. McCleary.

In reading the pages of a novel we come across an occasional paragraph, reading something like this:

Alice was a beautiful, high-bred girl, with a clear, fair brow, a satin skin, hair that went romping over her forehead and shoulders, and her ready smile disclosed two rows of white, even teeth, set like pearls between her coral lips.

When the author wrote that paragraph he had a particular purpose in mind. He wished not only to impress upon the reader the remarkable beauty of his heroine, but he wanted the reader to pause a moment and visualize her beauty in such a way that the memory of it would remain with him throughout the entire book.

Now the close-up performs almost the same function in a moving picture that such paragraphs perform in describing characters in a novel. The only difference is that in the film it is manifestly impossible to insert a sub-title proclaiming the heroine's beauty, or perhaps it would be better to say unnecessary. The means are at hand for impressing the observer in a more realistic way, and this is done by a close-up or near view of the lady herself. There is a temporary halt in the development of the story itself while he is being pictured, but this halt is excusable and very desirable, for the observer wants to know how the heroine looks and all about her. When he has the impression of her firmly in mind, her future actions are much more interesting; she may walk, run, climb fences, turn her back, wrap a masque or hide her face whenever she chooses, but the knowledge of her real beauty, when she wants to be beautiful, remains safely fixed in mind.

But both the author of the novel and the director of the moving picture run some danger in trying to impress us too strongly with the beauty of the heroine. The author, in his choice of adjectives and similes, is very likely to overdo the thing. For instance, our purely imaginative writer of the above paragraph, has written of teeth like pearls and coral lips, when it may be safely doubted if such a resemblance ever existed. But his troubles are nothing compared with the moving picture director's! For the close-up may not simply fail to show beauty, but is merciless in its exposure of facial blemishes, and bad teeth in particular. More than one heroine, who enchanted us at a distance, has lost favor in the close-up.

The moral of this, of course, if the heroine is really not beautiful on a near view, is to leave out the close-up. The story has nothing to lose and everything to gain by this procedure. It would be better for many pictures if such a course had been followed.

But the close-up has numerous other valuable functions besides depicting the beauty of the heroine. There are times, in the midst of exciting situations, when the close-up, properly used, creates valuable suspense. It has the desirable faculty of keeping the observer waiting, but with his mind fixed upon essential points as they are being developed. But here, also, peril lies in wait for the director. If he uses too many close-ups they have the immediate effect of padding the situations and really serve to let down the suspense. This occurs very often on the screen.

The close-up is sometimes valuable in introducing special characters in the story, but it should not be used on characters that are not necessary to the plot itself, for this only serves to center the observer's mind on somebody who has nothing to do with the action. Close-ups of babies, cats, dogs, parrots, swords, guns, potted plants, or whatever you choose, are permissible if they are relevant to the plot; otherwise they should be shown only in the usual way, with an idea of bringing out settings and atmosphere.

It all gets back to the writer's dictum, that nothing should appear in the story that is not in some way essential to it. Certainly in the development of a swiftly moving film story, there can be no good reason for employing the close-up to bring non-essentials into a prominence they do not deserve.

The Draft and Business

By Epes W. Sargent.

Far too many managers are arguing that business is going to be bad this summer because the young men are all drafted for war work and cannot take the girls to entertainments. Far too many are losing heart and are cheapening service and cutting down advertising because they "know" that business is going to be bad this summer—and longer. That is no way to meet the situation. All lines of business have been affected by the draft and may be more seriously affected by the new work or fight law, but it is the duty of every true American to seek to face this period of vast reconstructions bravely and helpfully. It is very true that hundreds of thousands of men are being removed from their daily vocations to fight in the cause of Freedom, but it does not follow that business must be completely upset by their withdrawal, and an effort should be made to intensify what business is still to be had.

The young men have gone to the front or into training camps, but the girls they leave behind them are bravely taking their places in business and in trade. They are making money and gaining experience. In time they will seek amusement at their own expense and perhaps be more regular in their attendance at the theaters than they were under the old conditions, since there will be fewer social entertainments than before and at the same time a keener need of diversion. If the proper sort of program is offered and attractively advertised, there is every reason to suppose that amusements in general and the picture theaters in particular will do a greater business than ever.

But the proper sort of program is not a constant succession of dramas of the war and stories with war time backgrounds. We get enough of this in the daily life and only the occasional war drama will be welcomed. On the other hand the news, weeklies, with their pictures of actual scenes at the front, will be strong attractors. Those who stay behind want to know all they can of conditions at the front and this information is graphically portrayed in the pictures made under the direction of the Committee on Public Information and distributed to the various weeklies.

Build up the program with these and with good plays of heart interest, vivid action and comedy dramas, and advertise the war news pictures as you would a feature. Do not merely announce this or that weekly. Tell just what scenes will be shown, and give the list a prominence equal to the feature. It will more than pay, and it will soon be found that even in the theaters the girls are taking the place of the men who have gone. The loss of courage and abandon effort at such a time is treacherous. Strive to increase attendance, not alone for the box office value, but that the screen messages may be conveyed to the greatest possible number. The screen today, through its visual appeal, is more important than the newspaper. Make certain that the appeal reaches the greatest possible number, and you will be doing your bit as a business fighter and a patriot.

Film Industry in Essential Class

Provoit Marshal General Decides on Appeal That Motion Picture Industry Is "Effective."

Fear of the drafting of players, stage hands and operators engaged in the production and exhibiting of motion pictures under the "work or fight" rule recently promulgated by Provoit Marshal General Crowder may now be set aside as not to be worried about. Word from Washington comes to the effect that Colonel Warren, head of the appeals board of the Provoit Marshal's office, has made a ruling which puts the film industry generally into the tax free class and includes musicians and all skilled stage workers necessary in the production and presentation of pictures.

The decision also states that operators will be considered as employed in effective industry.

Bill in Congress Would Increase Exhibitor Tax

Under Measure Introduced by Parker of New Jersey Both Manufacturing and Advertising Impost Is Provided.

If Congress accepts the advice of Congressman Parker, of New Jersey, as offered in a bill (H.R. 12649) introduced into the House of Representatives by him, manufacturers selling films, advertising matter to accompany films, projection machines and other equipment, etc., would be called upon to pay a new tax. Congressman Parker proposes "That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon all manufactures sold by the manufacturer or producer a tax equivalent to three per cent of the price for which they are sold, and each manufacturer or producer of such manufactures shall make monthly returns under oath in duplicate and pay the taxes imposed on such articles by this title to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which is located the principal place of business. Such return shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulation prescribe."

The motion picture business would be further taxed, perhaps to an extent heavier than any other industry, by Section 2 of this same bill, for Mr. Parker thinks that advertising should be made to produce revenue for the Government. In this section he would have it so that "there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equivalent to three per cent of the amount paid by any person, corporation, partnership, or association for advertising or advertising space, and every person, corporation, partnership, or association receiving any payment for advertising or advertising space upon which a tax is imposed by this section shall, within the first fifteen days of each month, make return under oath, in duplicate, and pay such tax to the collector of internal revenue on which such tax is imposed and which the principal office or place of business of such person, corporation, partnership, or association is located. Such return shall contain such information and be in such manner prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulation prescribe."

If Congressman Parker's recommendations were permitted to prevail the exhibitors of the United States, now overburdened with taxes, both Federal and State, would be compelled annually to pay large sums of money on the newspaper space they occupy with their announcements, on the posters, heralds and other advertising matter that they put on their boards and for distribution purposes, and further, they would have to absorb the advertising tax paid by the manufacturers in announcing in the trade press, through circular matter, in the newspapers and popular magazines, their new features. Such tax would not only be assessed against those who rent the films so advertised, for the tax would become a part of the overhead expense of the manufacturer and of the exchange.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the week of July 7 at New York's Principal Motion Picture Houses.

THE STRAND.—Madge Kennedy in "The Service Star," a Goldwyn production with by Henry B. Long, is the leading feature at Strand Theater for the week of July 7. The eighth number of the Outing-Chester scenes "Stasia with a Past," the second edition of the Allied War Weekly, and the latest comedy "Kids" were also shown. Antonio Brigo and the Strand Soldier Quartet were the special musical features.

THE RIALTO.—"The Firefly of France," with Wallace Reid as the star, headed the program at the Rialto. The scenario was made from a novel of the same name and was written by Donald Crisp, Anna Little and Raymond Hatton are in the cast. "Fatty and Mabel Adrift" featuring Roscoe Arbuckle and Mabel Normand, a scene and the Rialto Animated Magazine were the other screen numbers. Count Lorrie Grimaldi, and Gaston Dubois were the soloists.

THE RIVOLI.—Ellis Ferguson in an Actewriff version of Robert W. Chambers' "The Danger Mark" was the screen star at the Rivoli. Charlie Majone made the scenario, Hugh Ford directed the picture. The Animated Pictorial, a scene and a comedy completed the pictures. Creek Evans and Julia Beverly were the vocalists.

FORTUNE THEATER.—Forteenth Week of "Hearts of the World."

BROADWAY.—Second week of "To Hell with the Kaiser."

LYRIC.—Sixth week of "Stolen Orders."

SYMPHONY.—William S. Hart in "Staking His Life."

Lexington Churchmen Protest Sunday Shows

Not Believed Crusade Will Make Headway, as Mayor Takes Sides with Majority of Citizens.

AYMEN of the Protestant churches of Lexington, Ky., have launched another movement to close the picture theaters on Sundays. However, with Mayor Rogers favoring Sunday pictures, and backing open Sundays on the ground that such shows should be allowed for the benefit of the theaters and the customers, the churchmen are having a hard time to get any further with this crusade than they have with several prior ones. Three members of each of the Protestant churches of Lexington compose the body of laymen who are formally organizing to work for the purpose.

Alfred Combs, a member of the commission, stated that the management of the Strand Theater offered to close on Sunday if the managers of the other theaters would do likewise. Manager J. H. Stamper, Jr., was alleged to have stated that he would close Sunday, but that he could not do it at a point where legal trouble would result if he didn't. Manager C. H. Berryman, of the Ben Ali, stated flatly that he would not close.

A number of attempts have been made by the churchmen of Lexington to close Sunday theaters, but they have never been able to secure the backing of the Mayor and the authorities, with the result that such attempts have failed. It is well known that the people in Lexington favor Sunday shows, and this is shown by the fact that as high as 20,000 people often attend the shows.
Film Division Names Director Advisers

Public Information Sub-Committee Selects Ten Prominent Producers to Aid in Uncle Sam’s War Work

The Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information announces an important move in perfecting its organization. The division now has the expert advice and assistance of an Advisory Board of Motion Picture Directors.

These services were volunteered by a committee representing the Motion Picture Directors’ Association and gratefully accepted by Charles S. Hart, director.

This board is composed of men whose work stands conspicuous in the field of artistic and successful productions. They are: J. Searle Dawley, chairman; James Vincent, secretary; Maurice Tourneur, Captain E. H. Calvert, Edwin Carewe, Charles Giblyn, R. A. Walsh, Sidney Olcott, George Irving, Travers Vale.

J. Searle Dawley is so well known as hardly to need comment in the motion picture industry. Beginning with the Edison company in its early days and going to the Famous Players Film Company when that firm first began to produce, Mr. Dawley is a pioneer, so to speak, in the directors’ profession. Many of the Paramount’s best liked pictures stand to his credit, and he is still making them.

Maurice Tourneur, too, has directed a number of Paramount classics, notable among them being Maeterlinck’s “Bluebird.” He is now at the head of his own producing company.

Mr. Vincent is also something of a pioneer, having begun as a player with the Kalem company, when it was first organized. In the interim he has directed for Fox, Pathe and other companies, and for some time past has been directing independent releases. Conspicuous among these is “The Melting Pot,” in which Walker Whiteside played the leading part.

Sidney Olcott was with the Kalem company at its inception. Later he joined the Famous Players, and several Pickford and Clark classics are on his list of achievements. As an independent producer, which he now is, “The Belgian” is his latest success.

George Irving distinguished himself especially as a director in “The Witching Hour,” the screen version of Augustus Thomas’ popular play; while many other well-known films bear his name as sponsor. He has been for some time with the Metro company.

Charles Giblyn began his motion picture days as a director of the New York Motion Picture Company. That was a long time ago. He directed later a list for Ince-Triangle, later went to Paramount, and is now directing at the Goldwyn studio.

Edwin Carewe secured his initiation into film mysteries at the Metro studios with B. A. Rolfe, and with the exception of a short interval has continued with that company.

Travers Vale is another member of the advisory board who has been in screen work almost from its first days. He began with the Rex company, was for a long time with Biograph, and has continued in the profession through the many vicissitudes of the industry. He is directing for World Film.

Raoul A. Walsh began his experience with D. W. Griffith at the Biograph company. He played the part of John...
Wilkes Booth in "The Birth of a Nation," and for the past three years has been directing for William Fox.

Captain Calvert was for six years associated with Essanay. He directed some of the first feature productions in America, at a time when a three-reel film story was an achievement. From that day until now he has forsaken his shadowy muse of the screen. "The Crimson Wing," Hobart Chatfield-Taylor's famous novel, was made popular in film under Captain Calvert's expert direction.

The film division certainly has able advisers, and they are rendering able assistance. For instance, they read and recommend scenarios for the division. At the present time, in fact, the advisory board is requesting writers to submit scenarios with strong human interest, of a nature calculated to arouse patriotism and activity. Also a committee of four has been appointed to prepare for release the next United States official feature.

This advisory board meets at the office of the film division in the Times Building once a week to act upon any work which may be awaiting it.

Hufton's Smoke Stand

Western Manager Invents Cigar Checker That Serves as a Unique Ballyhoo.

RALPH R. RUFFNER, of the Jensen & Von Herberg theatres, at present located in Butte, Montana, has evolved what he calls a smoke stand but which at first glance looks more like an economical Christmas tree. This was first put into use in Portland, where he was at the time in charge of the Columbia, and for several days he had a crowd constantly in front of the lobby while the machine was in commission, and he has supplied similar stands to several brother managers, all of whom declare the device to be worth its weight in press notices alone.

Cigar checkers, generally of the brass compartment type, are by no means uncommon, but Ruffner's device is very different. As the cut shows, it consists of an upright with two cross arms. From the latter chains depend to the ends of which are attached the ordinary spring clothes pins. At the top is a circular frame for changeable signs, and below a permanent directions sheet, which reads:

After tearing off a slip of the sanitary paper provided here, grasp the cigar between thumb and first finger of the left hand and follow directions, hanging your smoke on brackets, retainer, but don't tear off paper unless you smoke it, and not when you come out, it's because it was too long. For cigarettes first clip off with scissors, then step on it (the fire), then proceed as above.

The sanitary paper referred to its tackled just below the sign and each slip instructs the patron to "tare off and wrap around moist end of your cigar." This protects the checked end from contamination by dust, and Ruffner points out that perhaps this advertising space can be sold to local merchants. The device, an official officer should be instructed to keep a sharp eye for ope shoers when a desirable stub is in the custody of the machine, for no lock is provided for the clothes pins.

Originally the machine was planned as a joke; something to make talk "just once," and then be retired, but the success of the scheme was such that Ruffner is planning to put the stand on the market, for it has actually blocked the sidewalk in Portland and Butte as well as at other places in Washington. It is not so much the utility of the thing that counts as it is the talk it makes, for the directions get a laugh and even the scissors provided the cigarette smokers come in for a giggle. Mr. Ruffner has not yet worked out the possibilities of advertising frames above the cross arms, but that is easily handled.

Will C. Smith

General Manager Nicholas Power Company, Inc.

The subject of this sketch is so well known to the moving picture fraternity that it almost seems a waste of space to mention him. There is something about the word "Will" that betoken bon camaraderie and whole-heartedness; and it seems to fit here.

Will C. Smith was born in Washington, D. C., and experienced the vicissitudes of the average American youth not born with a silver spoon. His present experience has been the most comprehensive and covers the entire life of the industry. Always he has been a machine man; and for many years all his waking moments have been devoted to the improvement of motion picture projectors. We had him prior to 1903 operating one - night stand shows throughout the country. In 1903 he became associated with Lyman H. Howe, the celebrated traveling exhibitor, serving as his chief operator. He then went abroad and covered the European continent for the purchase of films.

He became associated with Sir Ernest Shackleton in 1909; and one of his proudest possessions is the letter of tribute received from that eminent explorer. When Fred Niblo made his successful tour as a lecturer, it was Will Smith who handled the producing end of the game for him during his extensive journeys with his unique entertainment.

From 1907 to 1912 Mr. Smith conducted a film exchange and supply house at the expiration of which time he entered the employ of the Nicholas Power Company as assistant general manager. And there he has been ever since. Today he is the general manager, having attained this office in November, 1917.

There is no secret to his success. It is the result of hard work and the knowing of one thing well. In this office, as in most, there is a time clock. But Will Smith doesn't use it. The chances are that if he did he would be credited with more hours than any clerk in the place.

That's the way he works.

He has served two terms as treasurer of the Screen Club, and is also treasurer of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Will C. Smith is known pretty much everywhere. Throughout the entire motion picture profession he is liked and esteemed.

BUSY LEES ARE THESE MITES THESE DAYS.

Sunday is hardly a day of rest for Jane and Katherine Lee, the William's baby grandis, who have just finished "Doing Their Bit." One Sunday recently they turned in an entertainment for convalescent and wounded soldiers at the Columbia University Base Hospital. The same afternoon they scammed over to the Pelham Bay Naval Training Station, where they entertained Sam's Jackies with songs, recitations and dances. Katherine in particular charmed Jane, and Jane sang and then they both danced. Their sketch ended in a riot of cheering from the sailors.

Sunday, July 2, the two children attended the baseball game at Camp Upton between a nine composed of soldiers and a team of actors. Jane and Katherine were the center of attraction. Taking a brief rest at home they then hurried over to the Astor theater and helped Adele Rowland stage her big benefit for the soldiers and sailors. Later in the week Jane and Katherine were guests of Al Tolson at a performance of "Sinbad," and also were guests of Miss Louise Dresser at a garden party at her home.
Richardson Scores Point for Projectionists

Has Session With Colonel Warren of Provost Marshal General’s Office on Question of “Essentiality” of Motion Picture Operators

A WEEK or so ago it was put down as a foregone conclusion that motion picture operators were included in the Provost Marshal General’s “Work or Fight” order—little consternation was caused thereby. It was a serious matter, much more serious to the trade than if all the actors in the draft age should have been commandeered, because there is no great surplusage of operators and it takes several months to train one. Great effort had been made by the operators’ unions and affiliated organizations to prevent this calamity, but there was no assurance of success.

Local has been the resort of the operators’ unions decided to call to their assistance Frank H. Richardson, who conducts the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World and is favorably known to the craft all over the world, to add his word of protest against the order that threatened the trade. Prior to the receipt of the operators’ request, Mr. Richardson came to the White House and called to see President Warren, who has been a good friend of the motion picture industry, and to let him know the situation, and to ask him to consider the operators as essential, and not to go on their order.

“I July 2 Assistant President Dolliver, of the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O, telephoned that he and First Vice President Canavan desired an immediate conference with the editor of the Projection Department with regard to the Work or Fight order. It appeared that every effort has been made by International President Shay and other to have the projectionists declared to be, which he assuredly is, essential to the public welfare. It was put to Warren at once, and try to show to the officials that projectionists cannot be trained in any such absurd grow-em-over-night fashion, and that the projecting of pictures is actually a public necessity. It is on record that the projectionists are essential. Brothers Dolliver and Canavan were kind enough to say that the only hope of saving the situation rested in the hands of the editor, so I immediately telephoned Washington by Inter-Continental President Shay and Joe Webber, International President of the Musicians.

“The situation was bad. For one thing, it appears that the President’s gamble had actually sent a delegation to Washington to inform the officials that projectionists were not essential. Don’t ask me why they did this outrageous thing; I do not know, but strongly suspect the local has been used as a cat’s paw by designing ones.

“At ten o’clock a.m. I sent in a letter of introduction from the Motion Picture World, and, to my surprise, was given clear right-of-way to Colonel Warren, who has full charge of matters pertaining to the Work or Fight order.

“The Colonel is a shrewd, astute officer who, I was very soon convinced, desired only to do that which is right. But I was quickly confronted with a state of affairs which filled me with amazement. I could hardly believe the statement when Colonel Warren, after listening patiently to my setting forth of the reasons why projectionists were essential, and why it would be a calamity to the motion picture industry to have them declared non-essential, came back at me with this: ‘Granting the truth of what you say, Mr. Richardson, how do you account for the fact that the committee representing the Pacific Coast producers, headed by Mr. Carpenter, made the statement to me that projectionists were non-essential?’

“So thoroughly was I filled with amazement at this almost unbelievable thing that I sat there without a word of reply —just grasping like a fish out of water, as it were.

“There was a twinkling in the Colonel’s eyes as he watched me. Then he said ‘Frankly I was myself surprised. The committee made a strenuous plea for the actors, cameramen, film editors and some others connected with the production end. I asked Mr. Carpenter if he did not consider the man who produced the picture essential. He denied. I then produced the witness of the theater as being essential, to which he replied: ‘No, we can train operators in a few days!’

“To give Colonel Warren credit, he did not believe this. He looked me in the eye and said that the producers weakened their whole argument by advancing such a palpable absurdity. He cited the statement made by the Pittsburgh committee, of course, but said that he had been unable to see why every other branch of the film industry had been placed on the same basis, and that the motion picture industry had claimed such importance, whereas the man who had the reproduction of the entire finished product was not considered essential.

“Time with Colonel Warren for two full hours, laying before him proof that competent projectionists, or even a fair imitation of competent ones, could not possibly be trained in many months, and to declare the projectionist not essential in the production of a whole industry, and one from which it could not possibly recover in full for many years. I tried to impress upon him the danger from fire hazard; the danger to the eyesight of this nation, the general union had many hands in the work through waste of light, and the injustice both to the industry and to the public. When I had done the Colonel said he was convinced that projectionists were essential and that he had decided to include them.

“He said the thing as presented by the Pittsburgh men, by the Carpenter committee and some others, had not appealed to him as commonsense, but that he lacked concrete evidence of the public need of such men to enable him to decide against their evidence. This knowledge I supplied him; also left with him, at his request, a copy of the third edition of the Handbook, which I had taken along as evidence of some of the things the projectists are required to know.

“The editor of the Projection Department is proud to have rendered this service to the industry and to the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O, which would have been confronted with implied or possible loss of a large percentage of its projectionist membership being forced into other lines of work, and to the projectionists of this country themselves. It is a poor time to lower the tone of the only reasonable priced form of entertainment, and to add to the already heavy burdens of this country. We have been at war with war-warriors, huge expenses and daily growing casualty lists. We need our theaters now, above all times, and not in any emasculated form either. The men are needed in the armed forces, and no one, to my knowledge, can be found in the last war that was not capable of handling a camera.

“Just why the California producers attempted to deal the projectionists, into whose hands their final, finished product is placed for reproduction, such an entirely uncalled for action, I cannot say. I do know that the California producers themselves would have taken any such stand had they been there themselves, instead of by committee. For years I have been waging a battle to get their stuff placed on the screen as it should be, only to have them, through their committee, attempt to kick all those years of labor over and into the gutter at one fell swoop. Are you proud of your committee’s action, gentlemen? As to the Pittsburgh men, their action is unspeakable. There is and can be no excuse for it. They have deliberately tried to work utter ruin upon their brother projectionists all over the country and it is not likely they will forget. If it is found that the Pittsburgh union had any hand in the work of the committee, then the local ought to be penalized.

“Since writing the above I see that Colonel Warren has rendered decision and has kept faith by including ‘Musicians and other skilled men necessary to the showing of films.’ I cannot close without a word concerning Charles Shay, International President, who put up a masterly plea for the projectionist. He did everything a man could possibly do, and should get great credit for his efforts. Shay was the one who furnished me the information, and entering a new vocation, whether you liked it or not. There are to-day some thousands of projectionists who owe this to the department, or to its editor, which is the same thing, the fact that they can continue on the even tenor of their way. Kindly don’t waste breath questioning that statement, because it is cold FACT.”
Woodlawn Is Chicago's House Beautiful

Lake City's New Motion Picture Theater Reflects Personality as Well as Nationwide Research of Manager Andrew Karzas

The Woodlawn theater, opened April 26, 1918, at 853-855 East Sixty-third street, is without doubt the most architecturally beautiful and attractive moving picture theater yet built in Chicago. There are many other expensive and fine theaters in the city, among them the Central Park theater, the Chateau, etc., which it would be difficult to surpass in any part of the country, but there is a peculiar beauty about the Woodlawn house that places it in a class by itself.

It was built by the Woodlawn Theater Company, of which Andrew Karzas is managing director, and to him is due, in the first place, the scheme of this beautiful temple for moving pictures. Early in 1915 Mr. Karzas began collecting data and details for the structure, and in order to inform himself thoroughly he made a nationwide inspection of the best known picture houses in the country. New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, Washington, Detroit, St. Louis, Denver, Seattle, San Francisco and other important points were visited, and the result of his studies and observations is well reflected in the Woodlawn.

He was especially fortunate to find in H. L. Newhouse an architect who could express these ideas in the structure itself. Mr. Newhouse is one of the foremost architects in the country in the building of picture theaters, and he has devoted himself specially for several years past to this type of structure. It can be safely said that the Woodlawn includes all the best features of the best theaters in the country at the present time.

The Auditorium.

Chief care and attention were, of course, centered on the auditorium of the Woodlawn. The site of the auditorium alone occupies 120 feet by 120 feet, but it is not rectangular in form. It is inclosed by walls, whose decorations are octagonal in shape, and the seats are placed in amphitheater order and number 2,000. Each is commodious and upholstered. The rows are graded downward and upward, and then upward so as to afford everyone a view of the screen. There is a ground floor only in the Woodlawn, there being no balcony. The entire structure is built of stone, steel and concrete, and the style of the interior architecture and decorations is Roman.

The octagonal walls referred to are picturesque in appearance and artistically decorated. The upper surface of each of four of these walls bears a panel painting, each painting being a replica of a Roman garden. The remaining four walls and the octagonal ceiling are all decorated in an exquisite color scheme of red, gold and blue.

Nine ponderous Romanesque lighting fixtures are suspended from the octagonal ceiling, the center one weighing over half a ton. Vari-colored lights, controlled by dimmers, are contained in each of these inverted fixtures, while others are distributed along the walls, particularly beneath the panel paintings of the gardens of Rome. It can readily be seen that beautiful colored light effects can be produced by means of this system, such as dawn, the splendor of a sunrise, dusk, etc., each of which may be used to intensify the effect of a scene in the picture on the screen.

Thoroughly modern ventilating and heating systems have been installed in the house, guaranteeing a perpetual circulation of fresh air and the forcing out of the impure, as well as a temperature in winter that is always comfortable without impairing the purity of the air.

The prosenium opening for the screen is about fifty feet in width, and it is draped on the sides and above by material of a rich velvet appearance. The velvet curtain also drapes the screen when not in use.

The old-fashioned orchestra pit has been superseded in the Woodlawn by the modern orchestral balcony. At each end of the balcony railing is a small stage, one for the soloist and the other for the singer. The balcony railing is adorned with flowers and trailing vines, behind which the members of the orchestra are seated.

The Woodlawn auditorium is also thoroughly proof against accident by fire. Opening off the auditorium proper are sixteen exits, each of which runs directly into the street level, and the entire house can be emptied in three minutes.

The Foyer.

rich colors artistically blended. Mr. Karzas had the foyer specially designed for the purpose of occupying patrons pleasantly while they await their turn to enter the auditorium. Off the foyer is a comfortable lounging room for women patrons, tastefully and cozily appointed.

The Woodlawn Orchestra.

The Woodlawn theater orchestra has fifteen selected artists, several of whom have had experience with the Chicago Grand Opera orchestra in times past. They are under the direction of A. Leon Bloom, a musician widely known as an orchestra leader.

But let a Chicago musical critic—Herman Devries—give his opinion of this orchestra, which appeared recently in the Chicago American. Mr. Devries stepped into the Woodlawn shortly after its opening, attracted by the long line of automobiles drawn up in front. The following article was written after having seen the Woodlawn program and heard the Woodlawn music:

“An encouraging sign of the musical times and the development of public taste in Chicago is the marked and evident improvement of the orchestral personnel and program now being furnished in up-to-date cinema palaces.

“Time was when the musical lure was a blonde lady of uncertain age, who played ‘rag’ in the dark and chewed gum in the intermissions; but today, forsooth, we engage members of the grand opera orchestra and regale the screen lovers with everything from Schubert, Tchaikowsky and Massenet to Carrie Jacobs-Bond.

“If you don’t believe this drop in, as I did last night, at the Woodlawn theater, in Sixty-third street.

“I have been a South Sider since April 1, and my evening walk yesterday was curtailed by curiosity to see what sort of attraction could cause a line of automobiles as long as the auditorium defile, to form as far as the eye could see.

“As it happens the event was the opening of a brand new theater called the Woodlawn, and the crowd, 2,000 strong, was thrice replaced before the evening was over.

“The musical program is in the hands of Leon Bloom, a very well-known Chicago pianist and musician of parts, whose co-workers are mostly taken from the Chicago Grand Opera Association orchestra.

“The men played so well that more than once my attention wandered from the film, which was very good and quite exciting to a music critic, for whom a diamond robbery is a gala event.

“The Woodlawn’s organ was installed by the W. W. Kimball Company at a cost of $25,000, which gives some idea of the general quality of the fitting and equipment of the great theater.”

The writer was exceedingly anxious to get a biographical sketch of the founder of this fine temple of moving pictures, but found that Mr. Karzas was always too busy to bring himself into prominence, being of retiring disposition and willing to let the Woodlawn itself speak for him and his efforts.

Andrew Karzas, Founder of the Woodlawn.

Mr. Karzas is a man of artistic temperament and of fine education. It is scarcely needless to state this, as the very atmosphere of the Woodlawn reveals both the attainments and character of the founder. He started in moving picture exhibition about ten years ago. This start was made in the De Luxe, 814 East Sixty-sixth street, a small house, seating three hundred people. He was so satisfied with the success of this venture that in the course of time he bought the old building of the Drexel, 858 East Sixty-sixth street, with a capacity of 600 seats. The Drexel was not running on a paying basis at the time, but under his careful management in securing the right kind of pictures for his patrons Mr. Karzas soon made it a success. Then he dreamed of greater things and out of the children of his fancy came the Woodlawn.

It can well be understood that Mr. Karzas superintended every detail of the construction of his new and great venture, and after six months of the closest attention and application the Woodlawn was ready to admit the public on April 26.

The crowds had to be held in check on the opening night by four police officers. The floral display on that occasion was one of the finest ever seen at the dedication of a Chicago theater. Over fifty set pieces, all of them beautiful and most of them costly, were on view in the inner lobby and the foyer.

The magnificent success made by the Woodlawn, in a business sense, is sufficient compensation to Mr. Karzas for his many months of untried effort and ceaseless labors. He continues to devote his finest thought and closest attention to the management of the theater, and his great success shows that he is meeting the enthusiastic approval of his patrons.

Mr. Karzas is a strong believer in publicity and especially in local publicity in the neighborhood of his theater. He has appointed E. J. Ryan, the founder of the Photoplay Magazine, to take charge of this department, and a booklet of twenty-six pages is published weekly and 4,000 of them distributed within the theater district during the summer months. About 7,000 will be distributed weekly during the fall. Mr. Ryan makes his booklet pay for itself by means of the advertising which local business men place in its pages. These booklets contain the programs run at the Woodlawn and the musical numbers played by the orchestra. They also contain stories of the plays shown and other interesting matters.

Mr. Karzas has already been referred to in this article as a man of artistic temperament and good taste. This is shown in the nice policy which governs his screen. He guarantees no advertising slides whatever to be shown on it, believing that the screen should be devoted exclusively to the presentation of pictures.

JAMES K. HACKETT RETURNS TO SCREEN.

James K. Hackett, whose brilliant stage career was interrupted by a serious illness, has decided again to take up work in pictures. "The Ashes of Love," an all-star feature, now in course of production by the Graphic Film Corporation under the direction of Ivan Abramson, is the vehicle he has chosen for his return to public life.

Women's War Work Committee Meets

Largely Attended Session of the Subsidiary Body of War Service Association—Prepares for Practical Activities.

THE first meeting of the Committee on Women's War Work of the Motion Picture Service Association was held Saturday, June 23, at the Lois Weber Studio at 4634 Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood. The meeting was for the purpose of outlining plans and preparing for practical activities along the lines intended by the organization. Representatives of many studios were present, and the meeting was characterized by great enthusiasm and willingness and anxiety to get the work under way. Each member present pledged herself to form a committee on women's war work of the studio, the composition of which was left to her. The purpose of enlisting the services of all studio women and girls in work that will help to win the war.

Arrangements were perfected whereby all studios may become auxiliaries of the Red Cross, with full authority to carry on the work of the parent body. Miss Ethel Weber, of the Lois Weber Studios, was appointed secretary; Miss Theodore Roberts, of Lasky, treasurer; Miss Lillian Greenberger, of the Lois Weber Studio, purchasing agent; Miss Mildred Weis, of Vitascope, chairman of visiting committee; Miss Ada Lewis, Patrola, chairman of entertainment committee; Mrs. Al Smith, Fox, chairman of salvage committee; Miss William Waugh, Chaplin Studio, chairman of professions committee; Miss Alice Foreere, of the Players Equity Association, chairman employment committee.

The meeting was addressed by Miss Sothier, an organizer for the Red Cross, who made a spirited talk in the course of which she outlined the work that may be accomplished by the Studio Women Workers, namely, the knitting of socks, sweaters, and the making of runners and all manner of refugee garments.

Miss Sothier also impressed upon her hearers the necessity of making all work conform to the patterns and dimensions furnished by the Red Cross, and explained that many well-meant efforts were wasted because of a disregard of these rules.

Address were also made by Mr. Hill, the resident head, and Mr. Whitmore, the foreign head of the Y. M. C. A. War Workers, who told of the work of that organization and of the need of books, magazines, games and other means of entertainment for the boys fighting the battle of Democracy “over there.”

Monthly meetings were arranged for by the committee, and at this writing several members have reported that their studio committees are already in working order.

Ms. Mabel Wang has a number of unique and effective means of raising money for the Auxiliary under her charge at the Chaplin Studio. All of the employees using the telephone for personal calls are charged five cents a call. Every member of the studio found willing to work late is fined, and every one heard using profanity around the studio is fined at the rate of five cents a word, and the money is deposited in the fund. In addition to this, of course, the knitting needles are clicking away at sock and sweater during all the spare minutes.

Off to War.

Vesta Pegg, familiar figure in the Harry Carey pictures, is now in a Pacific Coast Army Camp.

David Kirkland, former director of Sunshine comedies, is now a captain at Camp Fremont, California.

Billy Shea, head of the cutting department of the Douglas Fairbanks studio, left for Camp Kearney on June 24.

Claude Elliott, cowboy of the Roy Stewart company, has been assigned to the Camp Mount station near Jacksonville, Fla.

Bobby Harron is getting ready to don the khaki, as he has finished all the productions for which he was granted time by the War Board. Bobby is anxious to get into the fight.

Hank Mann of the Mack Sennett forces and Charles Stevenson of the Rolin-Pathe, have enlisted in the army and left June 25 for Camp Kearney. A jazz band from each of the studios was at the station to brighten their departure.

Edward L. White, assistant cameraman at Metro, has gone into training.

Harry Stone, employee at the Superba Theater, has joined the camouflage section of the National Army.

Kenneth Harlan has gone to war by way of Camp Kearney.

Triangle's Employment Bureau for Actors.

J. Scott Sayre, casting director of the Triangle Studios at Culver City, who is in charge of the registration bureau which has been established by Triangle on the 9th floor of the Knickerbocker Building in Los Angeles, is one of the busiest men on the coast. Over nine hundred persons were registered during the first two weeks the offices were open. This list includes all of the professional people who are not regularly employed, and a large number of non-professionals who are anxious for a try-out in the pictures.

Mr. Sayre says that the idea of the registration is to obtain fresh material for the Triangle directors to work with, and most of all, to get fresh faces in the casts. The stock company plans has not been abandoned by Triangle, but the number of people in stock has been reduced, and fresh material will be used whenever possible. Non-professionals are allowed to register in the hope that a “find” may result.

Mr. Sayre says that the outlook for unexpected pearls is not great, but if any outcomes shows promise, he or she will be given the fullest chance to develop.

Picture Previews.

Cecil B. de Mille, latest Artcraft Special. “You Can’t Have Everything,” was given a preview showing at the Iris Theater at Hollywood, at 10 p.m. on June 24.

At the Lois Weber studio “The Forbidden Box” was shown to a number of invited guests, who were afterwards served with punch and ice cream.

Los Angeles Billboard Decision.

The City Council of Los Angeles, at a meeting on June 24, made a few beneficial changes in the billboard ordinance, which was signed by Mayor Woodman within an hour after it was adopted, and which will become effective thirty days after its legal publication.

George W. Kleiser, president of the Kleiser & Foster Co., gave assurance to the Council that every objectionable billboard will be removed from the residential districts within sixty days, and those that are objectionable in the semi-business districts will be eliminated within four months.

Santa Barbara's Potter Under New Management.

H. Collins, lessee of the Potter Theater at Santa Barbara, has made arrangements to turn over the management of his house to the Portola Theater Company, of which W. Markus is the manager. Mr. Collins is now in the army, but expects to return and resume his managerial duties at the Potter when the war is over.

Roy, N. M., to Have New Picture Show.

A new picture show will soon be opened for business at Roy, N. M., in the Judge Foster Building, which is now being used for office purposes. Manager Sargent contemplates putting up a permanent theater building as soon as the business is firmly established.

Fox Players Entertain Naval Students.

Players from the William Fox and other studios assisted in a big dramatic performance given for the benefit of 3,400 boys at the Naval Base at San Pedro on June 25. Frank Lloyd, who was stage manager and general all around master of ceremonies, superintended the building of a stage at one end of a long pier, where the show was given.

The program was one of the richest ever presented. William and Dustin Barnum and Little Nancy Casswell as "Virgie, gave part of "The Littlest Rebel." Gladys Brockwell, Herbert Hayes, Dorothy Davenport and A. W. Fremont presented dramatic moments from Willard Mack's "Kick In." Tom Mix put his horse, Blue, through his paces. Polly Moran of the Mack Sennett studios, and Harry McCoy contributed "nutt stuff." Margaret McKei whistled solos; Mme. Mariska and Croghan; the Naval Base Band and the Fox Studio String Quartet furnished the music for the occasion.

comes to los angeles for players.

Frank Powell, who has his studio in San Antonio, Texas, has committed himself to appear in pictures for one of the eight pictures he is to make during the coming year. Mr. Powell, whose policy is to cast each picture separately, has chosen House Peters for the leading role of his first film, which will be called "The Forfeit."

Los Angeles Exhibitors.

June 29 brought to a close a highly successful "Victory" week at the Kinema Theater. During this week special programs were projected, including the famous French War Pictures brought here by the William Sandoz Commission. On each evening one or more stage and screen favorites made personal appearances, among them D. W. Griffith, Clara Kimball Young, Wilton Lackaye, Lilian Gish and John Mott, Douglas Fairbanks, Willis H. Booth, Frank Keenan, Mary Pickford and Bob Wagner, well known magazine writer. The Submarine Base Naval Base film for Pacific Coast, the first of the very direct and effective the auditorium that will add to the comfort and convenience of the house.

A. E. Warnington, of Los Angeles, owner of the Imperial Theater building at Central, Cal., took a trip to that city recently to confer with a prospective purchaser of his property.

Seymour Tally, of Tally's Broadway Theater, and his family took a trip to Big Bear Lake.

The art stone front which is being built on to Miller's new theater is nearing completion.

"Hearts of the World," after making a record breaking run of two weeks at the Clune's Auditorium, begins a "repeat" engagement on June 30.

Manager Van Dyke has reopened the Wigwam Theater at Long Beach after a complete renovation and redecoration, and the installation of a new projection machine.

James A. Cook, of El Centro, has closed the Palace Theater for the summer, and is now operating in his elegantly appointed aridrome.

Fifty hundred students of the Balloon School at Arcadia, Cal., were entertained at Clune's Auditorium on June 26, with a showing of "Eyes of the World." After the show Douglas Fairbanks treated the bunch to a watermelon feed in the dining room of the Temple Baptist Church.

"Me Und Gott" Ready for State Rights Buyers.

The Romayne Super-Film Company, with general offices on the second floor of the Marsh Strong Building, Los Angeles, are now ready to release their first feature, "Me Und Gott," to the state rights buyers.

The initial offering of the Romayne company is in six reels, and, according to H. Y. Romayne, president of the company, is a strong and forceful drama, with a story that shows how the most of countries and races of America are united in a common cause against Germany.

The picture was directed by Wyndham Gettins, formerly with Universal. Betty Burbank, as leading woman, is supported by a large number of capable players, including Judd Haynes, who took the part of the father in "Hearts of the World."

Mr. Romayne says that pictures will be released regularly by his company, and that while no big stars with consequent big salaries will be employed respectable salaries will be paid. The Romayne company, by basing the earnings of the players on the earnings of the players of the company, will be paid to the players. By this means, he contends, a high-class of production will be maintained, and during the coming of produce pictures that can be sold on a "live and let live" basis.

Mr. Romayne also declares that his company's productions will be offered to the market in a different manner than that usually observed by state rights producers. Nothing but five and six reel pictures will be made, and they will be sold direct from the main offices of the company: The Romayne company has secured the David Horsley studios, with its complete and modern equipment for the production of its films.

Frazee's Trick Film Methods.

Edwin A. Frazee, who severed his connection with the active end of the picture business a year ago in order to devote his time to the further development of the trick picture methods, of which he made a specialty, announces that he has perfected his inventions and is ready to begin the commercial exploitation of his ideas.

Mr. Frazee says the time has come for a new element of technique to be introduced into picture making, and as the limit of human possibility has about been reached in stunts and scenic effects that are performed by ordinary means now at the command of the producer the introduction of new methods should be welcome.

Mr. Frazee has solved by his Frazee trick film methods will make it possible for innumerable mechanical novelties to be introduced into films, and that all of the bewildering illusions of Hermann, Keller and other great magicians and the remarkable hoodwinking fantasies of English pantomime may be easily and simply accomplished and at comparatively small cost.

Particular attention is called by Mr. Frazee to the fact that water-wall scenes have hitherto been too prohibitively in cost because of the special diving and other apparatus needed, can be easily produced on the stage by his method.

Stress is also laid on the fact that many scenes that take place splashing water can be performed with ease and at comparatively small cost of production because of the cost and difficulty of screening. All of these stories, Mr. Frazee contends, would find birth and become highly interesting and highly profitable films through his trick picture methods.

Mr. Frazee is remembered by his record and ability as a comedy director for the Keystone company with Fred Mace and with the William Fox organization.

The Frazee Film Studio is located in the Boyle Heights district of Los Angeles.

Willis & Inglis Reaching Out.

Out in Los Angeles whenever old Mother Nature stages a temblor, which is Pacific Coast Spanish for earthquake, the whole town gets cock-eyed from squinting up at tall buildings to see how much out of plumb the "temblor" has left them. There was a mild seismic shock in Los Angeles in April, in which several of the local skyscrapers lost their dignity and uprightness.

The Wright & Cabender Building on Fourth and Hill streets came in for more than its share of squinting because of a peculiar bulging out of the walls at the sixth floor level. Of course, the building has been built on the trembler, but as a matter of fact the earthquake had nothing to do with it. The bulge in the building, which was a mere optical illusion, was caused by the remarkable expansion in the offices of Willis & Inglis, who occupy a suite of rooms on the sixth floor.

Willis & Inglis have been actively identified with the picture industry since the establishment of studios on the west coast. They are managers and publicity agents for a large number of stars; they conduct an employment bureau for players, and maintain a large book and play department. They have a costume studio, where producers find full and complete paraphernalia and equipment for the production of any and all kinds of features. Dustin Farnum's latest feature was made at the Willis & Inglis plant.

The Willis & Inglis corporation has grown from one small room to a suite of six offices in three years, and there are several managers, book and play department, the coast who have not had pleasant business relations with them during that time.

Both Mr. Willis and Mr. Inglis devote their personal attention to the employment and publicity end of their business, as well as personally superintending their large book and play department.

Willis & Inglis are to closely identified with all branches of the industry, making that a statement made by them that the picture industry is in excellent shape and that a very bright future is impending may be taken as authentic and well founded.

Sunset New Name for Griffith Studio.

The old Fine Arts studio at 4500 Sunset Boulevard, Holly- wood, has been given in the name of the Sunset Studios, and has been divided into several studios of medium dimensions, one of which will be occupied by Clara Kimball Young and another by the new Dorothy Gish company until space can Rubbernecking in Filmland

Personally Conducted by Gieber.

Ladies and Gentlemen, we are now entering Hollywood, a city that is populated exclusively by movie actors and actresses and real estate dealers who wax fat and overrich by building bunglowes for them in.

You will note that all the houses we are passing have movie scenes. They are movie scenes, my friends. There are few houses in this section that has not been haunted by one or some thrilling drama or laughable comedy.

The street we are now traversing is Western avenue. Mary Pickford and her mother live on this street. Mary is going to move real soon, not because it is cheaper than to remain in the city, but because she has decided to take up her residence in the aristocratic Westside district.

The building you see over there in which Theda Bara made her picturization of Salome, in which John the Baptist lost his head because he did not lose his head to the charms of this scriptural sirem. Just across the street where Henry Lehrman makes his Sunshine comedies. We are not allowed to enter this building. The fact is that various man-eating lions that are used in making comedies are allowed to roam at will in the grounds. However, if you will rise in your seats and stretch the rubber in your neck you may look into this Sunshine complex.

The tall and graceful person you see leaning against the post is none other than the longest and funniest legs on legs. The air of sadness you observe on Mr. Summerson's face is well known to all. Sim is thinking up something funny to do in his next play, which will have the Pacific Northwest for its stage and the Sunshine beauty squad as support.

Over on the platform you will observe a movie in the making. The man being worked over is Lehrman himself. Henry is directing the piece. This set is a faithful duplication of a small corner in some of the finest suburbs. It is remarkable that the cameraman can shoot right inside. The colored porters in this scene are very shy. They insist on being tipped every five minutes to make them work. These colored boys are used to put the shine in the Sunshine complex.

The strange animal you see in this scene is not a dog, but the smallest horse in the world. He weighs but forty pounds, answers to the name of Fido, and kicks up his heels and bucks in the cutest way when anyone near him.

The funny looking little man with the mongolian mustache is Billy Ritchie. Sylvia Clavagh is the other movie thespians in this scene.

Down on the platform to the right you have a look at Lloyd V. Hamilton with his comedy mustache. Not a bad looking chap, though. The resemblance to him is Gertrude Selby. They are dopying new stuff for their next comedy in which they are called... oh, I mean the people who work at this studio.

The group of buildings on the right are the Warner Bros. studio. It is populated by 500 people. A little bungalow over in the corner near the fence is the studio quarters of Bill Farnum, when he is not out on location.

Bill calls his little Grey House in the West, and he uses it as an office. He also has a place to sign the hundreds of photographs he sends out to his admirers everywhere.

The house on the left is inhabited by Frank Lloyd, Mr. Farnum's director. Both of these gents are considered geniuses in the field of film making.

The house on the right is inhabited by Frank Lloyd, Mr. Farnum's director. Both of these gents are considered geniuses in the field of film making.

The house on the right is inhabited by Frank Lloyd, Mr. Farnum's director. Both of these gents are considered geniuses in the field of film making.

The man you see standing by the fountain is Charles Cary, and the man talking to him wearing a pith helmet has a name that is Thomas—sometimes known as Tom-Mix. Mr. Mix is getting ready to mix up another Mix specially.

The man with the scub hat near the stage is one of the big muscle men of the movies—J. Gordon Bennett, the man whose name is有个—sometimes known as Tom-Mix. Mr. Mix is getting ready to mix up another Mix specially.

The man with the scub hat near the stage is one of the big muscle men of the movies—J. Gordon Bennett, the man whose name is a "Min-Mix." He is the personal driver of Theda Bara, and they are now making a film that is a distinct departure from the usual larks pieces, inasmuch as it is a loving picture.

We are now traveling on Sunset Boulevard. A street that is broad enough to accommodate the number of movie companies shooting scenes on it. A turn to the left brings us up opposite the Douglas Fairbanks country.

The fellow without a hat and wearing white pants and a smile in Doug himself. The somewhat well-built man with the dark glasses talking to him is Allan Dwan, his director.

The great number of buildings you see have all been used as sets for Fairbanks plays. The church steeple is the one Doug climbed to the top in "A Modern Musketeer." He will not allow it to be torn down because so many visitors come to the studio and want to see him climb the steeple, which he always accommodates them by doing.

They are filming his latest picture, "Bound in Morocco," and is resting up before starting another.

This is the name of the stately though small gentleman with the suave—no lady, I didn't say suave—man. Mr. Zelikman belongs to that strange tribe known as press agents and keeps the publicity informed about the doings of Doug.

The kind-faced and cheerful looking individual with the straw hat and the white beard is one of the nearest mediums in pictures, Frank Capra.

The small house at the back of the lot is Mr. Capra's home, where he resides to do his heavy thinking. None but he may enter here.

This is the vast grounds that surrounds the home of the largest and most brilliant players in the industry work here. The long string of men standing in line are movie moguls, who are sometimes seen with a document in his hand. These magnates know that Mary Pickford's contract has not been renewed, and offer her large sums of money to make movies for them.

Across the street you see a complete and regular circus, with all the apparatus thereof, which is being used for "Under the Top," Fred Stone's first picture in pictures.

This circus is complete, from animal to human beings, with full complement of performers, horse charmers, horseback riders, and clowns.

We are now passing the spot where the ring on the spotted pony is Fred Stone, who finds himself doing some of his old-time circus stunts all over again. Fred Stone and Charlesogle and a number of famous players assist him in making this picture.

The people in the seats are extras.
and they are getting paid to just sit there and play themselves.

This, Ladies and Gentlemen, ends our trip today.

Heart Interest Sories of the Wee
An Embryo Booster

HOW do you like Los Angeles?" asked David Morrissey, who has just arrived to take the place of Stuart Ackerman at the head of Fox publicity for the West Coast.

"Before I get into the picture publicity game," said Mr. Morrissey, "I used to cover the ships for a New York newspaper. You know 'ship' reporters are distinguished directed and distinguished European visitor with the question, 'How do you like America?' before he ever had a chance to say anything, "I used to like Los Angeles," as soon as I stepped from the train, and the query has been repeated through the country. I will say, however, that my first impressions were not too good, and if I keep on liking Los Angeles, I'll start telling my friends I was never liking it, I will wind up by liking it like a native son.

It's a Good Old World.

It is almost as great an pleasure to me to watch the happiness of one on whom the fates have smiled as to get the smile myself. I had this pleasure last week when visiting the George Kleine exchange in the Knickerbocker building. J. A. Quinn, the shipping clerk, entered the room with a look of dazed happiness on his face and something clutched tightly in his hand.

"I just went back there," he said, pointing to the cloak room, "and shook down an old hat—and his voice trembled with joy—and found sixty-five cents that I had left in one of the pockets over three months ago.

It was indeed a moment of great rejoicing, and it was lunch time, and the Big Bear Lake was a short hike away on one of the upper floors of the building.

Edwards Has Been Fishing.

J. Gordon Edwards, manager of productions at the Fox West Coast studios, has just discontinued a series of personal appearance bookings he made just before his departure for Big Bear Lake on a fishing trip.

If the dates had been kept each scene would have shown Mr. Edwards approaching the bank of one of his friends bearing a string of rainbow trout and other tasty fish, with the friend and his family on the front porch in an admiring and welcoming attitude—just like one of McCall's illustrations of the George Ade type.

No male member of the Los Angeles film colony is considered as having thoroughly enjoyed until he has been to Big Bear Lake. Mr. Edwards accordingly made big preparations for a two weeks' stay at the resort.

Upon arrival, however, he found that the altitude was conducive neither to comfort nor fishing, so he packed up and came away.

Mr. Edwards says he finds no record of Isaiah Washington in the South going fishing at an altitude of 8,000 feet, and so considers he did nothing unethical or against the rules of the atmosphere when he came down to sea level after a two days' stay.

Monks Come High.

Albert Shelby LeVino, head scenario editor for the continuous narrative writer for Metro's West Coast plant, stood on the little porch of the bungalow in which his sanctum is located. An organ grinder known all over Hollywood as Tony appoached. Right out of the air LeVino had an idea.

"I'll get this fellow to lend me his outfit," he said, "and take it over to the studio, and Harry Annis Nelson will go grabbed with the monk and organ. It will make a great publicity picture for the trade papers.

The proposition was put up to Tony, and two bits offered as a tentative bail, but he showed no enthusiasm. LeVino increased the bail to fifty cents, then six bits, then one dollar.

Tony smiled with scorn.

"Say," he said, "what you tink? Dis monk costa me good money. Two 'undred doll.

"Listen," said LeVino. "You'll go down the street and play your organ for an hour, and only make a few pennies. I'm offering you a whole dollar just to have the picture taken!"

Tony shrugged his shoulders.

"Say!" demanded LeVino, as Tony started away, "do you who you think are, George Beban?"

Studio Shorts

BLANCHE SWEET has just completed her first picture under the management of Jack Curtis, and is making East very shortly, where her next production "The Unpardonable Sin," from the Rupert Hughes story, will be staged. Miss Sweet expects to take the rattle for the East early in July.

Bertram Grassby, former Fox heavy, is cast as the Duke de Sauterne in Mae Murray's new picture, "Merry Mary McGuire.

Mary Pickford has presented a hundred victory field showers—a shower bath apar-atatus that can be suspended from a tree — to the 142d Regiment Field Artillery, her godson.

Vera Lewis, who is taking a vacation from the studios just now, has been elected secretary of the Stage Women's War Relief, of Los Angeles.

Adda Gleeson, who played Ramona to Monroe Salibou's Alejando, is again working with Monroe in a coming Bluebird, "That Devil Bateaste.

The Lois Weber studio has been designated as a Red Cross Salvage Station for the Moving Picture War Service Association. One hundred thousand pounds of food has been donated for offices and store rooms.

Clara Kimball Young is on her way East by way of Canada, and will stop over at Lake Louise for a few days rest. Miss Young is to make a film adaptation of Willa Cather's underworld drama, in the near future.

Arthur Shirley, star of Thomas Dixon's "Fall of a Nation," is playing an important role in "A Matrimonial Cleanup," a Harry Carey production.

Mabel Normand in "The Venus Model."

Joe Hickson, specialist in Mexican heavy type, has just completed filming a star's story, "Cactus Crandall," now being filmed at Triangle.

Jack Curtis, whose past year a Triangle actor, is working in a Fox picture under the direction of Lynn Reynolds.

Ralph Lewis is contracted to appear in coming Triangles.

Chaplin's new comedy is a war picture, he says.

George Beban, who took out a large insurance policy on his life a few days ago, is considering taking a hit another big role on George, Jr.

Tommy Ramone himself during the week that elapsed between the finishing of his last picture and the beginning of his next, Declaration, makes a rather spectacular apparence at various theaters in the interests of W. S. S., treated several hundred students a Big Bear Lake to a watermelon feast, and was chief entertainer at a benefit given by the Hollywood Junior Belgian Relief Committee.

J. Barney Sherry has moved his house-goods from the house he occupied on one of the new residences in the fashionable Whipple district of Los Angeles.

The producer has rented from Monterey, Cal., where he went for a few days of peace and quiet to finish a story she has been working on with the American Expeditionary Forces in France.

Toto, the clown, has left Rollin-Pathes, and has signed with a new company, making his first step back from the screen to the stage at the Orpheum theatre in Los Angeles.

Jack Dillon has gone over to Universal.

Ola Gray is back at Triangle working in Chiray's Cabanne's new picture, "The Mirror of Fishers of Santa Monica to his new residence in the fashionable Whipple district of Los Angeles.

Paul Powell, former Fine Arts director, will in future direct Bluebirds at U City.

William E. Flidew, cameraman, will turn the cameras at the Fox west Coast location for Lucas at Metro during the making of the May Allison pictures.

Dorothy Gish is expected daily at the Hutchinson ranch, where she is scheduled to begin work on her first Paramount picture under the direction of Elmer Clifton.

William V. Mong has left Triangle and has gone back to Universal, his first love.

Arthur Hoyt, former casting director at Triangle, has transferred his activities to another branch of the moving picture industry at Universal City, and is appearing in "The Yellow Dog," a Colin Campbell production.

Bryant Washburn, who has just become a LaSicky star, will be featured in straight dancing with Florence Vidor as his leading woman.

Theda Bara, who has just finished one production and produced another, is under the care of a physician, who advises complete rest from personal appearings in theaters. Bara also boasts of patriotism during her short vacation.

George Larkin, Diando serial star, is planning to give a dance for the soldiers in the big bear, the great door-stage for a dancing film, and the studio jazz band to furnish the music.

Oscar Myers has signed for a week's work for a short, and will return by the Southern route, with stopsovers at various army camps to meet every viva-

Funkhouser Testifies in His Own Defense

As the Case Proceeds Public Opinion Is Disposed to Consider the Major as Victim of a Plot.

ACTING CHIEF ALCOCK concluded his evidence against Major Funkhouser, the suspended second deputy, Monday afternoon, July 1, after his three chief witnesses had given their testimony.

Tuesday morning's session and part of the afternoon was taken up by a prolonged effort on the part of the major's counsel to have the charges against him dismissed, on the ground of insufficient evidence, but the Civil Service Commission Board decided that the defense must proceed. It was therefore late in the day when Major Funkhouser took the stand.

In the brief time given him before adjournment was made until Friday morning, July 5, the major recited the story of his fight against the social evil for the past five years, and he charged that his department was deprived of vice investigators after he, Major Funkhouser, was summarily dismissed by Beach Thompson, the present mayor, had assumed his duties.

It transpired Thursday, July 4, that an important witness for the suspended second deputy had disappeared. The man was one of the major's investigators. Since the suspension of the major, this man had been engaged in work with an ice cream company, and it was learned that he had been arrested Wednesday afternoon, July 3, by two men from the acting second deputy's office, no reason being given for his arrest. This he had been arrested on charges about two weeks ago, but his case was continued for a month, and he was released on bonds. The man's attorney is puzzled, as the security furnished for his appearance was good. The man in question was referred to by the Acting Chief on his charges against Funkhouser, when he declared that the major was employing men with criminal records as moral investigators.

While on the stand, Tuesday afternoon, the major testified that this man had been sent to his office by former First Deputy Westbrook, of the police force, who asked that he be put to work without asking him too many questions.

It developed Friday, July 5, that the arrested man was held incommunicado, in solitary confinement, without sufficient food, although no criminal charge had been filed against him by the acting second deputy of police, on the order of Acting Chief Alcock. The man was released on a writ of habeas corpus, issued by Judge Sabath, on Friday.

Navy Man Not Permitted to Testify.

Major Funkhouser took the witness stand Friday morning, and again denied emphatically all the charges brought against him. Frank C. Brown, chief master-at-arms of the United States Navy, was not permitted to testify that moral conditions in Chicago have grown much worse since the suspension of the second deputy. For the past six months Mr. Brown has been in charge of the naval provost guard of twenty-five men, fighting vice conditions. President Frazier, of the Civil Service Commission Board, denied it expedient under the circumstances to refuse permission.

Major Funkhouser cleared away the misunderstanding prevailing concerning the trialling of Miss Kate Adams, who had made an attack on the subject of vice conditions for a Chicago paper.

"It looked as though our men were not making good reports," said the major on the stand. "Her reports were more voluminous and contained things that ours didn't. They showed conditions worse than ours did, so I directed that every effort was made to find out who was wrong.

"I have the highest respect for Miss Adams and am under deep obligations to her for assistance in vice matters. Her reputation is so far above anything of the sort that such a thing is ridiculous."

The major also denied most emphatically that he had ever ordered that Chief Schuettler be shadowed, or that he ever had the chief's telephone wire tapped. The hearing will be continued Monday, July 8.

Tribune Inclines to Funkhouser's Side.

The Chicago Tribune of July 5 published the following editorial, under the heading "Mr. Alcock and Mr. Funkhouser," and the article indicates the general trend of opinion in the city now being formed on the Funkhouser trial.

"Mr. Alcock, the district manager, he laid the wires for the prosecution of Major Funkhouser, but whatever the truth of that matter it seems clear that he is laying the wires or greasing the skids (if that expression is more in accord with the police parlance), for his own exit from office. Mr. Alcock, only recently a police captain, had a rare opportunity when it fell to his lot to assume direction of the department. But the most conspicuous thing in his record is the prosecution of a man who had the indorsement and support of the good citizens as Carter Harrison and Herrman Schuettler.

"Major Funkhouser's testimony seems to dispose of many of the accusations brought against him. To say the least, it would appear to be more in accord with a common sense judgment than the rather fantastic assertions of Mr. Alcock.

"It is not necessary to regard Major Funkhouser as a martyr in order to observe that Mr. Alcock has displayed a surprising degree of unfitness for his office—surprising even for a Chicago superintendent of police. He has forgotten the case of John McWeeny, or does he honestly think he can succeed where McWeeny failed? But the operations of the police mind are often past understanding."

Tom North Off to "Frisco"

Recently Appointed District Manager of the Pacific Coast for Pathe Exchange, Inc.

TOM NORTH, one of the most popular and widely known film men in the country, came into the city from New York Wednesday, July 3, and left the same evening for San Francisco, accompanied by Mr. North, formerly district manager for Pathe, Inc., in the eastern division, was recently appointed to the same position in the western division, with headquarters at San Francisco in the Pathe branch office there. Under his supervision are the branch offices in Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, Salt Lake and Spokane Falls.

Mr. North is no stranger to the Pacific Coast, having spent five years there as an exchange manager. Three years of this time was spent with George Kleine in his San Francisco office and two years with V-L-S-E as general manager of the Seattle office of that organization. This experience means that Mr. North is known by nearly every exhibitor in the territory covered by him—not only known, but favorably known. It also means that a warm welcome awaits him in every Pacific Coast city where a Pathe branch office is located.

But Mr. North is not merely a Pacific Coast trotter; he can lay claim to that of continental trotter, with reference to the United States and Canada. His career as a showman before he entered the moving picture business had to do with leading tented amusement organizations. For six years he was "special-story" man of the Ringling shows' press force. For five years he was general manager of the Harry Askin theatrical road shows traveling out of Chicago, and also resident manager of the La Salle Opera House. He traveled out of New York as business manager of "Buster Brown" and of the "Newlyweds" for several seasons, and was also business manager for other well-known theatrical attractions.

Mr. North's first experience in the film business was gained while first assistant of manager in charge of all the George Kleine road shows for "Quo Vadis," "Pompeii," "Spartacus," etc., on the Pacific Coast. Later on he established the San Francisco branch office for Mr. Kleine and proved himself a most efficient branch manager.

It goes without saying that Tom has the writer's best wishes for his continued success and happiness. [And the New York office declares itself in on those best wishes.]

July 20, 1918

V. R. DAY SETTLES IN CULVER CITY.

V. R. Day, widely known in Chicago business circles and for eight years connected with the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, has joined the Pacific Coast, spent the last two weeks in the city on business. Mr. Day has been residing at Culver City for some time past, Chicago still being his home city, and will shortly return to his home city. Mr. Day, who resides permanently, Mr. Day has the honor, as well as the de facto, title of mayor of Culver City. All the trustees of Culver City are connected with the moving picture trade, and they enthusiastically wish him the best of luck in the launching picture center of the world. The studios of Triangle and Thomas H. Ince and one of the western Essanay studios are located at this point.

"OVER THE TOP" AT WOODLAWN.

E. J. Ryan, publicity manager for the Woodlawn theater, called at this office the other day and in the course of conversation referred to the wonderful business they have been having. He has sold a five-part screen set at a price of $650, the whole set being $2,000. The next set can be played by the top at that house. The picture was run for five days, and during that time played to 35,000 people. On certain days as many as 10,000 people attended during the two presentations—4,000 in the afternoon and 6,000 at night. The admission was 25 cents, including the war tax.

STEPHEN FOX WRITING ANOTHER RUSSELL STORY.

Stephen Fox, of the American Film Company, is now at work on the next photoplay for William Russell. "Up Romance Road," the last Russell feature, was also based on a story by Mr. Fox.

"CLAWS OF THE HUN" FINE WAR PICTURE.

Charles Ray in "The Claws of the Hun" (Thomas H. Ince) made a big hit at Orchestra Hall last week. This feature has a great, big war punch. The author is often on the keen edge of expectation while it progresses. In my opinion it is really one of the strongest war films I have yet seen—one that arouses high patriotic ardor and a fierce hatred and bitterness against our enemies. Adopted by the Huns as a yardstick, I would predict a long and prosperous run for this picture throughout the country. It should be showed everywhere.

NEW ADVERTISING CLOCK FOR EXHIBITORS.

In this day of close supervision of time and effort the progressive exhibitor is quick to take advantage of any improvement that will prove beneficial to his business. A new advertising clock recently placed on the market by the Kineto Machine Company of Chicago, can be placed in either the lobby or auditorium of a theater. This automatic clock stereopticon, by means of a high power nitrogen lamp, projects twelve slides, each slide showing the correct time and an advertisement or talk within the clock dial in endless rotation.

THE PROJECTION is made on a screen about twenty inches in diameter on the standard machine, which is part of the apparatus itself, and is operated by means of clock mechanism. A new advertising clock machine can be used advantageously for announcing coming features, as it requires no attention from the operator of a theater. It will please patrons by eliminating screen advertising, and will satisfy the advertiser by guaranteeing uniform advertising throughout the day.

WAR PICTURE CHEERED AT HAMILTON CLUB.

"TO HELL WITH THE KAISER" was shown at the Hamilton Club the evening of July 4 to the club members and many jackies from the Great Lakes, who were guests of the club. Among the guests present was Captain Moffett, head of the Great Lakes Training Station. The boys cheered for fully five minutes after the picture was run off.

EDGAR SILVERMAN, in charge of Select's booking department, in the Chicago office, has enlisted in the navy, and left for the Great Lakes Training Station, Friday, June 28, entering as a yeoman. Julius Olcott, North Side salesman, has been appointed by his department.

GEORGE KLEINE'S ALASKAN PICTURE.

A photoplay with an engaging story, the scenes of which are laid in Alaska, has been secured by George Kleine for release through the Kleine system in the near future. A. R. Smith, who has taken a number of scenes in Alaska thematically, says this picture is about seven reels in length, but is now being edited by the Kleine forces and when released it will be about five and a half or six reels.

GEORGE KLEINE TEMPTS THE FINNY TRIBE.

George Kleine, accompanied by Mrs. Kleine and his daughter, Miss Helen Kleine, went on a fishing trip to Eagle Lake, Wis., to spend a few days around the Fourth. Mr. Kleine, who is a modern Izak Walton, delights to feel that this slender creature, with its nauseating black bass or the voracious pull of a pile, I have a little bet with him that he will catch nothing this trip, so here's to glorious failure.

MOTOGRAPHY AND EXHIBITOR'S HERALD Merged.

Motography and Exhibitor's Herald will be merged in one publication on July 20, and will be published thenceforth under the title of "Exhibitor's Herald and Motography." Motography, in its present form, is the only publication of its kind. Mr. Mock, had quite a following in the trade. Martin J. Quigley, editor of Exhibitor's Herald, will be editor of the merged publications, with Chicago as headquarters.

SHIFT IN VIRGINIA FIRST NATIONAL.

Harry M. Crandall and Joseph P. Morgan withdraw and Frank Ferrindini Takes Over Their Interests.

Harry M. CRANDALL and Joseph P. Morgan have announced their withdrawal from the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for Virginia and of the taking over of their interests by Frank Ferrindini. Under their franchise they had been marketing the circuit's productions in Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia and Florida. Offices were maintained in Washington and in Richmond and Atlanta. In addition numerous state rights productions were presented for the territory and on Delaware line.

The Crandall-Morgan interests in Virginia are large. It was felt that inasmuch as the Circuit's productions could not be used in the Crandall houses in the District of Colum- bia, and the territory so far separated from it, they could not handle the proposition advantageously. Mr. Ferrindini, it was felt, could handle the business to better advantage. Messrs. Crandall and Morgan being interested more in eastern territory.

The Washington office, which is at 420 Ninth street, will be retained by the Crandall-Morgan combination for the handling of the state rights pictures which they already control and such others as they may secure from time to time. Upon the dissolution of their association with Mr. Ferrindini the territory owned by them collectively on the states rights pictures then controlled was divided, they retaining Delaware and the District of Columbia.

At the Crandall offices in Washington it was stated that it was contemplated going into the states rights business on a much larger scale, handling pictures especially where the immediate territory could be secured. Abe Dresser, who has been managing the Washington office, will continue in that capacity.

DOROTHY GREEN LEADING WOMAN FOR LOVE.

Dorothy Green, who has been engaged by World Pictures to support Montagu Love in "Pirate's Gold," is no newcomer in motion pictures. She has played important parts in many notable film productions. Miss Green began her theatrical career as a child at that time when the first Ollibrue picture was made as a ballet dancer. She appeared in a number of musical productions in New York and later began her screen career, and specialized on heavy, a line of parts in moving picture parlance called vampires. The character that she will portray in "Pirate's Gold" ranges from a roustabout girl disguised as a boy in the North Carolina swamps and a leader of a gang of pirates to a woman of fashion and society. Oscar Apfel is directing the picture.

WE CONGRATULATE LIEUTENANT TOM FORMAN.

Tom Forman, well-known screen actor, who has been seen in many Paramount pictures, is now a lieutenant in the Air Service. He is taking just what he asked for, being away from a "picture mill." He was at Camp Gordon, Georgia, where he had a flying camp to Camp Gordon, Atlanta. Forman enlisted as a private a year ago and was sent to Camp Kearney, California. There he was soon made a corporal, then a sergeant and finally was recommended for admission to the officers' school at Camp Gordon.

Lieutenant Forman has supported many Paramount stars, including Lou Tellegen, Blanche Sweet, Vivian Martin, Pauline Williams, Sessue Hayakawa, Theodore Roberts and others. His many friends will be delighted with the news of his promotion.

BERNSTEIN SOON TO MAKE PUBLIC HIS PLANS.

David Bernstein, who is handling the feature production, "Her Mistake," starring Evelyn Nesbit, made under the direction of Julius Steger, has not yet definitely formulated his plans for releasing this production, but announces that a definite statement to exhibitors as to the method of distribution will be made within the next week or ten days.
Goldwyn on Threshold of Second Year

Review of What Producing and Distributing Organizations Have Accomplished and a Look-In on What They Aim to Achieve in the Coming Twelve Month---President Goldfish Announces Star Series Plan and Vice President Warren Describes Selling Policy.

GOLDWYN Pictures will be released for our company's second year, beginning in September, under the Star Series plan. This announcement will no doubt occasion surprise among the country's exhibitors, for Goldwyn in its first year abided by the principle of collective selling, a year's production under a single contract—and made the biggest kind of success of this principle. But exhibitors, I feel sure, will welcome the policy of selling Star Series because of its greater flexibility and because this system is in perfect accord both with their needs and desires.

Previously we have told exhibitors of our doubled output of productions in our second year—of our expansion from twenty-six productions to an excess of fifty productions in twelve months; and we have been tremendously gratified by the favorable responses this announcement caused. For the coming season Goldwyn will offer: Geraldine Farrar, six productions; Rex Beach, six productions; Pauline Frederick, six productions; Mabel Normand, eight productions; Mae Marsh, eight productions; Madge Kennedy, eight productions; Tom Moore, eight productions.

I am now able to tell exhibitors more than the mere number of the productions they will receive from Goldwyn; the titles are also made known here for the first time.

Miss Farrar's first three Goldwyn productions are "The Turn of the Wheel," by Tex Charwater; "The Cat," by Willard Mack, and "The Pirate Woman," from the novel, "Three Palms Cay," by Captain E. A. Dingle, first published in Munsey's. In all of these stories she is again the modern emotional actress that her public desires her to be. We are not wasting her talents or beauty in costume stories of a past period.

Rex Beach's six stories are "Laughing Bill Hyde," "The Crimson Gardenia," "The Iron Trail," "The Net," "Going Some" and "The Silver Horde." In the first of these stories Willard Mack is co-operating with Mr. Beach in the preparation of the scenario and Reginald Barker is the director. To my mind, plus the great cast that will be chosen, this closely approximates an all-star production as anything possibly could. All of his productions for the year are from his most popular stories.

"Poverty of Money" is Pauline Frederick's First.

Pauline Frederick's first Goldwyn production will be "The Poverty of Money," an emotional drama from one of Willard Mack's well known plays.

Mabel Normand will be seen first in the coming season in a rollicking broad comedy, "Peck's Bad Girl," by Tex Charwater, which should bring joy to everyone.

Mae Marsh is completing her first production for the new year, a romantic emotional drama, "Hidden Fires," by J. Clarkson Miller. As I first said on the day we announced her as a Goldwyn star, she is the ablest young emotional actress on the screen.

Madge Kennedy, having won out immediately and gained tremendous popularity in her first year in pictures, will begin her new season in "The Kingdom of Youth," by Charles A. Logue, who wrote her other success, "The Service." Tom Moore is launched as a star in "Just for Tonight," also by Mr. Logue, a surprising and delightful picture directed by Charles Giblyn.

Each of the stars I have mentioned, with the exception of Miss Frederick, has completed his or her initial picture of the series for the coming season. Rex Beach's first production will be begun in a few days.

Geraldine Farrar to Open Goldwyn Season.

Our first release for the coming season will be Geraldine Farrar in "The Turn of the Wheel," on September 1. This story was directed by Reginald Barker, and Goldwyn surrounded this successful star with an all-star cast, including Herbert Rawlinson as her leading man; Violet Heming in an important role, and Hassard Short and Percy Marmont in other suited roles. "Peck's Bad Girl" is a fitting broad comedy, "Peck's Bad Girl," a fitting broad comedy, with which to inaugurate a new season and will start all Goldwyn customers off right for a new year.

Not because I am expected to say this, but because I believe I need say very little of it, I feel that Goldwyn for the coming season has the most perfectly balanced group of stars and productions in the motion picture industry. We have grown to our present position from two causes other than our stars and production. These causes are remarkable organization of loyal, hard-working, enthusiastic men and women and the splendid support of the exhibitors of the country.

We owe a great deal to the exhibitors who have made us welcome. We felt that another quality organization was needed in this industry, and exhibitor patronage has proved that we correctly sensed an actual requirement. My hope and belief is that we will do more for exhibitors than ever before; that we will maintain with them the same pleasant and amicable relations that were established in our first year. I am proud of the announcements that we are enabled to make elsewhere in this publication. We have planned new and advantageous organization with a fine record behind it and a better record ahead of it. We are going to grow bigger still. Goldwyn has been erected and made during the most trying period in the world's history. Having accomplished what we have under adverse conditions, it is fair to predict for Goldwyn a still bigger and more important role in this industry in the period of fair weather that lies ahead.

SAMUEL GOLDFISH.

Warren Describes Goldwyn Selling Policy

Company Vice President Says Organization Is a Pioneer of the New Day of Motion Picture Distribution.

By F. B. Warren,

Vice-President Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

THE Goldwyn Distributing Corporation is more than a selling mechanism; it is the pioneer of the new day in the distribution of motion pictures. It marks the day of the merchant entering upon the new duties of picture selling.

It is a remarkable organization in any business that can say truthfully at the end of its first year's existence that it has accomplished the things it set out to do.

Our distribution a year ago intended—

To girdle the globe and be actively releasing our Goldwyn Pictures everywhere before the end of twelve months. We accomplished this in six months.

To respect the reserve and good will of the country's exhibitors. We did this.

To "play fair" with our actual and prospective patronage. We did this.

To rent our goods without haggling and bargaining; to handle pictures as automobile manufacturers handle cars, as steel men handle their product; to be just in our price

---

Samuel Goldfish.
schedules but to win respect by abiding by our prices. We have done all of these things in Goldwyn.

It is hardly necessary to restate our initial intentions, for exhibitors everywhere know that we have established ourselves by building on these solid foundations.

Goldwyn for a year has operated nineteen offices in as many cities of the United States and to-day we are opening our twentieth office in New Orleans. Our other offices are in Atlanta, Boston, Buffalo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Dallas, Denver, Detroit, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, St. Louis, Seattle and Washington, D. C.

In Canada Goldwyn Pictures, Ltd., has six offices, and we are actively operating in England, Australia, New Zealand, Scandinavia, South Africa, Brazil, Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador, Porto Rico, San Domingo, Venezuela, Mexico, Central America, Italy, Dutch East Indies and Straits Settlements, Egypt, India, Burmah, Ceylon, Japan, China and the Philippines. We are now open in addition, France, Portugal and Spain through our export department.

Out in the field we have sought to find a new kind of men for the motion picture business—men chosen from other big industries instead of just film-sellers who have grown up with the picture industry knowing only its methods and little or nothing about the successful methods of other businesses. We have kept our organization at the top and in full steam. We have put a great deal of successful men out in the field. We do not "police" them to make them unhappy. We try to work under the Charles A. Dana policy of "Use Your Own Judgment."

Organization Believes in Itself.

We are an enthusiastic organization believing in our product and ourselves. At the start of our selling career we made it a rule not to lie or to deceive each other. We hold our men who make occasional mistakes, but we drop those who make mistakes and try to cover them up. We make office managers out of our most successful salesmen, and there are plenty of other bigger openings for men who show real selling ability. We do not destroy the incentive of our men by bringing in highly-paid outsiders to get the bigger positions above them. We have man power because our men and ourselves have made it.

When the outsider wonders how Goldwyn has created such a powerful selling mechanism he is not in possession of this information, but we are glad to have our exhibitors know these things about us.

We operate under the mercantile slogans of "The exhibitor be pleased" and "The customer is nearly always right." This latter isn't always true, but you would be surprised to know how we benefit in good will by usually proceeding on this basis. One of the popular misconceptions of the industry is that the selling end is "a terrible business." Goldwyn does not feel that way—quite the contrary. It is a fine business and we have found thousands of exhibitors with money to spend just hungry for an organization to come along and play square with them; to sell them straight across the counter instead of trying to sell by chicanery and cunning.

The operation of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation is in the hands of its officers: President, Samuel Goldfish; vice presidents, Alfred Weiss, F. B. Warren and Harold Bolster. Each Goldwyn executive keeps in as close personal contact with the nation's exhibitors as active pairs of feet and ample railroad mileage will permit.

We have found that it pays to sell people by looking them in the eye.

What Goldwyn is Giving In Service

In Its Preparation of Exhibitor Advertising Material It Takes Large Account of Varying Individual Requirements.

The motion picture industry is a business of queer infatuation and self-delusions. One of the infatuations and self-deceptions of the moment is to be found in so-called service departments for the preparation of promotional aids for the exhibitors of the country. A year ago when Goldwyn was formed, the determination was reached to create an organization within an organization that would do a great deal without saying anything about it.

Today the service department of Goldwyn is in possession of thousands of cards containing written notations from exhibitors over their signatures saying: "Many thanks for this. * * * You helped me make a bigger success of my last picture than I could have made alone. ""This material is great. * * * I never get anything like it elsewhere." "When you sent your representative to my town he went out and did with my local people the things I ought to have done for myself, but which I hadn't the time to do. I cleaned up with the picture." "Have you ever lived in my town? You even gave me the names and addresses of the women and the organizations that jumped in and helped me make a sensational success with 'Joan of Plattsburg.'"

Use of the Word Publicity Is Shunned.

What in most other companies is loosely called the publicity department does not exist at all in Goldwyn. Use of the word publicity is shunned. There is an editorial office for the preparation of magazine and newspaper matter; press sheets and the written aids that are a part of showmanship; there is a sub-division of service equipped to give individual exhibitors personal service which does not mean the mere mailing to them of previously syndicated publicity matter. These two departments are a part of the sales organization. No man in these departments of Goldwyn has ever worked in the publicity department of any other motion picture organization. They have not been enslaved by the routine and methods which prevail in the industry. They have a fresh viewpoint—the exhibitors' viewpoint instead of the viewpoint of the company itself.

Nothing in the form of written matter that does not ultimately result in the sale of a ticket at the box-office of a theater is considered as possessing value by these men. Conclusive proof of the success of such an organization is found in the hearty indorsements of this branch of the Goldwyn organization.

Every Goldwyn manager and salesman in all of the offices of the company has so thoroughly absorbed the service methods of Goldwyn that its efficiency is multiplied by twenty, this representing the branch locations of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

During the coming season this work will be under the direction of Hunt Stromberg and Dwight S. Perrin, the latter the head of the Goldwyn editorial offices and in the brief period of a year the personal friend of hundreds of exhibitors from all sections of the country. Mr. Stromberg has been one of the owners of the Stromberg Company, advertising agents of St. Louis, and is brought into the organization coincident with this announcement because of the doubled output of productions to be made by Goldwyn in the coming season and to double the efficiency of the department. There are in this branch of the organization sub-divisions that deal separately with the daily newspapers, the magazines, the motion picture trade press and foreign publications in all languages. These sub-divisions are given to promotion matters in foreign countries where its pictures are distributed as an additional service for its foreign alliances.

Will Keep Months Ahead in Its Accessories.

Discounting well in advance a busy winter season, Goldwyn hereafter will keep months ahead in its accessory work, taking them down on the shelves of all branches from one to three months in advance of each release. This will give its offices the opportunity to ship to customers ahead of playing time and reduce disappointments through broken schedules that come during the winter months.

Goldwyn day after day and month after month lays emphasis upon its preparation of newspaper advertising material for the exhibitor. It not only will prepare but actually handle the advertising matter for its exhibitors in Missoula or Vancouver, in Fresno or Atlanta, the volume of this individualized service being greater than any outsider can manage. This gets away from syndicated advertising, which is likened to that which takes no account of different tastes in widely separated districts, and serves as the difference in the prevailing methods of typographical display as between the newspapers of one section of the country and another.

Going further than this, Goldwyn often introduces the exhibitor in Butte to an expert on one of his local Butte newspapers—a man who will bring a powerful selling conception to the aid of the exhibitor. Laying down on the exhibitor's desk a volume of available material does not end the Goldwyn interest. It is intensified at that point. Seeing that he uses it well; seeing that the local newspaper with which he spends his money helps him get the best values for his money—those are the more extended developments of Goldwyn service.

No exhibitor objects to spending money if he reaps a profit on his expenditure. Goldwyn's idea of service is to help him make a "good buy." Intrinsically when he purchases space in his local paper or papers he is making a good purchase, but virtually every newspaper of any consequence in the country at this time has likewise capitulated to "service." They can give this service because of the difference in the prevailing methods of typographical display as between the newspapers of one section of the country and another.

GOLDWYN DIRECTORS.

Goldwyn Exchanges Open to Good Pictures

Company Early Decided to Place Its Distribution Facilities at Disposal of Independents, with Satisfactory Results.

S HEETLY after the release of the first Goldwyn picture last September the Goldwyn organization decided to place its distribution facilities at the disposal of any independent producer of worthy pictures in America. Goldwyn felt then, as it feels now, that many persons would be glad to make good pictures if they felt that there was a good marketing organization in existence through which they could be released.

At that moment of its organization the so-called "state rights" market was shot to pieces, and men had reached the point where they hesitated about production investments because, even with good pictures, they were unable to anticipate the revenues to be obtained.

The first independent producers to avail themselves of the Goldwyn distribution were Ira M. Lowry and associates of Philadelphia, makers of "For the Freedom of the World," a patriotic picture of great appeal and drawing power. This production, after a skilled but quick campaign of exploitation, was released last October and has played in more than 4,000 theaters in the United States, with an additional large percentage of repeat playing dates. Taking its chances with weather and circumstances, "For the Freedom of the World" has established the unusual record of scoring a huge success for every exhibitor who has ever booked it. It deservedly takes rank as one of the big special release successes of the past few years.

Next Goldwyn arranged with the late Henry J. Brock for the distribution through its offices of Hall Caine's great story, "The Manx-Man," which has just completed a successful New York run at the Criterion theater. This production has been most successful for exhibitors and has done a splendid business for its owners by making use of the Goldwyn facilities.

Rex Beach's "Heart of the Sunset," released in the late spring of the present year, has rapidly duplicated the huge volume of business with and for exhibitors that previous Rex Beach productions have done; and at this moment, on the edge of summer, is doing week by week an increasing volume of business in all twenty of the Goldwyn distributing offices in the United States. So successful has been the Goldwyn distribution of this popular author's productions that he has in the coming season arranged to make six productions within the period of a year. These will be sold under the new Goldwyn star series policy.

Capitol Comedies Are Getting Along.

No star has ever been more fortunate in selecting the date of his entry into motion pictures than "Smiling Bill" Parsons, whose Capitol Comedies are released exclusively through Goldwyn. Mr. Parsons' friends literally drove him into being a comedian. He was a successful business man and producer of pictures who had never given a thought to becoming an actor-filmmaker. But suddenly he made two trial pictures which forecast for him instant success on the screen. The result of the experiment is twenty-six Capitol Comedies a year, one every second Monday. Capitol Comedies are playing in all of the big first-run houses in the principal cities of America and have gained a tremendous volume of business in the smaller theaters. To add to Mr. Parsons' good luck, other screen comedies were disconcontinued about the time he made his first release and exhibitors everywhere welcomed him as the successor of their previous fun-makers.

Three special Selkirk productions were taken on by the Goldwyn organization for distribution a few months ago, and they are rapidly gaining headway in sales over the summer, and unquestionably will duplicate the sales successes of other productions handled under the Goldwyn auspices.

For the coming season Goldwyn has enlarged the man-power of its sales organization and opened, besides, a twentieth branch office, New Orleans being the city selected for this development. All the facilities of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation are available to the owners and makers of any well-produced picture. Behind this actual sales service these independent producers can avail themselves of the usual publicity and sales exploitation resources of Goldwyn.

While no announcement is made now, Goldwyn will offer the exhibitors of the country additional special productions of great value and importance during the coming season.

Teamwork is the Aim of Goldwyn Personnel

At the Fort Lee Studios Workers Major and Minor Are Made to Feel Their Responsibility for the Success of Completed Product.

In co-ordination of effort lies the secret of success in the management of any enterprise enlisting the services of many people. This is especially true of the Goldwyn studios, where efficiency and harmony are allied with genuine artistic achievement. It is accomplished by means of a system very nearly perfect, and which bids fair to bring about ever better results with the beginning of Goldwyn's second year as a producing organization.

Manned and operated by men of ideals and achievements, the studio organization stands as an example of what may be done when all the forces concerned in the creation of motion pictures unite in upholding a definite standard.

At its Fort Lee plant, where all the productions are now made, the producing and technical departments are distinctively Goldwyn in personnel; men selected because their ideals and accomplishments represent the things Goldwyn desires for permanent association with its name.

Every worker is conscious of his intimate relation to the finished product, and when a production is completed everyone in the studio is made to feel that his endeavors have made possible whatever success attends the picture's reception by the public. The forces entering into a production are, of course, varied and the departments controlling them are managed by executives recognized as specialists.

The management of the Goldwyn studios is in the hands—and head—of Abraham Lehr, whose able generalship embraces every department, and whose presence at every conference is a necessary help to his colleagues, no less than his handling of the hundred and one questions which arise daily in the big studio.

His keen sense of human values forms a happy combination with his training in business efficiency, thereby enabling Mr. Lehr to achieve practical results with no sacrifice of the amenities. His work is closely related to that of Willard Mack, officially editorial director of Goldwyn, but in reality much more than the title implies.

To Mr. Mack falls the responsibility of selecting the stories intended for Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Frederick, Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh, Tom Moore and Mabel Normand, after which the various department heads confer jointly with Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, for final decision. Mr. Mack is concerned with every stage of production, and his work does not cease until a Goldwyn picture is released.

His auxiliary is the scenario department, of which H. R. Durant is editor. His functions include the supervision of all the work connected with receiving books, plays and stories submitted to Goldwyn as well as arranging for those purchased, together with the preparation of continuities, of which three are made by as many writers for each scenario.

Ballin's Work a Large Factor.

It has been said often that the striking note in Goldwyn pictures has been contributed by Hugo Ballin, the distinguished art director. His work begins with the first conference with the other department heads when a story is under discussion. For every scene he makes a separate sketch, employing a color scale of photographic values originated by himself. Directly under him are two buyers, or studio shoppers, who purchase everything required for the settings, while Edward Wortham, stage manager, superintends the work of his corps of assistants in building the scenes.

In direct contact with this department is Charles De Soria, electrical expert, and his fifteen aide. Every problem of lighting, as well as the devising of special effects as they are demanded from time to time, is handled by this very necessary department of Goldwyn production.

As director of photography, Percy Hilburn advises the cinematographers in regard to any difficulty which may come up during the course of a production and inspects the film as it comes from the laboratory. The still photograph department from which emanate the volume of scenes from the various productions, as well as special publicity photographs, is in charge of C. H. Detrick.

The inspection of the finished negative is continued by Emmett Flynn and Robert Kern, film editors, who have in mind not only the photographic quality to be maintained, but the continuity of the story. The work of Paul Bern, cutter of the negative, then follows, with every emphasis laid on the narrative, on preserving the dramatic units and bringing out the most appealing moments of the star. The titling comes next, in which Willard Mack's acute sense of dramatic values and individual sense of humor play a large part.

Other departments are the wardrobe room, the restaurant, and what is of paramount importance to the players who come and go, the treasury. Henry Eckman is the cashier and the details of transportation are looked after by Joseph Cohen.

E. K. Lincoln in New War Picture

Devotees of the screen who have watched the work of E. K. Lincoln in Goldwyn's "For the Freedom of the World," and saw his great impersonation of the artist in "The Beloved Traitor," a Mack Marsh Goldwyn production, will soon have the opportunity of seeing him in an especially timely picture when "Lafayette, We Come!" an elaborate patriotic production now being made by the Leonce Perret Productions is released. In this picture, Mr. Lincoln plays the part of a young American army officer in France, and enacts many a thrill.

The role is one which carries with it unusual requirements and in realizing this, the producers carefully scanned the field with a desire to obtain the one star who was best fitted to portray the heroic young American. E. K. Lincoln was finally selected as the personification of all the producers desired. He was then in California. The telegraphic wires were kept hot for a few days until the arrangements were concluded whereby he was to return to New York in which he will be ably assisted by talented Dolores Cassinelli, who is co-starred with him.

Mr. Lincoln confesses that he has never felt a keener interest in his work than he has in the making of this picture. There was something of a patriotic nature in the work that appealed to him, and made him feel that in his work he was doing his country a real service. With every picture Mr. Lincoln has added materially to his already large number of followers. There are several reasons why he has achieved and permanently retained such popularity. Of course, he has made friends on the merit of his acting ability alone, but his democratic spirit is well known, and perhaps more than one might think this has to do with the love the photoplay world bears for him. Lincoln is typically American, but there is nothing affected about him. He loves the big outdoors and all its invigorating sports. That is why he is so rugged and every inch a man.

KANE RUNS DOWN TO WASHINGTON.

General manager Arthur S. Kane of the Select Pictures Corporation started on July 3 for a short motor trip. His first objective was Philadelphia, where the Select executive was in conference with Max Milder, manager of Select's exchange in that city. After a couple of days smoothing out the problems of the Philadelphia territory Mr. Kane pointed his motor southward and drove to Washington, where a brief visit was paid to Manager V. P. Whitaker.

EDWARD L. WHITE ANSWERS CALL.

Another star was added to the service flag at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood when Edward L. White, assistant cameraman, responded to the call to take colors in the draft of June 24. It is expected White will be sent to Camp Kearney, at Linda Vista, near San Diego. He left with the best wishes of everybody at the studios, together with a wrist watch and a substantial sum of money, the gift of studio employees. White is the fifth to go from the mechanical force at the Hollywood studios.

Frank Mills, Metro Leading Man

Frank Mills, whose Metro has engaged as Edith Storey's leading man, has had a successful career. He was born in Kalamazoo, Mich., and educated at the University of Michigan. He began his stage career with the Lyceum Theater Stock Company, and from that beginning he held many successful engagements, among the productions of Charles Frohman, David Belasco, Daniel Frohman, Klaw & Erlanger, Lee Shubert, William A. Brady, and Henry B. Harris.

In London, where he remained for five years, he scored equally successful. He played successfully with Mr. Herbert Tree, Cyril Maude, Patrick Campbell, Lewis Waller, Lena Ashwell, and Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson. His Automotive to Mr. Herbert Tree's D'Aubigny in "The Three Musketeers," which ran in London for a year was a triumph. On this side of the water he was notable in his support, as was pointed out by Olga Nethersole, Elsie Ferguson, Mary Manuring, and Mrs. Fiske. Mr. Mills was a member of the company of "A Girl of To-day," the last production made under the personal management of Charles Frohman. The New York Motion Picture Corporation provided Mr. Mills with his screen debut in "The Golden Claw," in which he was starred. This was followed by "The Edge of the Abyss" and "The Moral Fabric." For the Vitagraph he played in "The Dollar and the Law," for the World "Who is Sylvia," and in "Lafayette, We Come!" for the United States Amusement Corporation; he played a prominent role with Mary Pickford in a Famous Players film, and also in "The House of Mirrors" and "The Flower of Faith."

With Metro, where he is one of its best known and most popular actors, his record of screen achievements includes prominent roles in "The Wheel of the Law," "The Eternal Mother," "A Sleeping Memory," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "Punishment," with Emily Stevens and directed by George D. Baker, and now as leading man with Edith Storey in her latest Metro feature, as yet unnamed.

EDWARD LAWRENCE ASSISTANT METRO DIRECTOR.

Metro has appointed Edward Lawrence as assistant to Herbert Blache in directing Edith Storey's picture, as yet unnamed. Mr. Lawrence, who is a New Yorker, began his professional career as a vaudeville accompanist and later bought the legitimate stage. In the "Three Twins," Mr. Lawrence was stage director as well as actor; in fact, he bears the distinctive record of fifteen years as a stage director.

His screen debut was as an actor, however, with Edison, remaining there ten years part of which he was studio manager. With Griffith he was at the Biograph as a principal in many of the former's well-known successes and also his assistant. He was the Hercules of "Intolerance."

STRAND COMEDY RAISES MONEY FOR "SMOKES."

Excellent results have been achieved through the recent tie-up between "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" and the one-reel Strand comedy, "My Lady Nicotine," released through the exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation. This production, which deals with the sending of "smokes" to the American soldiers now fighting in France, has been working industriously for the fund. The organization has been responsible for the shipment of 85,000,000 of cigarettes to our soldiers in the trenches and has in the treasury $236,000, the result of contributions received from the loyal in all parts of the country.
Screen Telegram Comes to New York

Mutual's News Reel Will Be Published from 1600 Broadway
Under Editorialship of Terry Ramsaye.

JAMES M. SHELDON, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, announces that Screen Telegram, Mutual's twice-a-week news reel, will be published hereafter from New York under the managing editorialship of Terry Ramsaye, director of publicity. Mr. Ramsaye has opened editorial offices adjoining the Mutual exchange at 1600 Broadway and has surrounded himself with an able staff. The first release from New York was Screen Telegram No. 36.

As associated with Mr. Ramsaye in the publication of the Mutual news reel will be Donn McLain, who has been on the editorial staff of Screen Telegram since its inception. He will be assistant editor. W. E. Harrison is New York camera man. Tracy Mathewson will cover outside assignments from New York, and Harold P. Brown will be Chicago cameraman.

Mr. Harrison is known as a New York newspaper photographer, having worked with the camera for most of the New York daily newspapers and has been associated with motion picture photography for several years as a studio and news photographer. Mr. Mathewson has a name as a capable and strapping cameraman. He secured the Irving PERSHING in Mexico and one of his first assignments was a trip to national army training camps. Ray L. Hall, who has been called to an important post with the division of films of the army, has left to save time in his work and is leaving in the organization of the New York headquarters of Screen Telegram.

"New York has become, under war conditions the world's most important motion picture center," Mr. Ramsaye said. "And Mr. W. B.臊olond in announcing the change of Screen Telegraph editorial offices to New York. "By maintaining a staff for special service to Western territories in Chicago, we feel that we can serve all of the theaters of the West as quickly as though the reel were edited in Chicago."

"By virtue of its arrangement with the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, Screen Telegraph will continue to present United States official war pictures showing on military and political activities abroad. Mr. Ramsaye has been selected to supervise the news weekly because of his particular training and talent in that direction. He is a newspaperman of long experience and his work as director of publicity of the Mutual has given him an insight into the necessities of an instruction motion picture exhibition. He has some very clearly defined ideas on the subject of news pictures which he will put into Screen Telegraph."

Mutual Brings Advertising Department to New York.

The publicity and advertising departments of the Mutual Film Corporation have moved into quarters adjoining the New York end of the Mutual exchange at 1600 Broadway. Both of the executive offices remain at 220 South State street, Chicago, where Mutual moved two years ago. The change was upon orders of James M. Sheldon, the new president of Mutual, who decided that Mutual should have an executive office in New York.

Mr. Ramsaye has been in New York for several weeks in connection with his new duties and he was joined last week by Colvin W. BROWN, advertising manager of Mutual, and Arthur James PEGLER, special publicity writer. Mr. Brown is a western newspaper man who has been associated with Mr. Ramsaye in the publicity department of Mutual for nearly two years. He was appointed advertising manager of Mutual a month ago. Mr. Pegler is a writer of national reputation who has for years been a star reporter on New York, Chicago and Minneapolis newspapers. He has been on Mr. Ramsaye's staff since the inception of the Mutual exchange, Mr. Joseph O'Sullivan, director of music service for Mutual, remains in Chicago where he will cue Mutual productions as in the past.

Parsons Makes Speech to Strand Audience

Tells Easterners Among Other Things How He Pushed Thrift Stamps on Western Porters.

MUCH to the amusement of audiences recently, "Smiling Bill" Parsons, star in the New Capitol Comedies, told several thousand persons at the Strand Theater, New York, Sunday, June 30, how he had happened to give up writing life insurance to become a funny man of the screen.

Parsons, who is here from California with his leading woman, Billie Rhodes, to make a couple of comedies with the Manhattan atmosphere that even a West Coast studio cannot simulate, was the guest of Managing Director Harold Edel of the Strand. He occupied a box and evidently had been expected to speak, for he was not thrown on him and an urbane announcer came out on the stage to say that Bill would say a few words to the audience the comedian appeared taken by surprise.

"Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking"—he began.

That was enough for one laugh, and it was a full minute before the comedian could resume.

"Unaccustomed as I am to public speaking," he reiterated, "I didn't study elocution at school for nothing. I've wanted for years to catch an audience where I could make a speech to them. With the result that this evening I find myself walking out without missing something better to come later. I need not remind you here that the next number on the program is 'Dad's Knockout,' starring me."

"Smiling Bill's" bald head bobbed and gleamed in the spotlight as thousands in the darkened house roared their approval of this deft bit of humorous advertising. Then the comedian turned for a moment from funny business to say a word for the Thrift Stamp campaign. He recalled that he had originated on the Pacific Coast the scheme for giving tips in the little green war coupons, and observed that porters and other recipients of the public bounty in his section of the country already had become reconciled to handing them in.

It is probable Parsons and his company will work in the Goldwyn studio at Fort Lee while they are here.

King Baggot to Play for Metro

Popular Actor Will Be Seen Opposite Emily Stevens in "Kildare of Storm."

KING BAGGOT has been engaged by Metro to play opposite Emily Stevens in "Kildare of Storm," which is to be directed by Harry L. AINSWORTH. Mr. Baggot was the director's first selection in making up Miss Stevens' support. Actual work on the production will be started immediately. Finis Fox and Peter T. Volkman will be Mr. Franklin's assistants.

This will be Mr. Baggot's initial picture for Metro, and the character of Kildare will afford this screen favorite one of the best opportunities in his career. King Baggot is a native of St. Louis. He began his stage career in his home city and later moved to New York and the road engagements in "Salomy Jane," "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and "The Bishop's Carriage." His screen career had begun with a walk in "The Imp," from which he joined the Universal. Among his best known pictures are "The Man from Nowhere," "The Silent Stranger," "The Captain of the Typhoon" and the "Boonton Affair." Mr. Baggot was the founder of the Screen Club, and is also a prominent member of the Lambs.

Mr. Baggot's most recent appearance before the camera was in "The Eagle's Eye," an expose of the intrigue and machinations of the German spy system in this country prior to and during the present world war, and in which he played no less a role than that of the great detective himself—Chief W. J. Flynn, former head of the United States Secret Service.

The new affiliation should be a pleasant and a profitable one for both parties.

Sailors Send Thanks to Adolph Zukor.

In the large mass of correspondence which daily reaches his desk Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, received a letter the other day which he considers highly attractive. The suggestion was made some time ago that the men on Uncle Sam's fighting ships and transports would appreciate the loans of motion picture films for their entertainment. Mr. Zukor was asked if the first test could be made in the result that hundreds of thousands of soldiers and sailors have been provided with Paramount and Artcraft features and shorter films, chiefly comedies, while on their way either to or from the shores of France. The letter in question was received from Commander Robert Henderson, U. S. N., in charge of one of the big American transports.

"With the returning of the reels you so kindly loaned us I wish to thank you for your most patriotic and truly helpful act," wrote the commander.
Edward Earl

President Nicholas Power Company, Inc.

T is a fortunate man,” he said, “who knows where he fits. Myself, I couldn’t make a speech on a public platform to save my life; and.” Here the interviewer interrupted with: “Yes, you are possessed of a very broad and extensive business experience and your remarkable executive ability enables you to direct affairs.”

To which may be added that, after all, nothing speaks so potently as character. And there you are.

“Close up” of Mr. Earl readily explains why he has been able within a few short years to write his name so indelibly on the history of motion picture industry. He is an executive manager, not an autocrat, and does not claim to know it all. Thus he has at the heads of his various departments trusted capable men to whom he outlines a policy, furnishing them with all necessary tools and ammunition, and delegating to them the proper authority necessary for the discharge of their duties.

In a business where there is so much of bluff and bluster and the “side” of the nouveau riche, it is refreshing to meet a man who at all times typifies democracy.

When you enter the busy plant at 90 Gold street and ask for the “chief,” you are not held up by an argus-eyed office boy and made to tell the story of your life. If you have a card it is sent in; if not, your name; and usually Mr. Earl comes out to extend a personal greeting. Once in his private office, you are made to realize that you are talking to a man who believes you to be his equal, no matter what your station, so that you be honest. Edward Earl is an apostle of the square deal.

He enjoys a good story and likes to tell one. Ask him how he started in life and he will tell you that he had no opportunities at all but began as a bare-footed boy.

As a matter of fact he began life in the sweatshops and the usual opportunities of the average American boy. His ancestry is American on both sides for many generations and the patriotic pulse beats strong with him.

He was born in Elizabeth, New Jersey, less than fifty years ago, and was educated in the public schools there. When about seventeen years of age he struck out for himself and entered the employ of one of the prominent banks of New York.

Twenty-one years later he became its president.

Mr. Earl’s rise has been meteoric. He has carried many a man with him. He became associated with the Nicholas Power Company as treasurer in 1908, and was elected president in 1917.

He has many business iron in the fire, but he applies himself very closely to the affairs of the Nicholas Power Company.

This in brief is a sketch of a man who believes in service and in serving. He is a splendid leader because he inspires his men with confidence—and something more. And the moral fibre is pronounced in him. A case in point:

Once his cashier came to him greatly worried because his cash was one hundred dollars short. “Good,” said Mr. Earl, “I’m glad to know it.” “But,” said the cashier, “you don’t understand, Mr. Earl, my cash is short, not used up, a zero; how can you be glad?” “I’m glad,” replied Mr. Earl, “because you had the moral courage to come and tell me; go home and forget it; you’ll find it all right,” and he did.

If one were to seek a reason for the success of Edward Earl one need go no farther than to quote the man.

“Have confidence in yourself, but be sure to give the other fellow plenty of reason for sharing your confidence. In getting along in life, push is much better than pull.”

It is this characteristic that has put Edward Earl where he is today, and has made it possible for him to command the credit and respect and the confidence of those with whom he comes in contact. And by those whom he knows well he is liked because he is a likable man.

“Dick” Edmondson Due Here This Week

European Representative of Goldwyn Coming to New York To Confer on Company Business.

R. S. EDMONDSON, European representative of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and one of the best known men in the motion picture industry, will arrive in New York this week for his annual conference with Samuel Goldfish and the Goldwyn executives.

Goldwyn, being organized and its distribution being perfected in the United Kingdom, will, in its second season, have its man in all with whom he comes abroad as it had in its first twelve months. It was therefore deemed expedient, in spite of the difficulties of war-time travel, to have its principal foreign representative come over for a home office conference.

The Stoll Film Company, bearing the name of Oswald Stoll, a big amusement magnate, and under the managing direction of Jeffrey Berner, is the British distributor of Goldwyn Pictures through an agreement with Mr. Edmondson. Trade showings of Goldwyn Pictures have been held in England and much enthusiasm was created for the Goldwyn product. The first release in England, through the decision of Messrs. Stoll and Berner, it Mary Garden in "Thais," to be followed by Mae Marsh in "Polly of the Circus," Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg" and Made Kennedy in "The Service Star.

"No productions brought into Great Britain in years have received such a gratifying welcome as the Goldwyn Pictures," writes Mr. Edmondson on the eve of his departure.

Their first showing followed a campaign of introduction conducted from the home offices of Goldwyn in the principal trade journals of the empire. This has been described as the most distinctive campaign ever made to challenge the attention of British film-renters. It departed from the customary methods of cinema exploitation and was pitched to the English living in the midst of English entertainment. The campaign was invested with a dignity and tone that the productions themselves lacked upon their arrival here.

Submarines Have Sunk No Fox Films

All Foreign Exchanges Report They Have Received Their Consignments in Good Time.

The first anniversary of the landing of American troops in France received no foreign comment from the Fox Film Corporation that despite all the perils of ocean traffic across the Atlantic not a single Fox film has yet fallen prey to the German marauders of the deep. Exchanges in England, Spain and South America all have reported that their shipments have arrived on time and in good condition.

Considerable difficulty has been experienced by the Fox foreign department in getting its films shipped promptly, but the department is taking every precaution to keep brisk business all over the world far enough in advance in their shipments to take care of any emergency.

The foreign department of the Fox corporation, by the way, recently was obliged to enlarge its office space at 130 West Sixty-sixth Street. This was necessitated by the overcrowded condition of the executive offices leading off from a beautifully furnished reception room.

This enlargement has been made compulsory by the great increase in the corporation’s trade abroad. In addition to the flourishing trade already established in Africa, Australia and various countries of Europe, special drives are now under way in South America and the Far East.

Lounge Lizards Get Chance to Work.

The Fort Lee Ferry, which runs from New York to Fort Lee, certainly paid dividends on the crowds it carried last Monday afternoon when the motion picture law went into effect. Having heard that motion pictures were considered by the authorities essential industries a large portion of the lounge lizards and other idlers of New York City did a "hot step" for the world studio seeking jobs. It happened that a mob scene was needed for "The Road to France," so it turned out that it was an ill wind that blows no good.
Goldwyn Holds Conference on Wire

GOLDWYN'S series of zone conventions with its branch managers and salesmen, held last week in New York, Chicago and Cleveland, was brought to a novel close July 21 by a telephone conference between the home office and four branch managers in the far west and on the Pacific Coast. A Goldwyn executive in New York spoke the company's selling message for the year beginning in September into the telephones connected with the offices in Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle and the branch managers in those cities listened simultaneously by means of a "looped" wire.

After the selling policy for the year had been outlined over the wire, the managers asked questions and for nearly an hour a joint discussion was carried on. Sometimes the home office executive talked, sometimes one manager talked to another, while the others, and office managers, in Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco, and W. S. Rand, in Denver, each echoed his approval.

The expense incurred was, of course, considerable, but negligible compared to the expenditure that would have been involved if the home office executive had had to go to the coast and had the other managers to travel from the offices to San Francisco.

Changes in First National of Oklahoma

Tom Boland Buys Substantial Interest and Will Devote Much Time to Circuit's Affairs.

A COMMUNICATION from E. H. Hulsey, president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Texas, announces that important changes have taken place in the executive staff of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Oklahoma.

Mr. H. Boland, one of the proprietors and manager of the Empress, the largest theater in Oklahoma City, has purchased a substantial interest in the circuit and has been elected president of the Oklahoma corporation. Mr. Boland will in future devote the major portion of his time to First National affairs, and those familiar with his capabilities declare that under his direction the Oklahoma exchange should show a prompt and unmistakable increase in efficiency.

Jack Brainerd, formerly branch manager for Mutual, has been appointed local manager of the Oklahoma circuit under Mr. Boland's new organization.

T. E. Larson, who formerly represented the Hulsey interest in Oklahoma, is no longer connected with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Colonel Brady to Write for Metro

Soldier and Author Will Fill an Important Position in Scenario Department of Producing Company.

THE Metro Pictures Corporation has secured Colonel Jasper Ewing Brady to fill an important position in that company's scenario department. Colonel Brady brings to his office the fruits of a career rich in experience as a United States military officer, a member of the secret service staff, a newspaper man and an expert traveler, and an active writer in the latest phase of the motion picture field.

Colonel Brady is averse to giving his age because it will take him, says a sworn birth certificate to make one believe he is beyond the age the Government will allow officers to serve in the army during the present war.

Colonel Brady was for years connected with the Vita-graph as manager of the scenario department, and for a year prior to joining the Metro forces was editor of the Universal in California. He has but lately returned from the east, where he is an active book hunter for California. He is an author of note, as well as a playwright. "Tales of the Telegraph," "On Secret Service" and "The Case of Mary Sherman" are three published books from his pen, and "Honor, Faith and a Good Intent" is a new novel for publication this fall.

Success Still Attends Petrova Tour

Actress in Journey Through South Continues to Roll Up Pledges for Savings Stamps.

MME. OLGGA PETROVA'S personal appearance tour on behalf of the Government's thrift stamp campaign, during which she has appeared in theaters of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is continuing with success. During the last week of June Mme. Petrova appeared in Atlanta, New Orleans, Houston, Dallas and Fort Worth.

At Atlanta, where she made her first appearance before southern audiences, she was greeted by the largest crowd that the Forsyth theater of that city has held during the year. At the matinee and evening performances on June 22 she obtained pledges from purchasers of thrift stamps totaling $24,499.

During her visit to New Orleans Mme. Petrova secured pledges for the purchase of $42,000 worth of thrift stamps. She appeared there at the Strand theater which is controlled by E. V. Richards, Jr., one of the prominent members of the circuit.

After a brief stop at Houston, where she disposed of $5,500 worth of stamps, Mme. Petrova arrived in Dallas June 27. She appeared at the Old Mill theater in that city during the afternoon and evening and persuaded several hundred of her admirers to pledge themselves to the purchase of over $1,000 worth of stamps.

Her visit to Fort Worth on the following day was marked by two of the most successful meetings of her entire tour. During her two appearances at the Hippodrome theater the adding machines used by the managers registered $2,100 worth of pledges. In proportion to the size of the community this amount adds up to some figure on record in localities visited by Mme. Petrova.

The Polish actress is using both argument and song to open the purses of the patriots in her various audiences.

Mme. Petrova will continue her tour to the Pacific Coast, visiting all of the large theaters in the First National Exhibitors' Circuit during the course of the next six or seven weeks.

World Pictures Seeking New Talent

Company Plans, When Away from Home, to Give Opportunity at Studio to Promising Aspirants.

WILMINGTON, N. C., is all excited these days. A moving picture company is in town. The World Pictures Department of Los Angeles has sent there Oscar Apfel to direct Mantagu Love with a cast of a dozen or more, including Dorothy Green. The picture to be made is "Pirate's Gold," by Forest Halsey. The scenario of this photoplay is laid in the famous cyprus swamps, which are adjacent to Wilmington. In making the picture it will be necessary to use a large cast, and the World corporation is going to utilize local talent. Mr. Apfel, on arriving in Wilmington, interviewed nearly a hundred of the women of the town, and from this aggregation he will make his selection. This will be the beginning of the plan the World has decided upon to discover and develop talent. If Mr. Apfel finds in his work that any of these candidates are especially gifted he will be in the assurance of World Pictures that the best of them will be brought to New York and given steady employment. In the future whenever World Pictures are to be made outside of New York only the ablest and best will be taken along and local talent will be depend upon for the small parts. In this way World Pictures hopes to secure material that they can develop into possible future "greats."

UNIVERSAL MAKES CHANGES IN SEATTLE.

Changes in the managerial and booking berths at the Seattle exchange, have been made by Joe Brandt, treasurer of Universal. W. F. S. Lundy, well known as a prominent Cleveland representative of the company, has been appointed manager of the Seattle branch of Universal. Mr. Rubin of Portland, former booker with Paramount, has accepted the position of booker in the same office.
Maine Exhibitors Choose Delegates

Also Hold Annual Election of Officers, at Which A. S. Black Again is Made President.

THE annual meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League of Maine was held at the Elmwood Hotel, Waterville, July 2, with twenty members present. The meeting was held for the purpose of choosing delegates to the national convention which is to be held in Boston and also to discuss matters for the future good of the organization. This was the sixth meeting since the organization in June, 1917. The officers elected were:

President, A. S. Black, Rockland; secretary, J. M. Goodwin, Hallowell; treasurer, S. Hanson of Camden. The delegates elected to attend the national convention were W. B. Williamson, Augusta; A. S. Black, Rockland; J. M. Goodwin, Hallowell; S. Hanson, Camden; S. W. Wing, Fairfield; J. F. Eugley, Waterville. The alternates were H. Stitham, Pittsfield; W. B. Gray, Lewiston; W. E. Reeves, Portland; P. P. Peakes, Milo, and G. P. Churchill, Fort Fairfield.

St. Louis After Next Year’s Convention

League and Chamber of Commerce Will Send Boosters to Boston Session.

ST. LOUIS will send a delegation of more than thirty exhibitors to Boston to the National Convention to plead for the holding of the 1919 convention in St. Louis. The film men will be led by Joseph Mogler, president of the Missouri Exhibitors’ League and the St. Louis organization, and by Manager Louis Stephens of the Muniafa Theater, secretary of the League. The delegation will represent at least twenty towns in the State and will hold proxies for at least forty others.

The Chamber of Commerce of St. Louis has also agreed to send at least two delegates with the motion picture men to make a plea for St. Louis in the convention city bidding and the St. Louis Convention Bureau will also send a delegate to the work of seeking the convention.

The St. Louis delegation has selected the Copley-Plaza Hotel as headquarters in Boston and will make a strenuous fight for the next meeting.

Would Prohibit Theater Opening Before 6.30

Report That Governor of Idaho Threatens Such a Measure Strikes Exhibitors.

HERMAN J. BROWN, theatrical man controlling houses in Boise, and also president of the Idaho State Exhibitors’ League, calling at the Universal Salt Lake office recently, said that there is a big fight now on to head off a measure which threatens to put a serious handicap on the exhibitors of Idaho.

Governor Alexander threatens a measure to prohibit the opening of any theaters in the state before 6:30 p.m. during the war. All members of the exhibitors league, recently meeting at Pocatello, went on record as strongly opposed to such a measure, which they deem as emphatically unjust.

Before leaving for home Mr. Brown was assured by Gus Hager, manager of the Universal exchange, that his organization would be glad to give the Idaho Exhibitors’ League all the co-operation possible in their effort to head off its passage.

A. B. Hager, manager of the Rex Theater, Idaho Falls, Idaho, was elected secretary of the league at the Pocatello meeting.

NEW JERSEY LEAGUE ELECTS DELEGATES.

At a meeting of the New Jersey branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League, held in Newark on June 28, the convention delegates to present that held at the Boston convention were elected: Dr. Charles Hespe, John G. Crawford, Walter H. Meier, John Collins, Louis H. Blumenthal, H. H. Wallenbrech. The president was authorized to select two others to complete the delegation. The members present adopted resolutions opposing increased admissions and the foot tax. The meeting also declared in favor of the National League taking charge of all Liberty Loan, Red Cross and other drives so that the Government and the public may see what the industry is doing.

Rolfe Re-enters Manufacturing Field

Will Make Eight Special Features a Year, But First Will Produce Serial With Houdini.

T has been known for some time that H. A. Rolfe, long a producer of motion pictures, had disposed of his various cinema connections and intended re-entering the field of screen drama at the head of a new company. Further speculation is set at rest by Mr. Rolfe’s first authentic intimation to the public and the trade of his future plans.

“I have formed what will be known as Rolfe Productions, Inc., to produce only high-class pictures, and these only with established stars who are among the best in the industry,” said Mr. Rolfe. “We propose making eight of these super-specials a year, and will offer several new policies in their manufacture and distribution that I believe will have a most positive appeal. “But preceding the making of these special features we will engage in the making of a serial exploiting Houdini, an announcement that should prove of special interest to the industry and the public. I intend devoting all of my personal attention to the production of this important serial, which, I believe, will be an epoch-making one. “The authors of the Houdini serial are leaders in the world of scenario writers. They are Arthur B. Reeve and Charles A. Logue, both of whom have to their credit such serial successes as ‘The House of Fear,’ ‘The Clutching Hand,’ ‘Exploits of Elaine,’ etc. There will be ten episodes, and work will begin about July 15. I cannot announce the complete cast yet, but it will be a notable one.

“For the first special feature Miss Florence Reed has been signed. We intend completing the serial and the first special in the East. After that the company will move to California, where the winter will be devoted to other features.”

St. Louis Distributors Get Together
Form Body for "Protection and Advancement"—Interests Situation Among the Larger Theaters.

A

organization of distributors is a reality in St. Louis. Stark and President of the St. Louis distributor’s league of distributors has been formed for protection and advancement. The St. Louis film managers have formed a St. Louis Film Board of Trade and are now preparing for concerted action on a wide scale. Just what the board will mean is now being earnestly watched by the Exhibitors’ League, but film distributors promise that the ultimate result will be "good for both sides."

The Film Board of Trade was formed during the week at a meeting of nearly all the managers in the district. It followed a visit here of Jack Woody, district representative of Select, who, while he did nothing to put the organization in actual motion, told the distributors a whole lot about the organization in Seattle.

The president of the Film Board of Trade is Eddie Dustin, who represents Pathe in St. Louis. Dustin has had wide distribution experience, having been formerly with Select and previous to that with a number of other concerns, each step in his career having been an advancement. Dustin promises that the purposes of the new organization will be those of self-interest, justice and self-development, and will bear none of the earmarks of combination in a trade way. Dustin is considered an able hand for such an organization.

W. T. Sievers, manager of the New Grand Central theater, and St. Louis and Missouri representative and agent for the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit, is vice-president of the board. Sievers, too, enjoys the confidence of factional parties alike. He combines the dual role of exhibitor and distributor, which, while a novel combination, seems to work out satisfactorily. In selecting Sievers for vice-president the film managers are credited with having cemented the possibility of getting from the board the assistance of exhibitors. Manager Boswell of the Vitagraph office is secretary and treasurer. Boswell, like the two others, has had wide experience in the selling end and has also been free from alliances during the periods of certain bitter competition.

The board selected Ray Weinbrenner as general counsel. Weinbrenner is a young lawyer, who has held the post of assistant prosecuting attorney for several years in St. Louis, and is a Republican of considerable power in city politics. He is drawing up the incorporation papers.

A film man in close touch with the organization said the matter of "collection" was about as important a consideration as the impetus of the organization as any. He explained that for years there has been necessity in this district of some action in the case of delinquents, especially in the "C. O. D." business. The peculiar nature of the district is responsible for this to a great extent, the fluctuation a great fear to business at out-state houses being one of the disturbing factors.

Competition on First Runs Is Stiffening.

A very unusual situation exists here and one that bids fair to become more unusual when the fall and winter season opens. There are at present virtually only three first-run houses in St. Louis. The New Grand Central is on the Goldwyn program. The West End Lyric and the Downtown Lyric are also first runs, the Paramount-Artcraft program being at the west end house.

But Fox has no first-run house. Manager Thomas has completed arrangements for the opening of the Victoria theater on Delmar Boulevard, just west of Grand Avenue. This house is within walking distance of the Grand Central, the largest house in the city, and the competition is expected to be keen when the Fox house opens. It is persistently stated that Paramount also will open a St. Louis house, although nothing definite can be obtained from the local management. Should Paramount and Fox open this fall in the neighborhood of Grand avenue the situation would be most interesting. Especially is this true in view of the fact that the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit, together with the New Grand Central, is promising an extensive program for about October or November. Goldwyn, of course, would also do its best to aid the New Grand Central in the film battle. Sievers until recently used the Paramount-Artcraft program, but was unable to get a divisional first-run right with the West End Lyric on the big pictures. He then turned to Goldwyn, and has done well.

The most interesting thing about the fall prospect is the Cella-Tate string of theaters. The two largest of these theaters are the Park and Shenandoah. There are eight others, all of first-run possibility and all very high-class houses, two of them—the Columbia and Grand Opera House—being in the downtown district.

The contracting and booking for the Cella-Tate string of theaters has been under the supervision of David Russell of the Park. Russell some time ago took over the Triangle program and used it at the Park, King’s and Shenandoah. The King’s is probably the most exclusive house in the city. Three weeks ago Russell closed his big houses for the summer and discontinued his contract with the Triangle.

That puts these big houses in the field for pictures for next season. The houses are all money-makers, and there will be strong bids for them. Russell says he will "pick up" the best that the distributors have. Russell will open his houses about August 1.

Dobbs Takes Over Laboratory
General Manager of Palisade Laboratories Company Ready to Begin Work in Ridgefield Plant.

GEORGE C. DOBBS, vice-president and general manager of the Palisade Film Laboratories, Inc., announces that the working forces have taken possession of the new steel and concrete building situated at Lafayette avenue and Bergen Boulevard, Ridgefield, N. J., a short distance from the 13th street ferry, on the Jersey side.

"Our new home is the largest building in the country devoted exclusively to a laboratory," says Mr. Dobbs, "and consists of three floors, totaling 12,000 square feet of space. The departments are laid out in sequence so that the film progresses in its various stages of development and takes no backward movement.

"Everything in the plant is the most modern and up to date, and elaborate arrangements have been taken to care for the comfort of our employees and outside directors and cameramen who may desire to project and cut film. The building is strictly fireproof, and large vaults, complying with fire insurance regulations, will protect the film.

"The capacity of the plant is two million feet a week, though I do not propose to handle more than half that amount, which will enable me to give my personal attention to all work in the same manner I did at the Triangle laboratories.

"I will turn out at least as good film as I have in the past, for, while it is a new plant, with new equipment and everything spick and span, I have a lot of my old employees, some of whom have been with me for four or five years.

"The location is an ideal one for a laboratory—on top of the Palisades, several hundred feet higher than New York, where there is very little humidity in the atmosphere."
A Message from Griffith

Master Director Congratulates Producers and Exhibitors on the Realization of Their Dreams.

IT WAS some ten years ago that many of us began working in the service line of motion pictures. I know that many of you must often dream back to the old days, for this is common to all humanity, to dream back. It is also the truth that time remembered is grief forgotten. And again, perhaps, they were really very pleasant days.

How little we pioneers knew or dreamed to what great heights our little business of then was to grow? When we first talked even, seven years ago, of Rocky the picture that would run like a play for a full evening's entertainment at regular theatrical prices, it is considered a great joke. A few years before that it would have been equally as great a joke to have placed in the magnificent temples of art and delight you exhibitors have now given to the service of the people.

But we, the producers, and you, the exhibitors, had our little dreams. Your dreams have come true in many ways—but the little shrine at the gate where the people worship at the art and beauty of one of the greatest of the arts, and of the history of man. It would be absurd to claim personal credit for this—we merely happened to strike one of the millions of notes ready to be played on the organ of the moving pictures—not your business and mine now, but the great world's.

I am glad to come back to you again with some short subjects. Not having made a failure in these special pictures, but having another success which, so far, is rivaled by The Birth of a Nation—"The Hearts of the World," which, as you well know, has played at top prices in many places with more extraordinary success than even "The Birth of a Nation."

But we do not have to take pictures into first class theatres to get back a just representation, because the moving picture theatres are now, since your dreams are realized, more beautiful than any theaters that have ever been built.

Also believe that the story of the human heart can be told with the fewest as well as with the most. I do not intend to make you any exaggerated promise as to what we shall do. I am working night and day as in the old halls and rooms at the Biograph to try to catch a little of the tears and laughter, the joys and sorrows, of humanity, and to pray that I may bring to you some of the flavor that you were gracious enough to like a little in the old Biograph days.

Most sincerely and gratefully yours,

D. W. Griffith.

"Shoulder Arms!" Is Chaplin's Next

It Is Designed for Entertainment of Soldiers and Their Families—Comedian Finds Possibilities in Grenades.

The secret is out. Charlie Chaplin's second picture to be made under his contract with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is to be a military subject, and will be entitled "Shoulder Arms!" It will probably be released early in August.

The comedian decided during his recent Liberty Loan tour to make a picture primarily for the amusement of the boys in khaki and their friends and families. Those who have had the benefit of the scenes already filmed declare that they represent the last word in comic novelty. Chaplin is said to be as expert in the manipulation of a hand grenade as a trench veteran, although the effects he secures with his old mug, are extraordinarily different from the accepted military kind.

Corporal O. W. De Varila, who fired the first shot in France for the United States artillery, and who is now in this country on furlough, has recently visited the Chaplin studios to give his friend Charlie some first-hand pointers on life as it is actually lived in dugout, trench and camp. There is a possibility that De Varila may himself appear in some of the scenes.

Clarke Appointed Division Director

Rochester Man Engaged by Community Bureau, Which Distributes Film Among Soldiers and Sailors.

SIDNEY R. CLARKE, former secretary of the Rochester Chamber of Commerce, has been appointed a division director for service in France by the Community Motion Picture Bureau, which supplies the war film here and abroad. Previous to his Rochester chamber he was secretary of the San Jose (Cal.) Chamber of Commerce at the time of the great earthquake.

The Community Motion Picture Bureau, which operates under the War Industries Board of the Y. M. C. A., carries out what is probably the largest individual undertaking in the film business today. It is under the direction of the Government's agencies, which is directly represented by the Commission on Training Camp Activities of the War and Navy Department.

The Community Motion Picture Bureau is distributing something like seven million feet of film a week, all selected for the camps and cantonments and military posts in this country and abroad. About three million additional feet are circulated weekly on the transports and battleships. About two million feet are supplied weekly to the camps in France, and arrangements are being made to extend this service to England and Italy.

The service in France requires the highest type of men, preferably those who have been engaged in work that fits for the great social work of the Y. M. C. A.

The foreign service is being represented by Warren Dunham Foster, president of the bureau, and includes mechanics, skilled transport men and others capable of organizing and directing the work of a division covering a large amount of territory and many thousands of troops.

WILLIAM BITTNER, VETERAN ACTOR, DIES.

Very suddenly, in his rooms at the Hotel St. Margaret, in New York, William Bittner died, July 5, as a result of hemorrhage. He was fifty-two years old. His widow and two daughters survive him. Mr. Bittner entertained friends who called upon him the evening before he died, and he was in very good health up to 8 o'clock in the morning when he suddenly passed away.

Mr. Bittner was an actor of wide experience on the dramatic stage, and at one time managed his own repertory company. The latter years of his life he was in the employ of a large theatrical company.

A delegation from the Green Room Club, of which organization he was a popular member, attended funeral services at St. Chrysostom's Chapel, and the burial was at Evergreen Cemetery under the auspices of the Actors' Fund.

ATLAS TO RELEASE COMEDIES IN THE FALL.

Miss Ida Harrison, representing the Atlas Film Corporation of Boston, was a visitor in New York the past week. Miss Harrison, who is on the ladies' committee for the Boston Atlanta exposition, says that early in the fall the "Kiddie Comedies," which it has been making. Quite a number of these comedies have been privately shown, and the producers have received substantial encouragement to continue in their making. Frank J. Higbard, the veteran New England film manager, is president of Atlas, and Leon E. Dadmun is vice-president and general manager.

WALTER E. STRADLING, CAMERAMAN, IS DEAD.

The death of Walter E. Stradling at the Polyclinic Hospital, July 6 brought to an end twelve years of service as a camera operator. Walter Stradling, who has been in the making of many of the veteran New York producing companies, kept the crane for many screen celebrities, of whom Mary Pickford was the most conspicuous. His brother is manager of the Broadway theater, Yonkers. The funeral services were conducted at Campbell's Funeral Church. Deceased was thirty-nine years old.
American to Release Through Pathe

Announcement Is Made That Twenty-Four Feature Pictures Will Be Distributed

THE American Film Company, for years one of the most prominent of producing companies, announces that arrangements have been made with Pathe for release through the Pathe exchange of a minimum of twenty-four feature pictures during the next year. The facts reveal a distinct departure from any method of distribution used by any other producing company. The new contracts have been signed by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, and The American Film Company. The thirty Pathe branches in the United States that the firm now controls must be given the Committee on Public Information and the Division of Films in placing this weekly feature in center in city, town and village in the country.

"Wide distribution is the paramount object," declared Mr. Brunet. "The placing of the Government films before the greatest number of people is the Government's desire and Pathe is to serve. Exclusive runs and consideration of regular customers must all be subordinated to the matter of distribution. In fact, it is vitally necessary to obtain this important wide distribution."

Mr. Brunet said that under no circumstances shall Pathe managers accept excessive rentals for the Allies' Official War Review film, "Bear in mind," he said, "that we have promised Mr. Hart, director of the Division of Films, that every Pathe employee will loyally co-operate with a great endeavor to have the best Official War Review shown in every motion picture theater in America."

Charles S. Hart, director of the Division of Films, said to a reporter for the World, during an interview at the division headquarters in the Times Building, that the subject of rates and matters of distribution may possibly be revised in some particulars very shortly. There will be a meeting at Mr. Hart's office on the subject of representatives, and then the entire matter will be thoroughly canvassed.

It is Mr. Hart's purpose to have this delegation of showmen represent all classes of theaters where pictures are exhibited. It may be in the interest of the Allied nations to have the representatives of Pathe distributed over the entire United States activities shall be shown upon screens abroad as well as at home. Our soldiers over there must know what we are doing here. The general public in allied nations must be kept sustained in morale by photographic proof that the war for democracy will be won.

These considerations will enter into whatever decision shall be made concerning the cost of Government pictures to exhibitors.

Picture Men Reported Working for Lewis

Said to Be Backing New York Attorney-General's Campaign Against Whitman

T has come to light in Rochester that motion picture men throughout New York State have been quietly working in the interests of Merton E. Lewis, of Rochester, candidate in the Republican primaries for the nomination for governor of New York State. In the first place it is understood Mr. Lewis is an ardent picture fan. In the second place those exhibitors who were at Albany in the interests of the bill legalizing the opening of moving picture theaters on Sundays will say that they received at the hands of Governor Whitman a quiet talk with theater men throughout the western end of New York State discloses the fact that they are working for Mr. Lewis to a man. They are exhibiting considerable friendliness for the attorney-general, and express the belief that if he is nominated and elected to the gubernatorial office he can be depended upon to further the interests of the exhibitor in all that may be to his advantage.
Official Convention Proclamation

New York, July 5, 1918.

To the Members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League of America:

The forthcoming annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors’ League of America will be called to order in Meade's Hall, Boston, on Tuesday, July 16, 1918. The convention will remain in session on the two succeeding days, July 17 and 18. In accordance with the by-laws of the League, the Executive committee will be called together on July 15.

The opening day of the convention proper, Tuesday, July 16, will be devoted to the appointment of committees and the hearing of the reports of officers of the League. On Thursday, July 17, the records of the committees will be read, and new business transacted.

On Thursday, July 18, unfinished business will be taken up, and the election of officers will be held.

L.E. A. OCHS, President.

Maryland Exhibitors Must Submit Paper

State Censor Board Declares Some of the Posters and Photographs Have Been Misleading.

THE Maryland Censor Board has sent a letter to all film exchange managers releasing pictures to the effect that hereafter they must submit to the Board for examination before used, all paper and photographs employed in advertising features. The letter does not specify what is the minimum length of the features to which the ruling applies, nor does it state what is the criterion the board will use in making its decisions, although the board has stated that hereafter they must submit to the board for examination before used, all paper and photographs employed in advertising features.

The ruling of the Board provides that all paper and photographs left at the offices of the Censor Board will be examined and held for twenty-four hours, at the expiration of which time, if not called for, it will be destroyed.

MRS. SPOOR PRESENTS FLAG TO ESSANAY UNIT.

Mrs. George K. Spoor, wife of the president of Essanay, presented Unit 380, Illinois Volunteer Training Corps, with a large silk flag at a military ceremony at the Essanay studios Friday, June 21. The flag was made at West Point of heavy silk, with hand embroidered stars. It was accepted for the company by Capt. Richard N. Woodman.

Although the company is officially enrolled in the state organization as Unit 380, it is known generally as the Essanay unit. George K. Spoor having supplied the company with guns as well as 17 of the 43 members of the company, with 17 members of the corps have been established in the state organization as Unit 380.

The purpose of the organization is to both train younger men for service in the army and to form a nucleus of older men for service in the state.

The same week an entertainment was given by the auxiliary of the unit of which Mrs. Spoor is president. Two thousand dollars was raised to pay for the uniforms of the company.

IRENE CASTLE MAY GO ABROAD.

Two new Pathé plays, in which Irene Castle stars, are announced by Pathé for release this summer. These are the last plays in which Mrs. Castle will appear for a long time, it is believed. She is said to have decided to give her services as an entertainer in the Y. M. C. A. huts in France, probably for the remainder of the year.

Her picture, "First Law," in which Antonio Moreno is her leading man, will be released on the program of July 28. Gislon Willets wrote "The First Law" and it affords Mrs. Castle a splendid opportunity for legitimate acting.

She says she means to do with the proceeds of a young woman in studio life in New York, will be released on the program of August 25.

SOLE "UNCLE TOM" SURVIVOR TO BE GUEST.

Mrs. Cordelia Howard MacDonald, who as Cordelia Howard starred in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," in the original production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the first performance of which was given at Troy, N. Y., in the year 1852, has been invited by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to be the guest of honor at the initial screen presentation of Harriet Beecher Stowe’s story in Boston, the Paramount production starring Marguerite Clark being set for release July 15. Mrs. MacDonald resides at 22 Putnam avenue, Cambridge, and is the only member of the original "Uncle Tom's" cast still living.

SIMPLEX EMPLOYEES TO HOLD OUTING.

The annual outing of the employees of the Simplex Company, 317 East Thirty-fourth street, New York, will be held at Belvidere Park, North Beach, near Long Island City, on Saturday, July 13. The outing last year was held at the same place. Over two hundred employees will attend the event. They will assemble at the Simplex building at 9 A. M. and march to the Long Island Ferry at 34th street to the accompaniment of a band. Several cars will convey the guests from Long Island City direct to the park. A flag with thirty stars will be raised in honor of the Simplex employees who are now in military service.

LASKY FOLKS AT HOME FUND.

Approximately $9,000 was realized from the recent carnival and dance held at the big Lasky studio at Hollywood for the benefit of the Folks at Home Fund of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation West Coast studios. This sum will be devoted to the care of the men of the studios who are now in the service of the United States and the dependents they have left behind. Although for several weeks the committees in charge of the big event had worked with the hope of raising quite as much money as the earlier proceeds of the affair, even their most sanguine hopes were exceeded in the actual result.

MUTUAL'S PRESS DEPARTMENT IN NEW YORK.

Terry Ramsaye has returned to New York, bag and baggage, after a stay of considerable duration in Chicago, where he went with Mutual's publicity department and now comes back to the old town he loves so well. On the top floor of the Mecca Building, at 1600 Broadway, Mr. Ramsaye and his battery of mimeographs, stenographers and typewriters are now established in commodious quarters, from which wheel will issue a continuation of the fine line of publicity Mutual has been producing under Mr. Ramsaye's inventive patronage.

TOURNEUR FINISHES "SPORTING LIFE."

Maurice Tourneur has just completed his film production of the Drury Lane melodrama, "Sporting Life," which is to be exploited by Hiller & Wilk, Inc., and has started work on a photodramatic offering the title of which is at present withheld.

TWO DENVER JEWELS JOIN FORCES.

C. H. Griffiths, accountant for Jewel's Denver office, left for Liverpool recently, having joined the British Army. Fred Clark, poster clerk, left at the same time to join the United States Navy, which makes five service stars in the Denver office flag.

O'CONNOR IN CINEMATOGRAPHY SCHOOL.

L. William O'Connor, who turned the camera for Commodore J. Stuart Blackton during the filming of "Missing," is now enrolled in the School of Military Cinematography, Columbia Corps, Columbia University.
Community Centers in Every School District

A Daughter of the President of the United States Is a Strong Advocate of the Community Center Work

THERE is no time as good as the present for the proper establishment of community centers. The war work of each community could be concentrated to a degree that would add perpetual value, and duplication of effort would be obviated in an unmistakable way. These are the words of Miss Margaret Wilson, daughter of the President. Community centers are at present of two kinds — those which are built by the community and those established by neighborhood associations. Wherever they have been established they have proved of that "inestimable value" of which Miss Wilson speaks. It is not at all surprising that we believe that the time has come to have them established in all parts of the United States.

To those who have had any experience in community center work it is accepted that the first necessity for successful work is the moving picture. Indeed, it is only fair to say that it is the moving picture which has given the strength and character of the community center idea, and nowhere yet has there appeared a work of this kind without pictures except in such places where the work has been only for Red Cross purposes. The writer may be permitted to say that as he is associated with two such centers and personally responsible for one of them therefore he can speak with the authority of experience.

Timeliness of Miss Wilson’s Efforts.

Without doubt the present is the most opportune moment for the building of community centers in city, town or country. Even the remotest places can now be reached by the community center arrangements. This especially has been proved by the excellent work done around Charleston, W. Va., by the principal of Mingo, Ohio, who, together with others similarly situated, has accomplished much.

Miss Wilson very wisely points out that the timely combination of events demands immediate attention to this work—the war’s needs, the benefit of concentration and coordination, also the great educational value to all. The greatest hindrance to the more rapid development of this great work comes from the malfeasant work and authority, who ought to be the very fight to extend the cause, and, still worse, the war needs, which Miss Wilson pleads as the reason for immediate efforts, are the very things by which these procrastinators plead for their inexusable delay.

The strange opposition, which in many places comes in the shape of the refusal of school authorities to allow the use of the school buildings for this new work, brings from Miss Wilson the demand: "Do not the people own the school buildings? Therefore they have the right to assume the complete control of those buildings when they are not being used by the children. This is a principle which must be recognized and firmly followed if there is to be truly democratic use of the school buildings. It sounds radical, but it is only as radical as true democracy." One cannot but admire the courage which puts forth such ideas in opposition to much that may be permitted to at least suppose that the head of the nation shares these views, and, further, may it not be rightly supposed that if the people had more to say about the use of the school buildings the community center idea would not be long hiding behind its present living barriers.

Permanency of Community Work.

The community idea has the law of permanency within it. That which educates always grows and always lives. The school will never die. Anything which educates will never die. It will change its form, but its change will be progressive and for the better. That is true of the community center.

"The community center as a place for all sorts of community ideas and activities has come to stay. It is a fact coincident with the district school plan, which furnished the school as the common meeting place for all purposes." Strengthened by these opinions coming from such a most authoritative source the writer intends to push with still greater vigor the use of the moving pictures, which are the backbone of community enterprise. In the daytime pictures will supplement the text books for the scholars; at night they will enlighten, instruct, cheer and entertain the community at large. Their next mission will be to open the doors for all those many things for which a community center stands. There are few branches of such activities which the pictures do not introduce and sustain, and the growing generation will be greatly benefited by the great advance results. To no one now delay any longer this good and great work.

The Church as a Community Center.

Ohio seems to be the leading state for community center work. At a recent meeting of a rural church conference held at Purdue University, Lafayette, Indiana, the secretary of the Presbyterian Forward Movement in Ohio, the Rev. Moses Breeze of Columbus, Ohio, read a paper upon the subject of "The Church as a Community Center." He said he thought the church should be the supervisor of the community spiritually, recreationally, educationally and educationally. To teach a boy how to play is to teach him how to pray, and so far as he knew two of the best mediums for this purpose were the moving pictures and a gymnasium. It is an easy matter to agree with the above. There are places where the church and not the school has taken the lead in this work. Such will still often be the case. This is purely a local matter. Under either circumstances neither will be excused from either initiating or supporting the work it is part of the business of both alike.

EDUCATIONAL SELECTS NAME FOR COAL FEATURE.

The Educational Films Corporation of America announces "Vanity - a Giant in Color," as the working title for its spectacular picture production, with many of the scenes laid in the West Virginia coal fields. As is the custom, the definite title will not be selected until after the completion of the picture.

Most of the cast have been engaged and are preparing to go to Charleston, W. Va., under the leadership of Carroll Fleming, director, and George B. Wilson, business manager. Among the players are: Ethel Grey Terry, for the leading feminine role; Albert Hall and Harry Hollingsworth, for prominent masculine roles; Robin MacDougall, the well-known Tytlyl in "The Bluebird," in the juvenile role; also J. J. Dunn, Charles Mason, William T. Hayes, L. F. Kennedy and George Harcourt.

DITMARS COMPLETES ANOTHER ANIMAL STUDY.

Professor Raymond L. Ditmars' recent completion for the Educational Films Corporation of his fifty-two "Living Book of Birds," is his first for the manufacture of a natural science from the literary to the motion picture form. In the series presented, in 500-foot lengths, and now finished with "Birds of Vanity" and "The Tiger," the natural historian has covered the principal species of zoology, as well as the laws of natural selection, adaptation and evolution, on which biological changes depend. "The Tiger" is a portrayal of this gigantic feline species ranging from British India to the frozen regions of Northern Siberia. "Birds of Vanity" are the most gorgeous birds in the world, and the picture in which they are shown is a fit companion piece to "The Tiger." They belong to the group of pheasants, and many of them come from almost inaccessible regions in Asia.

IMPROVEMENTS AT VITAGRAPH WESTERN STUDIO.

A number of important improvements are now being made at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood at the direction of Albert B. Smith, president; and S. Smith, brother of the Vitagraph chief and manager of the western studio, is supervising the drilling of a one hundred and fifty foot well on the Vitagraph lot adjoining the negative department. The well will insure this department running cold water. The new office building has 2,500 square feet of negatives taken care of weekly at the Hollywood studio.

An additional row of dressing rooms for the men of the Vitagraph company has just been completed. The next construction activity will be by way of converting one of the entire buildings on the Vitagraph lot into directors' rooms.
Don't Let Summer Interfere with Business

If Your Patrons Are Thinking of Resorts Advertise and Sell Them "Em In," Says Metzger.

A. METZGER, manager of the Portland branch of Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., doesn't intend to allow summer to interfere with business. A firm believer in the idea that business will come to him who goes after it hard enough, Universal's Portland representative has been preaching this gospel to the exhibitors in the Northwest territory.

Recently Metzger sent out a letter to these showmen, in which he pointed out that the amount of business done by an exhibitor during the summer season is in direct ratio to the amount of energy he puts into trying to get it. His letter continued as follows:

"Old Sol, plus the gentle breezes of summer and good road show men, who owns or can borrow a car to stay outside, is a combination that the theater man views with annual alarm; and usually the summer "dull season," so-called, is accompanied by an outbreak of retrenchment.

"Which may be well and good, but in a big percentage of the cases the retrenchment starts in on the advertising end of the budget, which is just where the pruning hook should be applied last of all.

"If you want 'em inside you've gotta convince 'em you have something there that outlives the sun and the wind and the call of the outdoors, and you can't convince 'em by curtailing your advertising.

"Walter Armstrong showed what can be done in competition against the outdoor impulse when he put over the lobby on 'The Gilt of Silence' in Portland recently and packed his house for four days running in spite of a run of the kind of weather that makes every one want to stampede to the seashore.

"The summer dull season doesn't have to be so all-fired dull unless the exhibitor helps it along by lying down on his crowd-getting activities."

BIG COAST OPENING OF "PERSHING'S CRUSADERS."

An audience that tested the capacity of the Columbia theater of Oakland, Cal., witnessed the west coast premiere of "Pershing's Crusaders," the first United States official war film, on Sunday, June 20. A martial touch was given the opening performance by the presence of a number of prominent army and navy officers, who were guests of the theater management. A number of California's most prominent political and civic leaders were also in attendance, and were unanimous in praise of the living film.

The Columbia was appropriately decorated with flags of the allies, the American Red, White and Blue, of course, predominating and forming the keystone of the entire decorative scheme. An enlarged symphony orchestra added materially to the effectiveness of the presentation, and during the intermission gave a medley of patriotic selections that aroused the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm and brought forth volleys of applause.

FOX THEATERS HONOR MEN WHO HAVE FALLEN.

Taps, as a tribute to America's roll of honor, or the American soldiers who have lost their lives in the present war, was ordered played by William Fox in all of his theaters immediately following the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" on the Fourth of July.

COAST DEFENSE MEN ENTERTAIN DORIS KENyon.

In honor of her appointment as an honorary sergeant of the 122d Company, Seventieth Regiment, U. S. Coast Defense, Doris Kenyon, star of the recent photoplay success, "The Street of Seven Stars," was tendered a dinner Sunday evening, June 23, at the general headquarters of the Coast Defense bases, at Fort Hamilton.

The dinner was given by Brigadier-General Eli Hoyle and Mrs. Hoyle, while Colonel Delamore Skerrett acted as master of ceremonies.

WILLIAMSON JOINS TRAINING CAMP FORCES.

James E. Williamson, general manager of Physical Culture Photoplays, Inc., has resigned his position with that company and enlisted in the War Department Training Camp Activities. He will be stationed at Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga.

S. Snowden Cassard

Assistant General Manager Nicholas Power Company, Inc.

THE man who owns up to the above likeness, wishing to come to earth the worst way arrived the last week in January, 1918, through the port of New York. Mr. Cassard, who years ago was one of the finest star-struck boys in Hollywood, is an ex-actor, ex-producer, ex-publicist, and now an assistant general manager of that famous establishment, the Nicholas Power Company, Inc.

Mr. Cassard is generally known as "Dick," having fore-worn his middle name entirely. This because it is the name of a mountain, and he is afraid it will always keep him "up in the air." We have it on information and belief that the name "Dick" was fastened on him by the police lieutenants of Baltimore, who became weary of writing the triple barrelled name of Samuel Snowden Cassard upon the blotter.

"Dick" Cassard is young in years but old in experience, and he has been well schooled in business affairs.

In 1908 he became associated with the Bay State Brass Company, located at Haydenville, Mass., where he had complete charge of the factory. This was a big man's job in itself.

In 1912 he became associated with the Nicholas Power Company, inaugurating a cost system, and later becoming the purchasing agent. This enabled him to obtain a keen insight into the business with the result that there is no phase of the mechanical end that he is not thoroughly familiar with.

His career has been marked by continuous, steady growth and is best evidenced by the fact that in November, 1917, he was made assistant general manager.

A genial, sunny dispositioned man is he. The door of his office, like his heart, is always open to any one who is "on the level," and rich and poor alike.

In addition to being a good business man he is also musical. He isn't afraid of the biggest piano ever, and he has many compositions to his credit.

A many-sided man is "Dick" Cassard.

MacLaren Looks Us Over and Stays Dry.

W. S. MacLaren, of the Majestic and Colonial Theaters, Jackson, Mich., was in town last week looking us over and both getting and giving pointers in the business. Mr. MacLaren is a well grounded manager and he has a pretty good idea of what he wants and how he wants it and he threw a jolt into some of the press men. And he did not indulge in the usual privilege extending to those who comes to New York from a dry state, and Michigan is arid if it is named after and mostly surrounded by a lake.

FILDEW BECOMES MEMBER OF ALLISON STAFF.

William E. Fildeiw has joined the camera staff at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood. He will crank the cinema machine for Director Wilfred Lucas in the making of the forthcoming May Allison picture, "The Finding of Mary," the dainty star's first west coast production. Fildeiw was a Metro cameraman for a year in New York and has worked for Fine Arts, Kinemacolor, Majestic and Goldwyn.

Being the Fable of a Guy of the Press

ONE upon a time there was a publicity man who said, "This is the life, I guess I'll get busy and everything!"

So he employed a star for whom he might write some fiction, hired a metal typewriter and slid into first speed. The star was a nice lady who wore the loveliest gowns and had a regular maid and as many marriage fiascos as Ford has cars. So the "pub" man says to the nice star something like this: "Publicity is a great thing. A burglar gets publicity and pounds rock for twenty years. A star gets the Page One stuff and gets a five-year contract for so much mazoom that Rockefeller looks like a man who mortgaged his last year's panama by comparison. The Kaiser don't employ any press agents, but look how that guy keeps Germany in the papers." All of which nearly asphyxiated the nice lady star and she immediately subscribed for forty-five hundred of the country's leading newspapers in exultant anticipation of a popularity propaganda that would have made the Queen of Sheba quit like a dog. She wrote to a photographer and posed in every attitude except that of standing on her head. At last everything was set and the wise press guy was ready to pull a "Barnum." So one day Miss Lotta Rouge, the lovely star, ascended in an air wagon and flew with the nice aviator around the church steeple and penetrated the cloudy heights, meanwhile dropping her autographs upon the marveling throngs who twisted their heads like guys with stiff necks to witness the lady star cavorting in the heavens. And that night all the papers had it and the press guy got a twenty buck raise and the exchanges were as busy as a goat baling water out of a leaky skiff supplying the exhibitors with Lotta Rouge's latest film. Over night Lotta's phizing became as familiar to the public as the measles. Then the wise "pub" man borrowed a new Rolls-Ford for a few minutes and had Lotta photographed "getting into her new limousine." After which he continued down "automobile lane" with the nice star and borrowed the "Saucy Roadster" and took a view of Lotta "driving her latest model." Lotta was sure going like lace at the bargain counter. She was there forty ways for a royal flush with the cards she played in her regular film companies broke their legs trying to tie her up to a ten-year contract. She was in as much demand as food in Germany. The press guy got another ten buck raise and a nervous spell turning out stuff about his star. He sat up nights writing advertising recommendations for her, for Lotta was recommended everything but indigestion. As an actress she was a swell dresser and no photograph section in the Sunday papers was complete without her. Competition for her latest releases was so keen that the exhibitors refused to speak to each other. Nobody knew the press guy except his tailor and laundry man. He seldom came up for air. Outside of devising popularity stunts for Lotta, writing six thousand words a day and kidding the editors he led the simple life. Every morning as the flaming sun pierced the boudoir of the nice star, Lotta's maid would serve her breakfast in bed while the second maid delivered Lotta's morning papers. One morning she would read with pleased surprise a column in which it was said that the Earl of Grapejuice had hammered himself in the head with a chisel after Lotta had given him the gate. Next morning perhaps she would discover in the news accounts that the war department was considering appointing her the first lady general in France. The funny thing about it was that the nice lady actress began to fall for her own stuff. She began to believe it. Lotta accused herself of being great and returned a verdict of guilty.

She rode to and from the studio in her robin's-egg blue machine and always reported at the camera two hours late. This lovely vision of feminine beauty was going strong. She had 'em eating out of her mitt. Picture fans were naming their offsprings after her and a tobacco company produced a "Lotta Rouge cut plug chewing tobacco." She almost noticed the nice press guy when she passed him. She seldom passed him, for that gent was leading the life of a recluse writing popular fiction. But one day—one day—the poor press guy withered and cashed in and Lotta sent around half a dozen carnations and her sympathy. Six months later the only persons who knew Lotta was on earth were her mother and the neighbors next door.

Moral—The pen in the hands of a press guy is mightier than the real thing.

FEATURES AND TOPICALS FOR SOLDIERS.
B. L. Steele, professor of physics, Washington State College, Pullman, Washington, visited the Universal exchange in Portland recently to arrange for features to be used for the entertainment of the soldiers who will be sent to Pullman for special instruction in the near future. The course at Pullman began June 15, and about 1,500 soldiers were enrolled for special instruction during the summer. Professor Steele paid especial attention to war features in the Current Events, Animated Weekly, etc., and to special features, such as "The Man Without a Country," "The Kaiser" and similar productions.

The "Birds of Vanity" (Educational-Ditmars). In this number of the Ditmars subject, which, by-the-way, is his 51st, a proud array of pheasants and peacocks greets the eye. The picture which is something over half a reel in length is delightfully entertaining, and introduces considerable comedy to ordinary bird life. Pigeons of different kinds are shown following their usual habits. These include the Reeves pheasant, the Silver pheasant, the Golden pheasant, the Sombre pheasant, the Chinese pheasant and others. The peacocks vie with one another for the beauty prize, and we are furnished to add to the splendor of the Albino peacock. This picture will be enjoyed by all.

"Prize Beauties of Birdland" (Universal). In the 79th issue of the Screen Magazine will be found some pleasing views photographed on the farm of G. D. Tilley, at Darien, Conn. Among the species of fowl that are shown are the Bronze domestic turkey, and the White Silky fowl from Japan which are worth $250 apiece. Muscovy ducks from South America, a Chinese goose and a Mandarin duck and also the Rouen duck from France are also to be seen.

"Roseau, Dominica" (Post Film-Pathe). Views taken on the island of Dominica, in the British West Indies, are included in this interesting number. It is one of a series picturing the islands of the West Indies and others of the Caribbean sea. A great deal of tropical beauty appears in this, together with views of the natives at work and play. This is the land the Calabash pipes come from.

"Dogs of War" (Universal). The Shepherd Police Dog is the center of attraction in this subject found in the 79th issue of the Screen Magazine. In sub-title his virtues are extolled while groups of his kind pose obligingly for the camera. It takes a seven-foot fence to keep him from going "over the top" we learn, and his usefulness as one would expect includes the saving of drowning persons as well as the locating of the wounded on the battlefield, which vocation he has but recently found.

"Motion Analyzed" (Paramount-Bray). In the 127th release of the Pictograph will be found an interesting analysis of motion. These pictures were taken at the rate of 80 exposures to the second and are made to follow views of athletes in motion at normal speed, giving a slow illustration of what really does happen with every movement of the muscles in jumping, falling or running. This method of the analysis of motion is new but always interesting.

"Britain's Bulwarks, No. 10" (Pathé). This tenth installment pictures a visit of King George to the Grand Fleet and gives a comprehensive view of the great fighting body of ships lying in readiness for action. The king is seen moving about among the officers and men. He is shown in conversation with Admiral Beatty and other officers with Prince Albert, and also greeting the sailors. The knightings of Vice-Admiral Falkenham and the farewell of the sailors are fine features.

"The Quest of the Big 'Un" (Educational-Maigne). A reel subject arranged by Charles Maigne. This picture will prove a delight to those who have followed the "fly," in quest of the gamey brook trout of the Catskills, but to lovers of the beautiful in nature. The scenes photographed in the very best style are rampant with the beauties of deep perspectives of wooded valley's and rushing streams, and are covered with these scenes is a sight story in which Rudolph, the monarch trout of the mountain stream, is pursued by an expert fisherman, caught, and then accidentally let go by a pretty maiden who indulges a desire to care this splendid specimen of fishhod. The fish is found to be thoroughly a gentleman, skillfully covers his disappointment and gallantly declares that he had intended to let it go anyway.

GETTING THE FLYING SENSATION

If the use of the three reels of wonderful aviation pictures which were photographed for the U. S. Marine Corps Publicity Bureau at the aviation field at Miami, Fla., prove so successful as is expected, we are treated with a Committee on Public Information. These pictures were photographed under the personal supervision of S. L. Rothapfel, and were exhibited for the first time at the Rivoli Theater, New York City.

In looking at these pictures one gets as nearly as possible, without actually being in an aeroplane, the sensation of flying. The photography employed in the taking of the pictures is exceptionally good, and as the machines circle through the air sometimes at startlingly close range and sometimes at a distance which makes them appear as flocks of birds, the gleam of the sunlight on their bodies can be plainly seen. Through all three reels we live literally in the sky. From some of the photographs are being taken; and there is no feeling other than the exhilaration of supposing oneself aloft in a lighter-than-air machine, until our pilot takes a sudden notion to loop the loop or make a tail spin. At this moment the heavens and the earth seem to meet in the most astounding fashion, and we wonder at the clearness of brain which must be a necessary adjunct of the successful aviator.

An interesting part of this group of scenes which occurs in reel three takes us to the assembling ground where the novice learns all about his machine.

Items of Interest.

E. M. Newman, the famous traveler and lecturer, whose splendid scenic "Through the Nation's Parks," is released the first week in July by the Educational Films Corporation, has written to the office homes in New York from Paris on the eve of his wintering the war front. He says:

"Life goes on here as before, more soldiers perhaps and food plentiful but very expensive. No one seems to mind Big Bertha or the air raids. American soldiers are everywhere and very popular. The Barriers of France and England look to us and we must finish the job. Paris is not quite so gay but just as attractive as ever. Now for a tin hat and what goes with it and I am off."

Promotions in World Pictures Sales Force.

World Pictures announces the promotion of Norman Morar from chief clerk of the New York branch office to be assistant manager of New York branch office. Harry M. This is in line with the policy of World Pictures to promote its own men who have made good.
John Van Denbroek Is Drowned

Cameraman for Maurice Tourneur Washed Out to Sea by a High Wave at Bar Harbor.

JOHN VAN DENBROEK, cameraman with the Maurice Tourneur Film Company of New York, was accidently washed out to sea near Bar Harbor, Saturday, June 29, when he was swept off his feet by a huge wave while filming a scene in a photoplay under way here. At the time of the accident the company was in the vicinity of Spouting Horn, a famous landmark near Bar Harbor. Mr. Van Denbroek was in a ledge clear of the sea, with his back to the water, using his camera. The sea was rough and a heavy swell was running. The director urged Mr. Van Denbroek not to stand so close to the water. The cameraman said there was no danger and stuck to his post.

The company had been working all the afternoon when at about 12:30 a high wave came in with overwhelming power and took Mr. Van Denbroek and his camera out to sea. It happened so quickly that the other members of the company were powerless to render their companion aid, and he was drowned before their eyes. At the time of writing the body had not been recovered. The death of Mr. Van Denbroek, who was in his thirty-second year and unmarried, cast a gloom among the members of the company, with whom he was popular.

Mr. Tourneur pays a high tribute to his assistant. "Van Denbroek was an artist, and didn't consider his own safety when he saw the opportunity of taking a beautiful effect," he said. "He risked his life many times and in the end gave his life for his art. For more than four years the company has worked closely with him every day from morning to night. He is responsible for all the splendid photography of 'Barbary Sheep,' 'The Bluebird,' 'Prunella' and all the others. He was more than a cameraman; he was a lovely, sensitive, delicate artist. It is my intention to give him a surprise and have his body at the directors' house next fall, and he would have been among the best ones. He was loved by everybody."

Van Denbroek was born in Rotterdam, Holland, and was educated there. He has been in America for seven years, being with Mr. Tourneur for the last four years.

SUNDAY CLOSING DOESN'T WORRY CINCINNATIANS.

Few Cincinnati exhibitors were present at the meeting held in Columbus a few days ago for the purpose of discussing the status of Sunday-closing agitation and of formulating proposed legislation to end the matter once and for all. The existence of a law which has several times been construed as making Sunday theatrical exhibitions of any sort illegal is a thing of no account here. It has been a dead letter in the largest cities, including Cincinnati, most of the exhibitors are not doing any noticing about it. However, it is probable the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will soon ask for the repeal of the old law at the next legislature, believing that it is not now representative of public sentiment, and that consequently its existence is an injustice to the exhibitors, who are forced by it to keep their doors closed on what would otherwise be their busiest day.

MARGERUITE COURTOUT ADOPTS A BATTERY.

Marguerite Courtot has taken on responsibilities which would cause many an older and bolder person to hesitate. She has been seen and adopted—that's the word—a whole battery of Uncle Sam's guns. Moreover, she has promised to answer every letter she receives from each of her "boys," as she calls them, and see to it that they are kept supplied with day and night letters. It goes without saying that this will be no small job.

Battery E, 120th Field Artillery, U. S. N. G., stationed at Camp Merritt, after viewing a picture in which Miss Courtot was starred, sent an invitation to the company to visit the camp. Miss Courtot came, saw and was conquered. Then there was installed with full military honors as the Battery's adopted "Mother."

KENNETH HARLAN AT CAMP KEARNY.

Kenneth Harlan, popular matinee idol, who has supported numerous Bluebird and Universal stars, has been called to the colors and is now stationed with the Fortieth Division at Camp Kearny, Linda Vista, California. Harlan supported Mary MacLaren in "A Model's Confession"; Mae Murray in "Her Body in Bond" and "Forgive Me"; Carmel Myers in "The Wife He Bought," "My Unmarried Wife," "The Wine Girl" and "The Marriage Lie," and co-starred with Ruth Clifford in "Midnight Madness."

Utica Theaters to Open Sunday, July 14

Managers Decide on This Action Following a Conference With City's Mayor.

A n announcement which will come as a surprise to exhibitors of Utica, New York, is that the mayor, who has been attempting to open their picture houses on Sunday is that the city of Utica, one of the largest cities in the state, will open its moving picture houses on Sunday, July 14. The fight is to be won on the one hand and has extended for over a period of four years when Dr. A. L. Bender opened his Bender Theater here on a Sunday in 1914. His house was closed within a halve hour after opened, and he fought the cause until the courts even to the Court of Appeals, but to no avail. Bills introduced in the Legislature at Albany were defeated.

A conference was held in Utica, July 2, at which Mayor James D. Smith heard the arguments of the city that Sunday pictures should be permitted in Utica. The managers said that under existing laws they have a right to open their theaters on Sunday just as many other cities of the state are doing. Several theaters have already arranged for films for the first Sunday on which they will open. The managers stated further that they will govern their opening hour so that it will not interfere with the church service.

A new argument was brought up by the managers at the meeting which was that Sunday baseball has been discontinued in this section, and that there is, therefore, a need for clean and wholesome entertainment. They laid stress upon this argument in stating that recreation is necessary in war time. As a large number of persons are now employed in the Savage Arms Corporation, a plant manufacturing the famous Lewis machine gun exclusively, there is a many who will welcome this form of entertainment in Utica on Sundays. It is a matter of conjecture as to whether or not Sunday shows will pay in Utica in the summer, as there are a number of nearby resorts and amusement parks, but it is believed that the houses on Sunday will easily prove their popularity by playing to capacity.

Just how the plan will meet with the public in general remains to be seen, but of course there will be a clamor to oppose the plan while there are others who will heartily approve of it.

Big Week For Famous Players-Lasky

Seventy-nine Theaters in New York City Territory Showed Paramounts and Artcrafts in Week of July 1.

The week of July 1, designated by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as "Paramount-Famous Players Week," came in and around New York City, established a new high mark for the New York exchange of the big mark for the New York exchange of "Paramount and Artcrafts" in every week. The observation of "Paramount and Artcraft Week" in these theaters also marked a most striking example of close cooperation between distributor and exhibitor, in the exploitation of pictures. A newspaper campaign, in which the distributors advertised for the exhibitor his program for the entire week and in which a number of the larger exhibitors took additional space, tying up with the big advertising, offered a most effective exploitation plan.

In the New York Evening Telegram, the New York Evening Telegram and other newspapers there appeared page advertisements, announcing the daily attraction of each theater. The program on Friday and Saturday featured four full shows. One of the pages consisted of a directory of the seventy-nine theaters and the attraction they would show. These theaters included all three of Broadway's big theaters—the Strand, Rialto and Rialto Rialto in the "How Could You, Jean?" and William S. Hart in "Shark Monroe."

NEW YORK TICKET TAKER FINED $50.

Murray Sternberg, ticket taker of the Crescent theater, 383 Flushing turnpike, was fined $50, in Special Sessions Court, before justices Edwards, Collins and Murphy, July 1, charged by William H. Nickels, of the Children's Society, with admitting Napoleon Hauser, a twelve-year-old boy. He pleaded guilty and was fined $50, with an alternative of ten days in prison.

Advertising for Exhibitors
Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Study These Pages.

Because he uses first runs an exhibitor writes that this department does not give him much service. So long as he feels that way about it this department is of no use to him whatever. This is the mistake that producer on exchange departments makes as it is a critical study of advertising in the reader advertising films in general, and unless it is taken in this light it does not perform the fullest service it can give the reader. If you have played a certain film and see a paragraph telling how another house advertised that same film, do not pass over the item because you have already advertised that particular title. Read the story, and you may glean a hint as to how to advertise some other title next week or next month. Keep the paper on file, and look it over now and then to refresh your memory. Be able to show a reproduction to your printer, and tell him you want something like that. Don't think that because one man raises a mock tombstone for "The Kaiser" that you can use the idea only for "The Kaiser." You can use the same stunt for any one of a dozen other films from "My Four Years in Germany" to the Red Cross propaganda story. This department is not so much a news feature as it is a study of advertising in general. It presents each week some of the best work of the men at the head of the profession. These advertisements tell you how to advertise rather than how to advertise this film or that. Study the department each week. Learn what others are doing and how they are doing it, and you will be better able to do your own work. It is not so much the advertising of any one picture that counts. It is the advertising of all pictures that is important. Most companies give you ready made advertisements for special plays, but it is the purpose of this department to show you how practical men, rather than press agents, have done their work, and unless you regard the department as educational rather than news you are losing most of the benefit you can derive from these pages.

From South Africa.

The cut shows the center pages of a program of Fisher's, Cape Town, South Africa. The program is printed on better paper than can be met with around here these days, and looks very neat. It is eight pages, page 5 by 6½, with write-ups for Harold Shaw, formerly an Edison director, and his camera man, and with a photograph of Mrs. Shaw (Edna Flucrath) on the cover. Apart from this and two advertisements on the inside back cover the cut shows the only house space, the rest being taken up with trade advertisements. We think that the house could have profited by the use of more chat.

Vaudeville and—

Sydney Pellock, the sixteen (to be made nineteen by now) year old advertising manager of his father's house at North Tarrytown, N. Y., says we are mistaken on the sort of vaudeville he runs, and cites Elise Jans as one of his headliners and also names a Hippodrome act. We did not know that Miss Jans had come down to split weeks yet. His vaudeville may be above the average, but as a rule the sort of acts that will play picture theaters are not first-class, nor yet third or fourth class. He seems to be getting a better grade of act than the average, but we do not think that most of them match well with really good photoplys. He must have the advantage of stopping a jump. He has cut down to one feature, a comedy and an educational, as he writes that his patrons come in later these daylight-saving times, and it is necessary to give a short show if he is to run two a night. He claims that they made more money with the double feature. But would he keep on making more money? That's the point.

Handy Heralds.

Pathé is getting out heralds for "The House of Hate," with the back page left blank for the advertisement of the exhibitor. The cut shows one of these back printed by the Amuse-U, Lincoln, N. C., with the program for a half week. The same herald is used during the run of the serial, but the copy is changed for each instalment. There is no reason why all heralds should not give the exhibitor room to use for himself, and every reason why he should be given decent space for house use, but heralds that give him more space than three postage stamps would cover are rare indeed.

Stoning the Kaiser.

E. N. Collins, of the Liberty, Elebra, Texas, sends in a photograph of his lobby dressed for "The Kaiser." Just in front of the box office is a tombstone for the Kaiser, the epitaph being the doggerel verse on the Hennegan novelty, which is not in the best of taste even for a propaganda story. At the base of the stone are a lot of rocks and cacti, the rocks being lettered with the title and amounts of the three Liberty Loans, which are supposed to cover the grave of the Kaiser. This is good, and can be elaborated with other details such as the troops abroad and in training, the Red Cross fund, and similar displays of patriotism. Profanity and cheap phrase are not in place around a picture theater. It would be possible to originate a stronger epitaph without the use of such material. The idea in the main is excellent.
Well Put.
E. P. Cox, of the Theater Lousiana, Baton Rouge, gives a new twist to the old war tax announcement. Others have found that you help the Government when you pay the tax, but Mr. Cox puts it—

KEEP THIS IN MIND that every time you attend any theater (through the war tax) you TAKE A SHOT AT A HUN, and statistics show that it takes several thousand shots to kill one Hun.

Mr. Cox works another good idea. He runs a calendar underliner, and when he has an open date he merely writes "Not booked" instead of announcing "Great surprise" or some similar rot. It gives the impression that he books with care, and it does not get the goat of the intelligent part of the patronage. He does not cry "Wolf!" until he sees what it is.

Getting in With the Town.
The Theater Wilbert, Plaquemine, La., was only opened this year, but it has been bustling right along. Lately, Lionel Delacroix donated the house to the Thursday Music Club for an organ recital by a New Orleans organist, thereby winning the attention of the town to the fact that the organ in the house was a superior instrument, bringing out many who do not usually attend picture performances, and getting himself solid with the club and their friends. The club got out a 12-page program that is as much an advertisement for the house as it was a source of revenue to the club. It is good work along the right lines, but we can't see a five-part feature being run through in 55 minutes even if there was an otherwise long program.

Had to Run.
Manager Charles W. Decker, of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colorado, was up against it the other week. He had "Intolerance," "A Dog's Life," and "Tarzan of the Apes" all in the one-week, and he was hard put to get all three on the front page of his Movie Fan, but he managed to locate them all. The Movie Fan, by the way, has closed its third year, an excellent record for a newspaper size four and eight-pager. Most houses drop down after a few months, but the Movie Fan stays put. It pays because Decker makes it pay. That's the secret.

Ruff Stuff.
Here is an example of what the patient exhibitor is up against. The stills or The Sign Invisible did not work well from an advertising point of view, and Ralph Hufner worked up this six-by-sixteens from the press book, adding some groundwork to the figure taken from the press sheet. It would seem that good stills should accompany the story, but most of the stills are prepared by the cameraman, who may have no idea as to what constitutes a good advertising photo. This is the trouble the managers face all the time. The stills are made by persons who have no knowledge of the advertising end, and why probably would not care if they had. They shoot "dramatic" scenes and send them as to whether they fit or not, and it is only by lucky chance that they fit. In this case a single figure was picked up and made use of, but there should be some effort made to supply exhibitors with proper materials for advertising purposes. We have passed the days when a ten-inch space was considered remarkable. This display is 48 inches, and it is through no credit of the company making the picture that the space was provided with an attractor. The lower part of the still is given to a news film, featuring some pictures of the local settlement, but the display can well take in two features of one bill, and it does not detract from the longer length to play up the single still. A working good advertisement is shown in the five sixteens here. The major portion of the space is taken up with the house name and the slogan, but it brings attention to the double bill with the major portion of the space driving in the house name. The house gets about two-thirds of the space, and it is the only advertisement feature having seen that drives the house name in so prominently. We think it pays, because the house will still be there when the films are playing elsewhere, and it is just as important to feature the house as

All in German.
The Box Office Attractions Co., of Detroit, has gotten out a very effective bit of advertising for The Calloway Case and other Fox war pictures. It is printed with German type, but in English, and purports to be a warning from the German Government against displaying the propaganda films for the sake of the extra money you will. make. It is hard to get at the idea for a moment, and you are started reading before you get the drift and then you follow it through. The suggestion is made that the postcards in German be put up at night by permission of the police, then when they are torn down in the morning by those unable to read German the press story breaks. We think it would be better to adapt the circular with the English spelling to a warning against a certain play to be shown and to mail these out. The effect is apt to be better, and the advertisement will get farther.

For Pro-Germans.

Here is a good idea from the Grand, Paribault, Minn., but we think than an even better effect could be gained by double printing, using stock the same size as the usual ticket instead of a card 3 by 4 inches.

This ticket is given in anticipation of The Kaiser, the new ultra-modern feature at the Grand. It is hoped the grand opening will be a success and that the trouble and expense of the game will be more than repaid.

The reproduction is almost normal size. By the use of uniform type the entire month is shown in good display. It is not a question of the size of the type, but the relative sizes which determines the advertising value.

Uses Billboards.

S. P. Clark, of the Park theater, Pitman, N. J., uses bill boards for house advertising, and wisely plans copy that does not require frequent changes. Painted boards are not to be used for film advertising. Advertise the house instead, and it will be found that it will turn attention to the house advertising in the newspaper if the list of current attractions is desired. It is just as essential to boom the house as a place of entertainment as to announce this subject or that as a means of entertainment. It is more important, in a way, because the house advertising lasts over while the films may be there but a day or so. Boom the house at all times.

Uses Lines.

Because he has to fight a lot of extra black reverse cuts, Harold B. Franklin, of the Hippodrome, Buffalo, uses the outline frames, and in a recent Sunday advertisement about two-fives deep, he goes a bit further and uses a line billing for the effect instead of solid black. As a result, the advertisement stood out on the page and got the first reading. It is not a matter of how large and black a cut may be. It is purely a question of effect. The differentiating effect, in case of a poster, is and is on a page of blacks, or with blacks in the majority, the light-line cut will stand out better. It is so different from the rest. Previous reproductions of pages with the Hippodrome advertisement standing out has proven this, but the bendey effect is something new and worth while passing along. And note the box below the title announcing that the feature will not be shown elsewhere within thirty days. We are approaching what the English exhibitor calls "exclusives." The only thing we do not like about the advertisement is the lack of a date. Sunday to Wednesday is not as definite as the actual date, even though it is not to be supposed that a reader will keep the daily paper by him for several weeks.

The Hill Expands.

The Hill theater, Newark, has expanded its card program into a four-pager, with house talk on the front and a trado advertisement on the back. The house talk is announced as a "Weekly Letter," in the first issue, so we presume that the feature will be advertised. It is suggested that the signature of the manager will be better than the non-committal "The Manager." The signed announcement is greatly to be preferred to the other form and more commonly used. There seems to be a disposition to blame rebookings on "By special request." This phrase has been so badly abused that it no longer carries weight with the average person and is apt to be looked upon as an apology. If a film is shown for a return engagement, the effect should be made to create the impression that it is brought back because it did so well the first time. It should be an asset of the management and not be blamed upon an anonymous patron. A rather poor feature of the first program is a lack of uniformity of arrangement. One page is all display type and a second carries so much descriptive matter that there is no display. Each has the other style. Either there should be a reader for each feature or none for any.

Needs Identification.

A. D. Cloakew, of the Allen, Calif., uses a reproduction telegraph to advertise The Bluebird, using both the normal size program and one 21 by 32. It is signed merely "Rothfeld, Director Rivoli-Theatre." We do not think that this carries much weight. The average patron in Washington, D.C., knows all about Rothfeld and will not be impressed by his recommendation. Where he is unknown, his habit of endorsing is also well known and again the advertisement fails of its effect. It no longer carries weight with the average person and is apt to be much more weight with the advertisement to be endorsed by Rothfeld and the general patron out of town is apt to be even less impressed. The Bluebird, in particular, needs so endorse- ment. The play is by far the better known and should have been boomed for itself. The Allen does better with a coupon offering a free ride on the night-seeing car to children attending the matinee, but here, again, the film is not superior to the boost.

Giving It Time.

SYNOPSIS take time to write, even if they are comparatively short. Lately an alleged author told of a script he had written in a day, but confessed that he had put in part of the previous day on a preliminary, a rough draft. He then printed up and submitted it, a synopsis, of about a hundred words, to a prominent producer. The producer proposed to sell to a certain company. It ran between five and six thousand words. "It took a little more than two weeks to write," he replied, in answer to a question as to how much time he devoted to it. Of all the little points made were dovetailed into the other points. The editor did not have to figure that this or that thing happened "because.” He knew what was done and do was to suit the idea. There was no trusting to luck, no omission of details on the argument that the editor ought to know. The editor now was all put before him because the author knew that the editor wanted a complete and finished story, and not merely something from which a story might be made. He confided in the script as much as writing the continuity, but he knew that it would bring more money than a continuity, and so he was willing to give the extra time for the additional payment. He knew, too, that he stood a better chance of getting it over with the director. He knew from his own editorial experience that the director was gone to change and alter, and that he stood the best chance of avoiding detracting the editor by giving him the director the least possible excuse for changing. If a director is forced to supply the psychology for the story, he will supply his own psychology and the story will require radical alterations by giving him the chance of least possible excuse for changing. Even then, if the story is well told, it will make minor changes anyway, but the surest way to prevent this is to make the story so clearly defined in both plot and psychology that the director can make good work out of it, and is not forced to come in changing or altering. If the director can argue that the synopsis was so incomplete that he was compelled to fix it up, then both the editor and the author stand in a better chance of getting the script, and so it pays to be thorough even if it does take two or three weeks. When we get more of these stories coming into the studios, we shall have more original stories on the market. The fewer book adaptations that the editor will feel more safe in buying from a market in which the supply will meet the demand. Even some of the old-timers are doing sloppy work in their synopses. They do not realize the importance of writing the story down. It is necessary to write in the psychology as well as the plot, to explain why things happen as well as to tell that they happen. It is not a contingency merely to say that the story is a story, that there is no reason for the author to dislike does not appear in the story, but tell it, anyway, for the better exposition of the characters of Mary and John. Do not tell that Jack kills Henry "in a sudden fit of rage." Explain that Jack thinks that Henry has spread a slander about Mary and that he is preparing to still further traduce her character. Then the director can frame up the action to suit the motive instead of planning the killing to suit his own ideas. Of course this attention to detail may be abused as sadly as the avoidance of details, but a little practise will soon show the truth. A director can not do his job unless he has written a plot that does not only represent the author’s ideas, but that the reason for the dislike does not appear in the story, but tell it, anyway, for the better exposition of the characters of Mary and John. Do not tell that Jack kills Henry "in a sudden fit of rage." Explain that Jack thinks that Henry has spread a slander about Mary and that he is preparing to still further traduce her character. Of course this attention to detail may be abused as sadly as the avoidance of details, but a little practise will soon show the truth. A director can not do his job unless he has written a plot that does not only represent the author’s ideas, but.

Do As You’re Told.

A Chicago correspondent gets all het up because he is told not to send continuities with the synopses.

This forced custom may well apply to those who send a crude continuity as a result of their haste, but to me it really burts, as my work represents the labors of two years and a half.

Evidently he thinks that because he has spent two years and a half studying and half writing the best way to prepare the preparation of stories for the screen, answering the hundred and one questions which immediately present themselves is a waste of time. First script is always the best handbook for the constant writer of picture plots. "Straight-from-the-shoulder" information from an author with a wealth of actual "dotes and cents" experience.

Wright & Callender Bldg., Los Angeles
Richardson Saves the Bacon.

To the request of the officials of the L. A. T. S. E. and M. P. O., unites the editor of this department went to Washington on the travel of the capital (P. promote). In future, "Made in the U. S. A." will be the hallmark of excellence. Don't know where you got your dope on the English manufacturers. Hope it is right. As to our own lens makers, I was talking with one of the heads of the Gundlach-Manhattan Optical Company recently, and he made the positive statement that they were right now making the best possible lens for projection purposes. Common sense, and an agrarian tendency in reverse by a cheap lens, and the manufacturers to a better one they would gladly produce it. But with this, I take serious exception. That they are making a very wonderful lens for the money I freely grant. But that a very much better lens cannot be made for more money I dispute. Or at least I firmly believe a better lens can be made. I fall back on the proposition: Why pay large sums of money for a case or good lens? Maybe I'm wrong, but they have got to prove that fact to me before I'll believe it. I am not a lens man, and don't profess to be. But I do know that one plus one makes two, and common sense applies. In lens problems as well as in other matters.

An anastigmat lens is a more highly corrected lens than is the lens ordinarily used for projection. There is no reason why it wouldn't work equally well, as applies to the conditions of projection, hence it will, as a matter of plain common sense, work better, it being a more highly corrected lens. The only trouble is it is more expensive as to uniform, but since, as I understand the matter, it cannot be had in large diameters.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give you some idea of what is happening, we have, in addition to the above, will be of stock, will go on sale immediately, and will be in the editor, on which, one cent, and will be granted. Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in nest booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Whether booklet may be had by request, and a small royalty made, the editor, or both, for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Insult to Projectionist.

Herald Sherman, Corpus Christi, Texas, is with us again with the following:

I was a bit puzzled by Friend Miller's statement. Colonel H. Miller is a man of a little, but one of the organizing studios. As far as I am informed they are used only by small, country photographers. They are very cheap, costing around five dollars for the lens itself. As for the rapid rectilinear lenses they are not true anastigmat. As to the circle of confusion modern lenses are corrected for this down to 1/1,000 of an inch. As applies to the motion picture industry the only lens worth considering is the anastigmat, it being the only one which will give a perfectly sharp image with very small opening, which means that it will pass more light, as it can be worked with a larger aperture than can the meniscus or rapid rectilinear. I would also inform Friend Miller that the true anastigmat is an expensive lens—that is the really good ones are. The Glaucher Models range from $130.00 to $325.00 in price.

Quite long been my contention that the lenses ordinarily supplied with projectors are an insult to the intelligence of the projectionist. By the use of cheap lenses we are forcing long screen results on the public and doing injustice to the work of our producers. Although the camera departments of our studios invest small fortunes in fine lenses and fine work in the production, and tinting combine to produce some of the marvels of photographic excellence it is all shot on the screen by CHEAP lenses. The lens manufacturers of England are planning better lenses for the trade after the war. It is to be hoped that our own manufacturers will do the same. The Germans were turning out really splendid lenses when Bill the Kaiser started on his murderous war. The German lens has stopped short, of course, and today our own optical manufacturers are forcing to the front, and we will soon be teaching the Germans his own game in lens making, as we have in other very things he thought before the war he owned.

And by golly be pretty nearly did, too. But the day of German superiority is past. (Observe the capital P, please). In future, "Made in the U. S. A." will be the hallmark of excellence. Don't know where you got your dope on the English manufacturers. Hope it is right. As to our own lens makers, I was talking with one of the heads of the Gundlach-Manhattan Optical Company recently, and he made the positive statement that they were right now making the best possible lens for projection purposes. His Lonesome Life.

P. L. Boardwell, Hood River, Oregon, arises to make the following pertinent remarks:

For the first time in my lonesome life I am going to bust into the Projection Department. Have been in the business two years and am projecting pictures at the Liberty theater, this village. Hood River is a town of about 2,500 souls, and we claim to have the best theater for town. In the entire west I have sufficient nerve to say that no theater in the west puts up a better projection than we do. Yes, that's saying a whole lot, but alone sauce. I don't believe that it is true. And, by the way, when are you coming to Portland again? That is the only place I could hope to go to hear you. It is sixty-five honest miles away, but we have kept in contact, I'm going to be there. We have a Simplex and Motionograph Deluxe and I like the latter machine very well indeed, but I also like the Simplex very well also. They both produce a rock-steady projection, and I think that is Jake. (Say, are you from Chicago? "Jake" is Chicago slang for "good," "allright," etc.) I have just constructed one of those troublesome mazes, and it too is Jake. I took the regular Motionograph rewind and reversed the gears, put an 8-inch pulley on the rewind and a 1-inch on the motor, which latter turned 1,700 r.p.m. and Quite classy! Quite considerable classy! I also second the motion that manufacturers put out a left-hand projector. It would have been better, but I can't think of any objections. Am sending small photo of the Motionograph as it is installed in my projection room. I have a Jake nose. It is only necessary to ask for supplies to get 'em. Have one of your booklets and a film of "Hawkins' Electrical Guides, both of which are invaluable.

If you claim that you can equal the work of some of the large western theaters, friend Boardwell, you certainly have a good steady nerve, though the thing is not impossible. Duplicating the projection of some of the San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, and other Coast cities would, however, be a pretty expensive thing in a town like Hood River, unless your electric power is very low in price. You might duplicate it in a very way excellently, however, as you have the projection equipment to do it. Well, anyhow, I am sure you have high-class results, and that is good. Cannot say when I will come west again. Maybe never. Trips of that kind are very trying, and aside from the pleasure of meeting so many good friends, there is the little attraction. You have done well to reduce your rates a little. If more projectionists did that there would not be so much film damage, but it is very hard to get men to realize and understand the importance of such things. They may watch a crooked reel running at high speed, scraping the edge of the tins, without apparently having the slightest idea that damage was done, but when the print is over it is too late and the prints are gone, and a reel of film.

Time and time again I have showed projectionists their rewind doing this sort of damage, and have pointed out to them that the standards were not even in line with each other, only to find later that I might as well have talked to a stone post, for all the good it did. It is bad enough to have to be told or shown so simple a thing as that, but to be told, and even then do nothing about it, spells rank incompetency, carelessness, and a reckless disregard for property placed in their charge. If the renderer does not actually rip out some of the film track right in front of them, they say, perhaps, "no damage." They do not seem to have the power to reason from cause to effect, and to understand that a thing of that kind must inevitably work damage, and that damage is not enough to cause the exchange to charge it to their theater.

I am sure that the profession does not lie in such men, or in such crude work. It lies in the careful, painstaking, intelligent projectionist who uses his brains and is not too infernal lazy and shiftless to learn his trade. Such a man with common sense wouldn't sell him wrong. Come again, brother Boardwall, when the spirit moves. Always glad to hear from up to date, progressive men, whether they be in the largest city or smallest hamlet in the land.

The Blow That Killed Father.

Our old friend Moon, Sherman, Texas, shines forth once more with the following:

The new Handbook is for an apprentice serving under me. He is progressing nicely, this being his fifth month, but gets a little peevved when I occasionally nearly eat him up concerning something I have already corrected him about several times, but you can bet if he serves under me he will learn to do things right, and remember the things I tell him. And now here is the blow that killed father. I have one brand new Type S Simplex, and it is a beauty. The late model speed control is a little improved and it is also, as old-time Gem, a two-inch diameter Gundich lens on the baby, and sure get the results on screen friend. Incidentally, I notice the new Gundich lens I have been using that the back has a little. I do not consider this as good practice, since should a particle of dirt get between them in replacing after cleaning a scratch would almost inevitably result in the light. Of when the grinding down. Of course this would not occur with the careful man, but—

We have just taken over a panel in the wall of Labor Hall, changed the light and changed the equipment. There are three stars, a large photograph of the local, and an emblem of the I. A. It certainly looks good, old man. Would like to see you don't punch it right. The expression that he is is: I think you will be surprised. You can imagine that little old Edison on one side and the Type S on the other? Looks like a bird cage beside a coffee mill.

He removed the frame from the window, took it out, and put it in the building, so that I can ascend to my domain in dignity befitting its importance via a honest-to-good stairway.

Mr. Moon and other new machines. Best wishes to you and to our department.

I'm glad you have the new projectionist, Brother Moon, and that it pleases you so well. The Type S is a fine machine, and that is the kind you deserve. Hope friend manager loosens up for a second edition real soon. He must feel guilty every time he looks at the horrible example beside the new projector. As to Mr. Apprentice man, why (this is for his ear only) you must not imagine because you have served five months, even under a good man, that you know it all. Any idea that you have learned hung up on the wall is not the best attitude for you is to try and imagine you know but very little, because the man in that frame of mind is in the best possible mental attitude to learn anything new. I did not notice the man he is already a reservoir of knowledge is very apt not to be keen to acquire more. And here is a secret, friend apprentice—a dark, dense, deadly secret. I am sure that it is possible to improve your life don't let it leak out. Sh-h-h-h: I don't know it all, or even nearly all, myself, about projection, although I have studied that subject, with unusual facilities for learning, for many years. That being true, and it is true, five months' apprenticeship has not put you beyond the point where you may still acquire knowledge if you try.

Would like to give that panel the once-over, but there'll be no trips to the Lone Star State for me this summer. I have just purchased a big lot on the ocean beach at South Lyme, Connecticut, 12 miles this side of New London. It is a beauty. The Bay of the East. This summer will be given over to improving it. And I'm going there in July, peel off my good clothes, clamber into a bathing suit, and jump into the water for a month. I'm going to shoot lobsters on Hatchet reef, snare clams, go in swimming every seventeen minutes if I feel like it, and in my own in dividuals, which is the point of a vacation. The vacation department will come from in July, and maybe August, too. We're going to live in a gol darned house tent and cob-habit with the beasts, etc. Point of Woods [where he ran] in the back yard of the house and the pleasant way to spread all over the place. Also, I don't like hamburger, and malt- cule joy riding hath no place for me. Hence, sorry, but not for me. He was in the great war, and one day we shake hands again; in fact, as I am now doing in the spirit, for the Sherman men are the real, siron-pure, all-wool-and-a-full-year- wide goods.

How About This?

C. A. H. Decatur, Illinois, says why it is that some otherwise respectable insurance companies refuse to consider motion picture projectionists. Did not know any insurance company behaved in such a scandalous manner. If any do I cannot tell you the reason why. Probably because of the stories written by square-head newspaper reporters, with more space to fill than brains to fill them.
Taking these facts, and THEY are facts, mind you, into consideration, gentlemen, don't you really think the motion picture industry is acting the part of the ingrowing solid-iron top in placing its finished product in the hands of men who served absolutely no apprenticeship at all, many of whom are almost entirely lacking in the most elementary technical knowledge, or any apparent desire to acquire it? Of course we now have a large leniency of men who have served what amounts to the equivalent of an apprenticeship in a way, since they have been projecting pictures for years; also there are many who are well equipped with technical knowledge, and a very large number partially equipped. But for the future don't you think it would be well to demand that the novice start in right, and serve at least a reasonable period of apprenticeship? We want then at least have some guarantee that he did not learn his profession while showing people to their seats and rubbing in the port holes while returning along the aisle.

Apprenticeship.

There is just as much reason for the beginner in projection serving a period of apprenticeship as there is for the beginner in any other branch of human endeavor. About the only training which one can get and require some term of learning is shoveling dirt, and even then the man who does it the longest is not the man the employer of forsworn is the man who has learned how to "lay out work," and, if he be not mastered, then the novice must, perforce, gain what he lacks in knowledge at the expense of efficiency while posing as a full-fledged professional.

And as a matter of fact, that the non-apprentice projectionist has been, and still is, in seeking to induce the establishment of a regularly and to the best interest of all concerned. The interests at stake in the proper, high-class projection of a closely and of apprenticeship this department feel absolutely certain, and have the power to use, that is, cheap, and in first cost—in salary, or wage. But the incompetent man is never rich; he has no employer gains in wage reduction the least, and very much more than losses, in inferior results, or results which are excessive in cost. As the matter now lies, the average projection equipment for a theatrical show represents pretty close to two thousand dollars, and he has been wasting device. Considerable of this is in the form of films, which are highly susceptible to damage through improper usage, and any damage done to these films has been done to them by the films themselves, which are in the hands of the overstaffed charge of the industry, which must inevitably come out of the box-office receipts; for example, supposing that for the week ending June 4th, 1918, a theater was made to project for half of its week's receipts of $750.00, and the average life of films at four months. At $35 per reel, this means $750.00 a week overhead on this item, which, must, of course, be assumed by the box offices of the theaters. Now, it is certainly more careful, intelligent work in the projection room we can reduce this wastage by five per cent. It would mean a saving of close to $350 per week, or more than $1800 per year, which can be almost And let me again tell you that the film wastage due to carelessness and lack of knowledge in the projection rooms of this country is very much exceeded. It is not alone the cost of the film that is so worth of projectors in the modern projection plant, and often a motor generator costing well up to $100. Say a total equipment cost of $1,000, with the amount of incompetence which I have already told you of, the film projector can be reduced, and in the room, and the results show that a projectionist was wasting more than half his electrical power, for no other reason than under the canopy of being in the dark. And if you ask me, of fact, I myself have found cases where a projectionist was wasting more than half his film stock, and that reason the projector's business. In the instance of this theater, a theater manager employed me to look over his projection plant, believing his projection expense was out of proportion to screen results. I found the projectionist was losing 10 per cent. It took me roughly two months to teach him, and he ran continuously thirteen hours a day. The current bills for projection (projection room on separate meter) averaged more than six dollars a week, which regularly is about twice the average at the appliance store, and the man in charge the same time be totally lacking in technical knowledge. Before he knew who I was I asked him if he had a Richardson Hand- bomb in the plant, and he said "oh, yes, I have one of them, but the 'riff is not worth a jack!" I asked him if he had matched the revolving shutter to his local condition, to which he replied: "Match it? How? Why, we buy the shutter that comes with the lamp. I guess the -- people know their business." To make a long story short, I worked there the next day, setting up the lamp, cutting the same, putting in a different lamp, and the use of the hour made by that fact, and the result was the same. The projectionist admitted that there was a better light on the screen, with less than half the amperage. He then had more respect for technical knowledge, and he obtained, as far as lighting was concerned, a saving of more than half his electric bill for the month. For this reason it is imperative that the projectionist be trained not in the name of a "humble" craftsman in these days of King Labor) must serve at least that period, whereas very many must serve much longer. Yet they are the people we shall have to use, if we are to get any return. If we are to expect these men to be able to handle modern appliances properly, to give service, and to serve.

Projectors, What Is Your Experience?

Burton Benwell, Los Angeles, California, puts forth the following proposition, which same I am not prepared to admit. I would like to have the views of the projector, particularly those who have experimented with this particular thing.

The point I wished to make in my letter, June first issue, was somehow left incomplete. It was this: At the expense of more or less light, dependent on speed of intermittency, any projector may be equipped with technical knowledge, and a very large number partially equipped putting on a cardboard shutter with all blades the same width as the width of the main, or cut-out blade. Whether it is advisable or not to do this with the film, I cannot say. Whether this condition depends on many things. In the very popular projector of the moment, as flicker be concerned, the width of the main and cut-out blade is in the same proportion.

You will have to illustrate that to me, brother Benwell. That is all I care to say at this time. Admitting that my actual knowledge on this point is based on experiments made by projector manufacturers, my understanding is that the most nearly flickerless shutter practical for a projector is a three-winger, with blades of equal width, light openings of equal width. In other words all blades and openings to have equal width. As I understand it there is increased tendency to flicker when this condition is departed from either way. This is an important and interesting question. Let us hear from you, gentlemen. If I am in error, let it be proven. If you make experiments, give figures as to speed in various tests.

Maybe This Explains.

In looking through one of John Griffith's articles I came across the following item: "The tendency is to advance the crater image beyond the screen in a way that the shadow becomes indefinitely long. That is, the light is made to diverge until it is quite near the lens. This results in a somewhat higher candle power at the screen, because there is no loss, or at least very little loss. There is, on the other hand, a great advance toward the condenser, but this practice has the drawback that it has tendency to introduce Mr. Ghost, the film being then in some section of the light beam which has uneven illumination. Maybe this is the reason of the odd illumination secured by the short distance from condenser to film in Mazda lamp practice. At what point does the condenser focus the lamp filament? Is it at approximately the aperture, or at a point near the projections lens?"

Co-operation.

THE caption to this department speaks truthfully but with brevity. It does not explain fully enough that this music page is conducted by us, for you and your best interests. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD aims to be the best possible service to the exhibitor and every man has field in which he is interested. This page is yours. Your position in the picture industry is no longer that of a necessary evil. By individual and unselfish effort, supplemented by our music department, music has become a feature in the presentation of pictures. Together, we can make music feature the picture business, but the results to be obtained must be more beneficial in that it would give us a line upon the thoughts of our readers that would make for greater endeavor and more lasting results. We cannot see all the problems that may arise in picture fitting, and the time has come when glittering generalities is not the nourishing food which the orchestra leader needs. Tell us your troubles and pass some of your burden on to us. We will be lighter in heart and encourage you in your work, which in many cases is so little appreciated.

Brother Minsky, of Dubois, Pa., has been kind enough to say, "It is indeed a pleasure to note the constant improvement in the Music Page of the 'World.' Can't you induce the boss to give you more space? The Leader's Service Bureau is a peach.

We thank brother Minsky and assure him that the "boss" has promised more space in the fall. This tribute to our poor efforts is indeed encouraging.

A brother in Los Angeles writes: "We always read your pages with great interest and believe your music suggestions synopses very beneficial to our work.

We are always glad to hear words of praise from the balmy land of sunshine and will renew our efforts to create an interest that will become more widespread in the Pacific shore.

Even the theater managers have been generous in comment. Mr. G. R. Dettor, manager of Jefferson theater in Charlotteville, Va., writes: "I have been becoming under your synopses. After reading your reviews which is highly commendable, and your clever hints for special effects have proved of great value." Mr. Managan is a picture-presenter of no mean ability and his opinion well worth while.

Friend S. R. Kochspel in a letter of congratulation says: "Keep up the good work. We appreciate so much what you do, and you really created a standard of musical presentation which is followed by all live exhibitors.

The type of kind words are pleasant to the ear and we are glad to get them, but we want more of them. It is estimated that there are 7,641 leaders in picture houses scattered throughout the country. We want to hear from you, and an excuse from the other fellow that he will write when he gets better.

We want to know what your troubles are. We want to find out what kind of service you need the most, both the department and ourselves. We want you to use our good offices with the exhibitor if necessary. Tell us about your cue-sheets. Are you getting them regularly? Are they what you want in the way of musical service? How could the cue-sheet service be improved? Don't say to yourself that in spite of the difficulties that are constantly arising that you need to make a living, so why kick about it. Have some cooperation for your brother musician who may not be so adaptable to adverse conditions.

What would you like to change? New music question? Can we help you in that respect. We do not represent any publishing house and show no preference as to class of music placed upon the market. If it can be used for pictures we care not who puts it out. We can neither be biased nor bought, so our judgment is based solely on the merits of the music submitted and your needs in picture setting. Let us be the medium of putting you in touch with the new pieces that are issued from time to time, a brief review of which you may have for the asking. If sufficient of my brethren ask for it we will give it space in this column.

Are you satisfied with your present position or do you yearn for wider worlds to conquer? It is not our intention to establish an agency for supply musicians to the business, but we do want to help those who through circumstances cannot help themselves. Don't forget that THE MOVING PICTURE WORLDS officially recognizes the musicians who are to be found enlisted in the ranks of picture players.

Every orchestra leader, piano player or organist, who has charge of the music for a theater should be a subscriber of this publication. He owes it to himself to keep abreast of the times and know what things are being accomplished in the field of his chosen vocation. No longer can he afford to arrive a few minutes before the show begins, hurriedly gather together a few players and march forth into the boshed manner and hasten away immediately upon its conclusion. To get results he must be a student of the picture industry, searching it for every angle of something new. The little touches that can be made in a presentation. He must learn what the "other fellow" is doing and how he is doing it. Self-satisfaction spells his downfall, and there is no longer a place for the "I can't do it" in the usual overture.

We expect to make some changes in the policy of this department, not anything of the radical order, but merely adding some things that may prove of more advantage. We are looking for something new and springy. About your desire to have your music for the next piece ready by the time the doors open we can hardly undertake to do. We always try to have your music ready by the time the curtains go up. We do not want you to email us, but our aim is to help you, with that sincerity of purpose that comes from one who has been through the mill' and knows its vicissitudes.

Music At the Strand.

During the week commencing June 23, the Strand theater offered an exceptionally good bill. Mr. EdeI, the managing director, changed the routine of his numbers, which, we believe, enhanced the entire performance. Instead of the usual march, "The Camp" was played, and a selection played during the scenes showing our aviators. The time-worn march was eliminated, and a trippy bird-like piece substituted. Nothing could have been more suitable. The third number offered was programmed as an exclusive war scene, showing the reposing reception of our Camp Upton boys when they returned to England. I do not know about the clever setting of this film, at the same time, passing for the present, the opening of it. When the Highlanders appeared with their bag-pipes the orchestra played out of the best central of A.

A friend tells us: "You barricades there is the only musical department upon which I can rely for adequate information for the music for my pictures. You show a fearless spirit in your review which is highly commendable, and your clever hints for special effects have proved of great value." Mr. Managan is a picture-presenter of no mean ability and his opinion well worth while.

The second number, "Somewhere a Voice is Calling," was enhanced by a fine setting showing the tents of our soldier boys in the gathering dark. The house lights were dimmed, and a spot thrown upon the singer. Gradually the late evening glow faded as the singer progressed with her selection until at the close of the song night had enveloped in her mantle of darkness the bivouacs of the soldiers. This made a decidedly strong impression.

The feature, "Her Final Reckoning," with Pauline Fredericks, received its musical setting. The music was perfectly effective for a picture like that, and the setup was responsible for it could be proud of it too, for it FITTED. The fitting of the Gypsy scenes were especially good, and the use of Chopin's Nocturne was an inspired stroke. Another of those little picturesque effects played by strings was effective in conveying the idea of the guitar played in the picture by Count Menko. This selection was synchronized to a nicety and made the scene live. Mr. Reiser conducted the feature, and we liked his well marked beat. In his over- all performance as the conductor of the orchestra, he is look- ing well. For the cadence or natural ending of the phrase, but experience will eliminate this fault in an otherwise good director.

During the wedding scene of the film played both Wedding Marches of German origin. Fundamentally and from the picture presentation standpoint he was right, but in view of the strong feeling against German music, it is obvious that he is going to be required to refrain from bringing into the atmosphere an antagonistic touch.

The overture, "Madame Butterfly," by Puccini, was directed by Oscar Spina in a musicially maner and with a broad interpretation that was pleasing. "Madame Butterfly," an opera in two acts, music by G. Puccini. The original Metropolitan production in Italian was under the personal direction of Puccini himself. Mr. Spina found it necessary to adapt his own ideas into one of the most finished operas ever produced here.

The story of the drama is familiar to all through John Luther Long's opera, which is at times emotional, and it was shown old one of the passing fancies of a man for a woman, and her faith- fulness even unto death, which comes by her own hand when she finds herself alone.

Puccini has completely identified his music with the sentiments and sorrows of the characters in John Luther Long's drama, and has accompanied the pictorial beauty of the various scenes with a setting of incomparable loveliness. Rarely has picturesque action been more completely wedded to beautiful music.

The music and its accompanying effects that went with this overture was typical of the Strand. Mr. Harold Eidel has developed this part of entertainment to a high plane, and no pains are spared to make it the hallmark of this national institution.

Musical Suggestion Synopsis.

ANNEXING BILL (Pathé—Five Reels)—No Theme Necessary. The music for this picture should be only moderately hearty, and some slow waltzes will be found very effective. Note the two dancing scenes in which the footlights are used. The first selection should be a waltz.

ACE HIVE (Fox—Five Reels)—Slowness Moderate. Suggest "Land of Melodies"—Original Title; "Melodies." This picture deals with the Canadian Mounted Police, and is rich in pastoral effects. You will need some agitato, a couple of foxtrots and a sort of agitated staccato. The character of the tragic scene is an opportunity to use a short American Indian theme to depict the squaw. It would lend variety and be appreciated by your audience, for she is a lovely character. You will also need some allegros or galopps to fit the chase scenes. The balance of the picture should be very buoyant. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Pathé exchange.

CLAY, THE (Select—Six Reels)—Theme—Andantino. Suggest "May Drea..."—Borcher, "Enchanted Hour"—Moutou, or "Reverie"—Doofhoof.

This feature will give you some trouble. The atmosphere is largely African, and as there is a dearth of distinctive savage music you may be forced to requisition some Oriental stuff for the opening number. The concertina, for example, is the right kind of music for the beginning of the story. Long numbers will fit nicely, as the scenes are quite lengthy and the few flashbacks do not occasion any difficulty. You will find this selection effective. The cue sheet is simple, and the picture can well be improved by careful selection. The tempo can be dependent upon to reside you, and those found in atmospheric numbers will give you a good net. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Pathé exchange.

This picture has some dramatic scenes that must be carefully musicalized. It opens with light stuff, gradually working up to its climax. The first council with the natives is a very emotional and dramatic scene. The following was used in the original version: agitated, and a battle hurry. Close with either the theme or the "Marseillaise." Cue sheets can be obtained from the Pathé exchange.

FIRST LIGHT OF PARAMOUNT (Five Reels)—Theme— Andante. Suggest ? ? ? ?

It would be well to open this picture with the "Marseillaise" to estab- lish this as a French atmosphere, the music will follow. Judgment would dictate those of French origin if possible. Use Bizet, Chaminade, Bizet, Massenet, and Chopin if possible. Dur- ing the later scenes you will need considerable dramatic staccato, a couple of popular foxtrots, and a one-step. Cue sheets can be obtained from the Goldwyn exchange.

NEW FIRST TO HANDLE PICTURE MUSIC.

Recently a charter was granted to the Holwin, Inc., New York City, to conduct theatrical and motion picture enterprises and publish music; capitalized for $12,000, with the directors named as Sol. P. Levy, Chaneles Hollander, and S. M. Perry.

S. P. Levy and S. M. Perry have for a long time been intimately acquainted with the picture game of music, and their publications has been constantly in demand. They have found that the demand for music for this purpose is ever increasing, and the demand for music for this purpose is ever increasing.

The picture game of music is a very promising one, and the demand for music for this purpose is ever increasing. The demand for music for this purpose is ever increasing.

You may be assured that the company will give the best service possible, and that their publications will be the best possible.

Questions Answered—Suggested Offered.

Q. A certain producing company has discontinued the distribution of cue sheet, and I am not allowed to take the matter up with my employer, and he is not promised to write them for the music service which we have been accustomed to get. Can you suggest a temporary remedy?

A. Since you were good enough to add the name of the company in A. 8, we shall personally call upon them and urge the sending of sheets. In the mean time if you would make a list of your pictures which you expect to play we shall be pleased to give you a little idea of what you will need in the way of music. We feel that the company's complimentary pictures in a regular program can afford to neglect the orchestras of the exhibitors.

Q. I am a lady saxophone player, and desire to learn to play the clarinet. I have no knowledge of the clarinet, please give me a list of books treating with the playing of the clarinet. Study these yourself, and when you have mastered the rudiments secure a good teacher. Whatever you do be sure to get a thorough grounding before trying to appear in public professionally.

Hints for the Laboratory Worker.

By Gerald A. Prager.

One of the chief factors in the proper conductance of the motion picture laboratory is the care given to the minor details of production. It is true that no time or labor is too much for the actual taking of the motion picture, but usually it seems that a negative or print must be made at almost breakneck speed, and in view of this fact we give a few simple hints that may be of some service to the laboratory worker in expediting his work.

How often have we gone into the laboratory, and found six or seven racks lying against one another, waiting either to go into the washing tanks or onto the drying drums; or have we ever gone into the joining room and found heaps of scrap film laying about on the floor and elsewhere for the want of a proper container for same.

We show the sketch of a film rack truck (Fig. 1) that we have found practical and inexpensive to construct. The sides of the carrier are made of 3/4-inch wood, and the uprights are of 1/4-inch stock with a drain hole cut in one end, as shown, to carry off any superfluous water. The wheels are placed as indicated, one in the front and rear and two in the center on either side. (A preferable material is sheet and angle iron. Ed.) There should be plenty of play between the frame and the dividing rods, to allow the frames to be easily removed.

A fireproof film scrap can that is useful around the busy assembling room is shown in Figure 2. The scrap can is made of ordinary sheet metal to dimensions as illustrated on the sketch. The door on the upper end of the can is controlled by a spring as indicated. At the back of the can is a hook to fasten the can to the cutting table or to bend over the cross bar generally found under all metal tables.

Ofttimes we have a number of copies to make of the same negative, and the rolls while waiting to be assembled and joined if not placed in the proper containers are apt to become mixed and cause confusion. We therefore show a sketch of a roll rack that is easy to construct and practical (Fig. 3).

The rack is made of 3/4-inch stock, to the dimensions as given in the sketch. The metal frames at the bottom of the tray are for the purpose of inserting the number of the roll in the corresponding section. The frames can be purchased in any hardware store.

One of the main accessories of the film laboratory are razor blades, and it is surprising how many of them are consumed during one month. We have found by the following simple method that we could make one blade take the place of three. The blades are taken to the machine shop, and with the aid of a very fine jeweler's hack saw are divided into thirds as in Figure 4. They are then placed in holders as described and can easily be reversed by moving the thumb screw in the handle, thus saving the original cost of the handles many times in the saving of the blades.

We have found that by the use of two paper fasteners such as manufactured by the O. K. Fastener Company film can be attached to the slats on the drying drum (Fig. 5) far more securely than by pins, with the additional features of not rusting or bending, nor do they tear the film, and can be used a number of times.

If the film is desired to be dried rapidly a hot air hand blower similar to the ones used by some shining parlors are very practical for the purpose, being played on the film while the drum is in motion.
THE PRESENCE, we are told, of Madge Kennedy in a motion picture studio is bound to get to many people at the big Goldwyn glass-top in Fort Lee as it is a constant surprise. For Madge Kennedy is a revolutionist. She changes everybody's conception of what a popular star should do and say. Like one other individual in her appeal as if she were escorted always by a brass band yet. Miss Kennedy's quiet, easy manner and her never failing interest in everyone around her makes her a star of a distinctly different kind. Her unaffected charm is as eloquent as a flaire of trumpets.

Without Her, What's the Band? She comes and goes about her work with none the worse for her individuality. Nothing ruffles her and she has never been known to evince annoyance or show that she could get lost in a lost temper. Our Madge only smiles when trifles go wrong and that, she says, keeps the big things from getting too big to disrupt her.

The Witching Lure of Publicity. The small things which assume the aspect of tragedies in the minds of the conventional spoiled darlings of the screen are matter of indifference. If the partisans in her ivory and silver dressing-room do not allow a sufficient current of idle chatter in her dinner days, the Kennedy girl does not regard it as a calamity, but in cool tones asks the involuntary Frick in her salon: "Lady, will you warn me up and put them out of the way.

Missing Kennedy's quick sympathy and intellectual honesty that concerns those around her contribute quite as much to her pleasure in endearing her to the rank and file viewers.

The Quicksands of Gibraltar. She is never merely "sweet to talk to," but when someone really needs her she is so sure on her feet and so excellent that it is an understanding talk; the loan of a frock to a girl at her wits' end to equip her for a new more substantial assistance when the need is genuine. She is more a real woman than a player of parts, and her daily life at the Goldwyn Studios is a tribute to the normal, even life she pursues away from it. That she is a Piacenzi-Winsl Herëtte, versed in all the subtleties of the stage, is the most natural thing in the world to those who know that beneath Madge Kennedy's soft curls of hair is the most level of heads. She lives to study and improve herself and to her pleasure is secondary to artistic advancement.

Tom Moore's adaptability to Mimographic exploitation will be exposed next week in just about this location. The producer is in the picture of such good stuff as the Kennedy-Moore effusions every week Rambles would be well worth the space it takes in the column.

I've been a moving picture fan since first I saw "The Beaver." And now I am a "first night" man at all the new creations. I know the home birth of every movie star of worth just where and when she came to earth, and half of her relations.

I speak as though I'd met and knew the Players, and I'm not ashamed. I've tried Fox and Keystone, too, but yet I go dejected. No one says a story to care: They only know some star is fair And yet, "Keep still, you, over there!" — My wisdom all rejected.

 Doubtless She was a Good Waiter.

Alice Terry sure does know how to get a good meal. When she was living in Washington, D. C., not many years ago she made up her mind that she wanted to go on the stage. A stock company was playing a summer engagement in the nation's capital, and she went up to the stage manager of the troupe, demanded to be cast for the following week's play, and got away with it.

Alice settled down to be able to figure out just how she got up enough nerve to butt in the way she did, or whether the manager was desperate to get someone to play the two-line role.

Sheldon Lewis, in the coming serial starring Leah Baird, is again adopting some of the heroine-foling stunts for which he is famous. How Lewis gets it by countless small boys of the front row, and devoutly consigned to bad places by innumerable small (and many large) girls, greatly over-hated, it would seem.

"Truth to tell," says his press agent, "shed their hair, kindlier, or more courteous gentlemen than Sheldon Lewis in private life. Beloved by his fellows who comes even severe test is the regard of his fellow workers in the studio. There he is idolised and respected for his quiet solicitude, his regard for the feelings of all, and his lack of care for self if able to assist his fellow-man."

Pearl White is on a vacation. The blon- dine star of the Pathe serial needs one. A few days ago she completed the 29th and concluding episode of "The House of Hats," and when one figures the number of thrills contained in the 40 reels that comprise the latest Pathe serial, there is no need to wonder why Pearl White is on a vacation.

An interviewer saw her the day they completed the last episode of "Toe House of Hate" at the Astra-Pathe studios in Jersey City, "No gay boardwalk at Atlantic City for me this year" laughed this queen of the screen, "Believe me, I am going to take the rest cure this summer. I am just going up to a farm in New York State and do nothing but just rest."

"But what about plans for the future?"

"Oh, I expect to be back to work in a month, said Miss White. "You know we have another big serial coming and I figure that a month out with the butter-cups, the cows and the chickens will make me fit and keen again for the thrill stuff."

Suffering in Patriotic Silence.

The Goldwyn stars, hitherto anxious to practice wartime economies, have hit upon another plan to prove their patriotism and the regard they needs greater than their own.

Led by Mabel Normand, incorrigible talkie star, Midge Kennedy, Mac Marsh, and Tom Moore resolved to elimi- nate telephone calls except of the most urgent nature. Not only this, but they discourage all incoming calls on the wire.

This rule apply to everyone they know, and since every star is constantly bothered by unnecessary calls it will free them from needless interruption.

UNSUSPECTED BIOGRAPHIES.

No. 2.

(Drawn from Paramount-Artercraft-Pep.)

Charles Kenmore Ulrich.

"I am out here in the land of sunshine and flowers," writes Charlie Fuhr in his original mode of expression and under a Los Angeles sun, that fact, the name of my old pal Charles Kenmore Ulrich has been enhanced, enlarged and crystallized. Not only he acquired the editorial supervision, direction and production of the Press Books.

"Exhibitors everywhere meet me with the same questions: "What sort of a fellow is this Charles Kenmore Ulrich, this master of the English language, this wonder of the Press Book Age? Could we maybe arrange for his personal ap- pearance at this theater?" He is really as nice a man in real life as his press books would indicate?" Does he autograph his own photographs?" And so on, etc., and so forth.

"In lieu of spending my entire day answering the countless questions fired by the press in the English language, I have printed a biography on the Editor of Press Books and have had run off 300,000 rotogravure copies of the book which I have autographed. Of course, many persons demand original photos with Mr. Ulrich's own signatures, but with a little explanation they readily appreciate how impossible it would be for Charles to autograph his own photographs. There is no need to go to the trouble to send for them."

"Many people are mystified at the unusual popularity of this little book, but little do they know of how easy it is for Charles to turn out the best in the industry. Little do they suspect that Charles has had years and years of training in this very field of endeavor. If they but knew that the very first press book heralding the appearance of Eve was created, designed and supervised by none other than our own Charles!"

"If they could learn how Adam showered his love on Charles over the excel- lence of his press book in "Eve," written on oak leaves, with advertising cuts made out of Tech book; if they could have seen how the Indians howled with joy when they read Ulrich’s press books announcing the beginnings of "Cowardly," she long run in Manhattan; if they had read Charles' press book giving advertising suggestions for "Polly," which they would take as a matter of course his superiority in this world of press books, mats and coarse screen cuts.

"However, I believe that despite the fact that Ulrich's press books are the best in the timid, goodness merely in their infancy. I believe there is a great field of usefulness ahead of this backbone of the press book business."

The time will come when even school children will be able to read them. Seriously, though, let us therefore drink three toasts, three toasts—a whole gang of toasts— to the man who turns out the best press books in Filmland.

P. S.—It was thought to keep the secret of how Mr. Ulrich gets his inspirations, but they have changed our minds. For the benefit of those who would aspire press book fame, we disclose the Ulrich Mo- dor."

"I have a beautiful collection of hats. When he wants an idea for a story, he puts on a Fedora. When he is in doubt about putting up his hats for the creation of wonder press books. Mr. Ulrich bears a strong resemblance to his picture shown on this page.

Next week we shall present Morrie Rys- kind’s idea of how a branch office should be run with H. M. Owens, the "Daredevil Dallas Demon," as the "tail guy" for the unprovoked assault.
Bathing Suits Excess Baggage.

Alice Brady puts picture first! This fact was exemplified recently when Miss Brady balanced in the scales interest in her, in her desire to wear the two fetching costumes. It was at Long Beach, and Miss Brady was accompanied by some very particular friends and at a bathing party was projected. It so happens that in her next Select Picture there is a bathing scene, and Miss Brady has two such costumes. Miss Brady always wears two usually handsome bathing costumes, the one, which is all that can be gathered, ran into three figures, which was her own. These costumes Miss Brady had just purchased, and had taken with them in her journey on Long Beach.

Given the three elements for a drama, the hero, the heroine, and the setting, a bathing party and marvelous bathing costumes—what would any other girl do? Miss Brady would appear to be a simple one; but no so in Miss Brady’s case. She struggled—and Alice Brady is a clever struggler. (See “At the Mercy of Men.”)

Although her companions teased and provoked, Miss Brady stoutly refused to wear her gorgeous bathing costume before they had been filmed for the scene for her picture. Chinking back her vanity, she announced her fashionable friends by buying, in a Long Beach “department store,” an English suit as a substitute.

This she put on, and drably attired, when she might have been gorgeously arrayed, entered the surf. She was engulfed in gorgeous beach costumes of silk and satin remaining safely encased in their tissue wrappings under Miss Brady’s tonneau.

Texas Talent Under a Bushel.

Louis Pelletan, auditor for the Metro and the F. N. C. of Texas offices at Dallas, is a native Texan whom no one knows. At any rate, that’s what folks from Dallas have declared. Louis has no clothes, no affairs. Says he has a good figure, good “illumes.”

But another talent possessed by the versatile statistician sharp has been discovered. Louis Pelletan and Miss Petrova left Dallas on June 28, in the W. S. C. campaign, she visited the Metro and F. N. C. offices. She was introduced all round, and everybody gasped when it came Louis’ turn to say. They saw him click the heels together and his trim body bend at the waist line in a bow that might have been the envy of Parisian couturier. They held something like this:

(insert French conversation, ad lib.)

In the lot of wireless with hands and rattling of tongues, which nobody else understood, by which it was discovered that Louis is a fluent master of the French language, a talent he had been hiding under a bushel all the while. His forlorn ears were all of that brave nation which has shown the world how valiantly its sons can fight.

Great Star’s Good Influence.

Geraldine Farrar has amazed her director and the Goldwyn organization by her tremendous eagerness for her work. During the entire fortnight devoted to her first picture she has been at the Goldwyn studios in Fort Lee morning daily, and a bath is required an hour to get from her home over the river into New Jersey her rising time each day can be guessed and make her a happy person. On several occasions she has not only worked all day, but on two occasions well into the night. Evening came on a few days ago with the star and a big group of players in the middle of the committee scenes where the player was properly keyed up.

“Don’t worry,” asked Miss Farrar, “when everyone of us feels the parts we are playing” Tomorrow we would have to work for long long time before we attained our present pitch and sympathy with our roles.”

The entire company worked before the Goldwyn cameras until 1 a.m.

The meticulous care exercised by Goldwyn in casting the plays starring Geraldine Farrar, Madge Kennedy, Mabel Normand, Mae Marsh, and Tom Moore was exemplified last week, when Casting Director Clifford Robertson personally interviewed 1,174 applicants for parts in forthcoming plays to be done at the big studios in Fort Lee.

Each actor was considered for a part, and the question of mobs did not enter into the calculations.

Satisfying An Optical Yarn.

Ever since Madame Olga Petrova entered the picture business she has with seeming deliberation turned to us in all of her publicity portraits, the left side of her face. We have, with hitherto unrequited determination, sought for a glance at her right cheek.

Bert Emmett and Charles Wisner Barrell, publicists for the famous Polish-born actress and the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit, respectively, very haughtily spurned our pleading to see a picture of the always-hidden right side of the Petrova profile. But we have fouled the wool.

Here is a picture of Petrova, kodaked by our Atlanta, Ga., correspondent while Miss Petrova was in that fair city selling Thrift and War Saving Stamps in her personably conducted patriotic drive to swan the Hun on the fly.

We still seek a photograph of (e’llie De Barre showing something bubble his sport shirt.

Oh, Charlie Fuhr.

Long, long I’ve wondered Who could I ever find,

In all my dreams

You have hunted me,

And I’ve hunted thee.

Oh, Charlie Fuhr!

Elusive child of art

Art thou

With a glass of wine

Neath blossomed bough—

With gasoline

Pour’d into a jar—

I’ve rushed on madly

To pursue,

Oh, Charlie Fuhr,

My search for you—

But all things end,

And end this must.

If I find you not

My heart will burst.

If you’re a myth—

As some infer—

If you’re the dead,

Oh, Charlie Fuhr,

And pray to shake

Thee away,

To be like you—

Be what you may—

The anti-cabaret ordinance recently passed by the city council of Chicago has proven to be most malodorous and dismal failure. •

“What next?” asked one of Edith Storey’s friends. “You’ve done every sort of part on the screen, from the Coriscanbred sprite to the two-gun woman in At The Sun Went Down. You’ve played heroines of every nationality and every shade of character. But never a vampire—”

“No, not yet,” replied Miss Storey, faintly smiling.

“I’ll play a vamp some days,” confessed the star. “I don’t see why I shouldn’t if it is a fact the vampire when I do It will be a different sort of vampire from any you have ever seen on the screen or on the stage.”

At Metro’s West Coast studios there are four “Berts”—Bert Lytell, star; Bert Vino, scenicaret; Bert Dorris, assistant director, and Bert Wayne, property man for Bert Lytell. The other day George D. Baker, manager of productions, wanted Lytell for a brief conference on the details of a scene. He came to the rear door of the studio offices, and, making a megaphone of his cupped hands, shouted: “Oh, Bert!”

And all four Berts answered. “There are no Berts,” said Mr. Baker, “than there is meat in a filbert.” If we get any more I’ll have to start a card index system to keep them track of ‘em.”

“Either that,” suggested Lytell, “for the Bertillon system.”

World Pictures Names Four Subjects for August Issue

The announcement of World Picture for last week, the picture story having been scheduled under the heading comes "Hereditary," in which Barbara Stanwyck is starred and John Bowers features in the story. The story is by Maravena Thompson, well and favorably known as a writer of fiction and plays. As its title indicates, the story is that of a murder, and its heroine is the daughter of a murderer who is arrested. William F. S. Earl directed.

August 13 is the date for the publication of "Blind Justice," in which Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley are starred. Harry O. Hoyt is the author, and De Mille the director. Bobby Briscoe, an overbred, overprized hero, believes in the father of the girl he loves. The girl tells him she will marry only a man who is strong, and when she has Bobby kidnapped and taken to a health farm, and also works a blackmail on Bobby's father. When Bobby returns, strong and ruddy, his girl is forgiven, and all is well.

Coming on August 19 is "Merely Players," starring Kitty Gordon, with Irving Cummings supporting her. The fox's "Salome" Has First Secret New York Showing

Surrounded with the usual secrecy, "Salome," the first picture deal in one of the projection rooms of the Fox general offices on Forty-sixth street last week, was such a secret that no titles were introduced where later art titles are to be found. The pictures were shown in all their redundancy and with retakes superimposed. The showing was solely for the cutters and those who exercise critical judgment in the final finishing of the product. The Fox organization also were present. Hettie Gray Baker, film editor of the Fox output, was principally in evidence here as regarded the "talking of evidence."

"Salome" is to be the one independent offering of the coming season at the Fox organization. By which is meant that it is a non-release feature de luxe, which will be shown in the largest of the first-class theaters in America which usually house only purely dramatic offerings of the highest standard.

A monster publicity campaign has been set in motion properly to put before the public the greatness of this production. Samuel F. Kingston is in charge of the production, with Will T. Gent acting as producer.

Theda Bara enact the titular role. The strong dramatic fiber of the story, which guards the play from being dwarfed by its massive mise en scene, which, in one instance, involved the construction of a replica of the Jerusalem of 40 B.C., the story was written by L. Case Russell, and is a story of great dramatic strength.

The picturization of the sensationally successful stage production, of which the film is scheduled for publication August 26. Lewis S. Stone, who was featured in the stage production, is the star. "Inside the Lines" should prove to be as great a success on the screen as it was in the speaking version. In the interest and interest has been given to the picturization of Earl Der Biggers' success. Among other factors a supposed German spy, with designs on the British grand fleet, and an American girl.

Anita Stewart Completes Picture.

Anita Stewart has completed "The Mind-the-Plant Girl," the first of the special series of Anita Stewart productions. The Vitagraph plans to release them in the near future. Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has been busy in the consideration of a number of other plays, selections from which will be used in the as yet unfinished vehicles. All of the plays under consideration are from well known subjects, either legitimate stage productions or popular works of fiction. Mr. Smith says that so many plays are under consideration that he will not be able for some days to announce Miss Stewart's next vehicle. But he said, however, that the rest of her pictures, like "The Mind-the-Plant Girl," will be made under the personal supervision and directed by Wilfred North, who gave the screen such a splendid picture in "Over the Top."

Exhibitors are awaiting the announcement of the release date for the first of the Stewart series, and judging from the Vitagraph announcement, their curiosity soon will be satisfied.

W. W. Hodkinson Adds Plaza Pictures to His Service

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, according to a statement issued this week, is adding product to its Hodkinson series. The material will be known as Plaza Pictures.

Although no definite statement is forthcoming as yet, in reference to the exact nature of these pictures, it is understood that two and possibly three popular stars will be included under the brand, and that their pictures will be released in series maintaining the present alignment of Hodkinson service.

W. W. Hodkinson's personal statement in reference to Plaza Pictures in part is as follows:

"Plaza Pictures are good photoplays in every sense of the word. We are convinced that the producers of this material have obtained a consistent quality of production which, coupled with the popularity of the star appearing in these pictures, will make our new offering very acceptable to the exhibitors."

"Producers of Plaza Pictures decided to release their material through us because they wanted not only present profit for themselves, but also to prove to the exhibitor that they were ready to make good pictures, sell them at a reasonable price to help the exhibitor make money from them, and by that same token insure the continued prosperity of their own business as producers. They felt that our organization and methods of working presented the logical means to accomplish the above results.

"The addition of new product is a step forward for us. We now have Paralta Plays, Plaza Pictures, and the Douglas Natural Color Pictures, and more coming."

"We know that there has been some confusion in the past in the exhibitors' minds in reference to us and those producers releasing through us. Many exhibitors seem to be unable to fix clearly in their minds that the Hodkinson organization is built with a definite purpose in mind, and is striving to achieve a definite object; namely, the buying of product for the exhibitor at a reasonable rate rather than to force upon him the product of the producer regardless of quality."

"We will be in a position to announce the stars in Plaza Pictures next week, and may say, moreover, that the production of Plaza Pictures is well ahead of schedule, so that we can assure the exhibitors that there will be no delay or trouble on that score."
Arbuckle Gets Really Soaked in "Good Night Nurse"

In the new Paramount-Arboolke comedy, "Good Night, Nurse," released July 8, "Patty" Arbuckle accomplishes, after many ludicrous attempts, the unusual feat of lighting a cigarette in a blinding rainstorm. While this might be possible to almost anybody blessed with patience and perseverance, it is pointed out that it takes a "Patty" Arbuckle to make it funny. This laughable stunt is one of the thirty who should cause a full minute's laugh every minute in the new travesty on life in a sanitarium.

"Good Night, Nurse" opens with Arbuckle trying to make his way home, through a terrific rainstorm. At the corner drug store the jovial one encounters another happy pedestrian—happy, but in a sad condition. "Patty" sends him home with a parcel post. Just how "Patty" fares in his adventures would bore the humorous edge in the telling, but it can safely be reported that he finally reaches home and wife with some odd companions—an Italian organ grinder, a pretty girl dancer and a monkey. The exasperated and long-suffering spouse throws "Patty"'s friends out and puts him to bed and then generally takes him to a sanitarium for the cure.

At this point, it may be stated, the fun has really just commenced, for what the doctor and Intern do to poor "Patty" would be shameful were anybody else their victim. But "Patty" has a regular field day when he masquerades as a female nurse.

Arbuckle wrote this comedy and directed it himself, while George Peters did the camera work.

No Summer Let-Up in "Big V" Comedies.

There is to be no Summer let-up in the production of Big V comedies. Two companies are steadily working at the studio in Hollywood, and they will continue their indefatigably. One of these companies is headed by Lawrence Semon, the other by Earle Montgomery and Joe Roach, and they alternate weekly on the Vitagraph program.

A statement from the Vitagraph offices is to the effect that the comedy business is on the increase and it is attributed to the general desire of the public to see the brighter side of life, even if it is slap-stick. Exhibitors report that there has been a steady improvement in the Big V's, both in the matter of story and settings, and each one seems to get better than its predecessor.

Great Mob Scenes in "The Road to France"

One of the largest mob pictures ever employed in producing circus is handled by Director Dell Henderson in "The Road to France," in which Carby Blackwell and Evelyn Groesby are starred. The title of this picture is claimed by World Pictures to be indicative of just how the present conflict between nations will be brought to a successful termination. It displays just what weapons the United States will employ in fording peace on the Lusitania. Even though our people have a general idea of the resources of this country, "The Road to France" will open their eyes to the enormous power of this country to handle the men, material and means. Mr. Henderson expresses the belief that never in all his career has he had a picture that gives him the one great chance he found in this one.

Exhibitors Enthusiastic Over Vitagraph Serial Policy

A demonstration of exhibitors' faith in Vitagraph promises, and Vitagraph product, has been recorded during the past week as the result of the new continuous serial policy announced by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company. Just a week ago Mr. Smith, in letting it be known that Antonio Moreno had finished his place on the roster of Vitagraph stars, gave out a statement in which he announced that a permanent serial policy had been decided upon by Vitagraph whereby William Duncan, with Edith Johnson and Joe Iyan, would head one serial company and Moreno and Carol Holloway another. The company will produce four serials a year, each of these companies appearing in two productions, it was stated.

Already a score of exhibitors in various sections of the country have signed in advance for a yearly serial service on the new Vitagraph booking plan. This is believed to be the first time that exhibitors have been given the opportunity of arranging their serial bookings a year or more in advance, and the first time that contracts for such service have been made for that period of time.

President Smith, in discussing the serial policy of his company, said: "Vitagraph has arrived at that point in its production where it is felt that a promise, a year in advance, four high-class serials in a twelvemonth. A year ago we established the practice of a serial for each week in the year, and now, with two strong companies organized and producing arrangements, both of which are still making a position to announce for advance the release dates of the several serials. I also picture that all serials coming to us in the future will be up to the standards set by 'The Fighting Stall,' "Vengeance," and the company policy in the "Web." To these will be added on July 15, "A Fight for Millions," featuring William Duncan, with Edith Johnson and Joe Iyan. On October 21 this will be followed by the first Antonio Moreno-Carol Holloway serial; this in turn will be followed by another Duncan serial on January 27, 1919. The second Moreno-Holloway serial will be released on May 15, 1919.

Five Second Year Plays Under Way at Goldwyn's

FIVE productions, two of them virtually completed, for Goldwyn's second producing year, which begins the first week in September, are under way at the Fort Lee studios of the company. This means that the twenty-six pictures promised for last year's program have been finished and are undergoing titling and finishing. "Money Mad," starring Mae Marsh, on August 26, Goldwyn's first millstone will have been placed in Geraldine Farrar's initial Goldwyn production, which probably will be the first released from the new company. "Code of the City," will be ready for release among the first few of the forthcoming season. A capable cast supports a popular leading man for each of Goldwyn's feminine stars in turn, in an original story from the offices of George Lozow. Madge Kennedy has been photographed in the concluding scenes of "Friend Husband," which is being directed by Clarence G. Badger, and has begun work on her first picture for the new company, "The Law's in Love." The latter has not yet been announced, nor has its nature been made public. It is said, however, to be one of the most delightful vehicles yet written for her since she became a screen star under Goldwyn auspices.

Mabel Normand's "Back to the Woods" is completed, and she is at work on another production. Mae Marsh has finished "Mony Mad."
Gordon Is Leading Man
For Ethel Barrymore

IN the cast of "Our Mrs. McChesney," which, under the direction of Ralph I. Locke, is the current starring vehicle for Ethel Barrymore now being filmed at Metro's Sixty-first street studio, is Hunt- ley Gordon. Miss Barrymore's leading man, playing the part of T. A. Buck, Jr. Mr. Gordon was engaged for the role by Maxwell Karger, manager of productions for Metro, not only because of his having been a leading elephant trainer but because he was chosen in the original stage production of "Our Mrs. McChesney," but, too, because of the young man's ability and capacity, as demonstrated in previous Metro pictures. In the role of T. A. Buck, Jr., Mr. Gordon is first the junior member of the board of directors of the famous Featheroom Pettercoat Company, and later, the owner, as Ethel McChesney—Ethel Barrymore—the traveling saleswoman, of the opening scenes, and the secretary later in the production.

Mr. Gordon began his professional career on the speaking stage, being associated with several Broadway successes, notably that of the William A. Brady production of "Life."

Among Mr. Gordon's former screen successes prior to his association with Metro are several features in which he was the leading man, such as "The Return," wherein under the Metro banner he played first with Joseph Kilgour, was a member of Miss Barrymore's cast in several features screen productions, and had an important role in "The Million Dollar Doltles."

"Love and the Woman" (World Pictures)

World Pictures has purchased the rights of "The Love and the Woman," the continuity for which is now in the hands of a Baptist dispensary department with June Elvidge for the stellar role. At the beginning of the story Miss Elvidge, who has been loaned out by her employer, is played in a hotel. She is the sole support of her infant daughter. Realizing that with any decrease in this job position her child will have little or no opportunity to better her condition, she seizes upon a means to furnish her child for that of a rich man's offspring. This situation furnishes the principal theme of the story. Frank Mayo will play opposite her.

Fox Completes Spectacular German Spy Production

This German spy system in America has been completed on the screen, according to an announce- ment by the Fox Film Corporation. Capt. Charles M. Doleman, the engineer in charge of the production, has made far-reaching revelations of the workings of German spies in this country and has assisted R. A. Walsh to film "The Prussian Curr," a nine-reel spectacle-drama, featuring Mirtam Cooper and showing Capt. von der Golts, a German spy engaged in the pro-German activities which he exposes.

"The Prussian Curr" not only reveals the workings of German spies and propa- gandists in America, as set on foot by Ambassadeur von Bernstorff, but it is vir- tually a review of the whole World War. It shows how Germany stuck to the close of the Civil War and shows developed conditions and ways of thought in Germany and the more recent events which have finally clashed in the present struggle.

Along with Lincoln and William I. of Prussia, the picture throws on the screen an impressive galaxy of world fig- ures, such as Kaiser Wilhelm, the Kaiser, General Pershing and numerous other statesmen and military leaders who are now making history.

So pretentious is the production of "The Prussian Curr," that the William Fox forces announce that its first-run show-ings will be made only in first class theatres, and it is said that these performances will probably be given through the K. and E. circuit.

Five historical figures and events and the secret activities of the Kaiser's minions in America are the leading themes in "The Prussian Curr," strong heart in- terest has been provided by Director Walsh in the romance of a typical Amer- ican family, one of whose daughters is played by Mirtam Cooper in the role of Rose O'Grady. Another daughter, Lily, is wood and won and driven to her death by Otto Golts (Capt. von der Golts), a German spy. In the course of this story of love and treachery, the workings of the Imperial German spy system are said to be revealed.

It is declared by those who have seen "The Prussian Curr" in its preliminary showings that virtually no chapter of the Great War has been omitted from its scenes.

The allied fleets, the submarines, air squadrons, vivid battle scenes, the Kaiser and his crew at Potsdam and in the field, the departure of the Linnetia Congress in session, American war works, troop movements, launching of ships, the pour- ing of our armies into France—these and many other stirring scenes are woven into "The Prussian Curr."

Also, running through, and casting its sinister influence over these activities is the German spy system and the damage wrought by its agents.

Margery Wilson and William Desmond Lead Triangle

DESCRIBED as an unusual mystery play, "Marked Cards," featuring Margery Wilson and Wallace Mac- Donald, is the first release on the Triangle Triangle for the week of July 14. It was written by Adela Rogers St. Johns. It is a story of sacrifice. The heroine sacri- fices her love to the salvation of the gallows the boy she loves. And she wins the affection of the obstinate mother who objected to the marriage of her aristocratic son to the daughter of a former laborer.

G. B. S. directed the production which offers Margery Wilson, who appeared recently in "Old Loves for New" and "The Hand at the Window," Wallace Mac- Donald, who received favorable comment for his portrayal of the wayward son in "Madame Sphinx," will support Miss Wil- son. This will be MacDonald's final ap- pearance with Triangle before his enlist- ment in the Canadian Artillery. Jack Curtis and Rae Godfrey are also in the cast.

"Hell's End," with William Desmond, is the second release of the week. The New York underworld forms the background of this play, which shows Desmond as the ruler of a district from which the picture takes its unusual cast of characters, with political intrigues.

Josie Sedgwick will appear for the first time with Desmond. As an important part of Mary Flynn. Louis (Bull) Durham will play the heavy role of Hank Dillon, and Dorothy How is Belle Burns, who habituates the district.

"Hell's End" was written by A. Steen Richardson, with scenario by Charles J. Wilson, Jr. The production was directed by J. W. McLaughlin and photographed by S. S. Norton.

Griffith Aircraft Ready For Public Showing Soon

W. GRIFFITH'S first Aircraf production, "The Great Love," has been finished and will be publicly shown early in August. The production marks the first D. W. Griffith cinema to be re- leased direct to the exhibitor in several years. A notable cast is presented, in- cluding Henry Walthall, Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, George Fawcett, George Siegmund, Rosemary Theby, Mansfeld Stanley and Gloria Hope.

In the making of "The Great Love," Mr. Griffith received the help and encourage- ment of Queen Alexandra and the leaders of social activities of London. The Queen directed scenes in Lady Manner's country estate which has become a hospital for convalescent soldiers from the front. The picture in its entirety tells a love story, but its prime purpose is to show how war has leveled all ranks and awakened the so-called leisure classes of the British Em- pire to the need of their country.

"One Thousand Dollars" Sounds Good

There is good a reason for exhibitors in "One Thousand Dollars," the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature which has been scheduled for release on July 8. The story is another of the O. Henry gems done into a five reel feature, and in ad- dition to its rather alluring title the pro- duction will give to exhibitors three stars of recognized drawing power and a supporting cast of strength. Edward Earle, Florence Desmond and Agnes Ayres are featured in this production, which was made under the direction of Kenneth Webb.
“His Bonded Wife” Chosen by Metro for Emmy Wehlen

Maxwell Karger, manager of productions at the Metro Sixty-first street studio, having selected "His Bonded Wife," a Street-and-date romance by Lois and Arthur Zellerlin, as the starring vehicle for Emmy Wehlen, has appointed Charles J. Krabin as her director, with Alfred Häckel as assistant.

Mr. Krabin has spared neither time nor energy during this past week in the selection of a cast to surround Miss Wehlen so as best to enact the interesting characters of "His Bonded Wife."

Creighton Hale will play the role opposite to that of Miss Wehlen. Miss Wehlen's sister will be played by Warda Howard, who has just finished a forty-two weeks stock engagement and who also makes her debut with Metro in "His Bonded Wife." Miss Howard is a San Francisco girl. She began her stage career in stock and was graduated to star in "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Wolf," "When Knighthood Was In Flower," "Paid in Full," and "Lrewster's Millions." Her debut before the camera was under the Essanay banner in 1915. Miss Wehlen's cast also includes a Metro favorite of two years, Frank Currier.

As Doris Morse in "His Bonded Wife," Miss Wehlen will have one of her best opportunities. She will have practically a dual role, yet that of one and the same person. She will depict a typical American girl, adventurous and fascinating. And she also will wear several recent Paris interpretations.

The scenes of "His Bonded Wife" call for many elaborate sets and not a few interesting outside locations. Mr. Krabin will utilize all that is fairly in character within the scene. For this a team of Pierre Blackmer, Colonial and Barqueins have been engaged. Also they will portray in pantomime a playlet entitled "What Is Happening at a House Party" in an Urbanistic setting.

Montgomery Attacked by Auto Bandits.

Earle Montgomery of the Vitagraph Big V Company team, Montgomery and Rock, suffered considerable facial injury on a recent Sunday night when, returning from Sylva,他 was attacked by a pack of friends. The hold-up auto crowd the Montgomery party off the road, and then attacked Mr. Montgomery and his friends, with monkey wrenches. In reaching for the monkey wrench at the side of his car, Mr. Montgomery felled three of them. Mr. Montgomery downed the first one with one tap of the wrench. But the struggle with two other men was a long one. For twenty minutes they fought; at the conclusion of that time, Mr. Montgomery, his face hardly recognizable, is seen sitting from the fray, holding in the strong grasp of either hand, the atmosphere upon a dethroned hold-up man. Mr. Montgomery has forced to allow his prisoners to get away.

Metro Engages Two Stars; Each Will Head Company

Two new stars have been engaged by Metro, Olive Tell and Hale Hamilton. For both Miss Tell and Mr. Hamilton will head their own companies.

Mr. Hamilton's initial production will be "Five Thousand Hours," the pen of George Randolph Chester, Miss Tell's vehicle has as yet not been decided upon. The past few weeks established themselves as Metro favorites. Mr. Hamilton was the leading man in "The Winning of Beatrice" and in "Opportunity," Miss Tell made her Metro debut in "To Hell With the Kaiser," playing the part of a tennis player, and Hale Hamilton is one of Broadway's popular actors. Most notable of his engagements was "The Quick Wallingford," which play, the dramatization of George Randolph Chester's famous story of the U.S.S. "Lone Star," was successful in America, England, and Australia. In fact, it was the young man's success in Wallingford which caused Mr. Chester to have him in mind when writing his novel, "Five Thousand Hours."

Last week Miss Tell co-starred with Thomas A. Wise and William Courtney in "General Post," and received the honor of being managed by her to-co-star, with him in the opening production of his beautiful theater, the Henry Miller.

Vivian Martin in Rinehart Story.

Vivian Martin, whose many charming characterizations in Paramount pictures have won her a host of admirers in the ranks of the film patrons, is announced in a new production entitled "Her Country First," by Mary Roberts Rinehart, with the scenario by Edith Kennedy. James Young directed the picture and the photography is by Frank Garbutt. Particularly interesting at this time, because of its patriotic character, filled with delightful comedy, of the sort that Mrs. Rinehart has the ability to create, and, which, it is said, has been transferred to the screen by Miss Kennedy's skilful touch, "Her Country First" should prove the most appealing of Miss Martin's Paramount vehicles.

Sherry Reports Excellent Returns from His Exchanges

Following the second release of the new distributing service, "The Street of Seven Stars," which was shown to the public for the first time last week, William L. Sherry announces that the demand for his initial release has greatly encouraged him and given him absolute confidence that the style of pictures he is handling are what exhibitors want. He has now permanent managers for all his exchanges and produces from the first excellent returns have been received. Reports show that business is especially good in the Western territory.

"I have now gone far enough to obtain a practical, concrete basis of judging what the newly organized William L. Sherry Service is capable of accomplishing," says Mr. Sherry. "Most of my men have been well acquainted with me for years as a practical man in the film industry, and many have been affiliated with me in former enterprises. Thus it has been comparatively easy for me to coordinate our efforts and get the results we expected to get."

"Both of my early releases, 'A Romance of the Underworld,' a Frank A. Keene production, and 'The Street of Seven Stars,' produced by De Luxe Pictures, Inc., are having a very wide sale "in spite of the inflation of the market," adds Mr. Sherry. This is due to two causes—the pictures are good and my salesmen are hustling. I insist on this, and my men show very great confidence in the William L. Sherry Service."

Sherry expects to announce shortly the third of his releases, "Out of the Night," a Rinehart production starring Charles Ogle of the Dinner Pail Company in all of the other Keene pictures. The scenario is by E. Lloyd Sheldon. All of the De Luxe pictures were made at the head of her own company. The second release of De Luxe will be "The Inn of the Tattered Coat," starring Miss Kenyon by Louis Joseph Vance. The fictional rights have already been contracted for by one of the leading magazines of the country.

The Keene forces are now well under way with their fourth picture from "The Girl With a Past," by Paul Armstrong. It is stated that some beautiful exteriors have been taken within the last week. All the interiors are being made in the Biograph studios.
Skeptical Author Conceals Identity.

"The Driving Power" is the title of a story which World Pictures will soon put into work for a five-reel feature. Its author is a celebrated writer whose name is a household word in America. The contract for the sale of this story explicitly states that the author's name shall not be divulged without his consent. This is contingent upon the reception of the picture after its production, and if it is favorably received he is then willing to have his name used. This rather remarkable situation grows out of the experience he had with another film company that was not pleasant. Since then he has decided that never again would he either permit any of his writings to be seen on the screen or would he create a special story for film purposes. At the request of Charles Sarver, the scenario Director of World Pictures, a lifelong friend of his, he was persuaded to try just once more. The advent of "The Driving Power" on the screen will be looked forward to with unusual interest.

Essanay to Issue Third Block of Ten Broncho Bills

The revived Broncho Billy dramas have proved so popular that Essanay has decided to issue a third block of ten pictures. These one-reel dramas of the western hills and plains are looking at an unprecedented rate, according to the George Kleine System, through which they are being released.

Exhibitors declare that these dramas have filled a long felt want, there being a dearth of first class one-reel subjects to fill out their programs. However, these are not only being used as program fillers, but in scores of instances as the big event of the night. This is shown not only by what the exhibitors have written to Essanay and the George Kleine offices but by the amount of paper being used. It has been necessary to get out a full line of paper for these one-reel subjects and just as many one and three sheets have been used to advertise the plays as for the features.

The majority of exhibitors using these subjects are booking them one each week and advertising them for a certain night. They have reported a large attendance on these nights.

This third block will bring before the public thirty Broncho Billy pictures now ready for release. The third series will start July 19 and will be issued once a week thereafter. The first release is "Broncho Billy and the Gambler," followed by "Broncho Billy Fights In," "Broncho Billy, Vagabond," "Broncho Billy, Valet," "Broncho Billy's Punishment," "Broncho Billy and the Claim Jumper," "Broncho Billy and the Sheriff's Office," "Broncho Billy, Outlaw," "The Accusation of Broncho Billy," and "Broncho Billy's Double Escape."

Dustin Farnum Is Adopted By 115th Sanitary Train

For what is said to be the first time since America entered the war a male moving picture star has been adopted by the medical department of the army. Dustin Farnum has been made the big brother of the 115th Sanitary train stationed at Camp Kearney, California.

Mr. Farnum recently visited this organization, which includes four field hospitals and ambulance trains, has a personnel of over 1,000 men and is commanded by Major W. A. Jolley, and was presented with a handsome watch on which was inscribed: "To Our Big Brother, Dustin Farnum, from the 115th Sanitary Train, U. S. Army."

A review of the entire train was held, after which a luncheon was served, during which a number of vaudeville acts were performed by members of this organization. Later, several athletic events were held, including a ball game between the 115th and the 15th Infantry, who are proteges of William S. Hart, the 115th being the victors. A variety of races and several boxing bouts concluded the day's events.

Williams Working in Santa Barbara

Earle Williams and his company, including Grace Darmond, his leading woman, is on location in Santa Barbara, location city in this picturesque city, together with the Gillespie Estate, in Montecito out of Santa Barbara, figure in the picture, being directed by Jack Conway which is entitled "The Man From Brodneys."
Kerrigan’s Work Shows
Not a Trace of Injury

NOW that J. Warren Kerrigan has completed his Para Rita Play, “A Burglar for a Night,” it is worth while mentioning that in none of his previous pictures has he been called upon to perform so hazardous and thrilling “stunts” as he does in this production, which should set at rest any fear that his recent accident in any way handicap him. The scenarist, F. McGrew Willis, made it incumbent upon Kerrigan to fight his way through a mob of Chinese highwaymen, which the actor does in a manner that would elicit the warmest commendation from experts. Then, as if this opening scene in “A Burglar for a Night” were not a sufficient test of Kerrigan’s physical prowess, the Para Rita player proceeds to prove that his injured leg is as good if not better than it ever was by a series of screen acrobatics that range from rescuing Lois Wilson from the chilly waters of the Pacific to climbing up the side of an eighty-five foot bridge and then diving from this alitudinous perch into the waters beneath the steel structure.

Story Chosen for Mary MacLaren.

“The Vanity Pool,” a magazine novella by Nathaniel Hawthorne, which appeared recently in Young’s, has been chosen by Universal as Mary MacLaren’s starring vehicle. The story has been turned over to Universal’s artistic woman director, Ada May Park, who is creating the working scene.

It is a modern society story of a young girl’s development, that promises to work up into a sensational melodrama.

A notable supporting cast is being carefully selected to support Miss MacLaren in this Universal special production.

General’s Camp Films Are Popular.

The series of four one-reel subjects picturing the life of army recruits at Camp Devens, Massachusetts, produced by the Connecticut Film Company for General Film, is proving popular in those territories represented by troops in training at the eastern camp, according to General Film. Although each reel is complete in itself, many exhibitors are combining the four reels and using them as a feature, a plan that is reported to have met with big success wherever tried.

Pathé Releases a Washburn in August.

Bryant Washburn has another of his amiable “young fellow” characters in hand in his new Pathe play, “The Ghost of the Rancho,” which will be released in August by Pathé. Also, he has a very charming and slightly leading woman in the person of Ithea Mitchell, whose work on the screen has made her a favorite.

In “The Ghost of the Rancho,” Washburn is seen as a petulant millionaire’s son who is proving an obstinate wrath and a threat to be doomed to hard work. There is a strong, compelling quality in the story which slips into the picture toward the end.

“Maggie Pepper” Chosen For Ethel Clayton’s Debut

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has purchased the motion picture rights to “Maggie Pepper,” which will be an Ethel Clayton vehicle to be released under the Paramount trade mark.

The subject was Rose Nish’s greatest dramatic success and was written by Charles Klein. It had its first presentation in December, 1911, at the Harris theater, New York. One of the most successful stories of Mr. Klein, the play proved to be, which, met with popular approval when it started its phenomenal run as a “legitimate” attraction.

The part of Maggie Pepper offers an ideal character for Miss Clayton, who will be given a supporting cast that among motion picture patrons will be just as important as the players in the stage production were among theatrical followers.

“Maggie Pepper,” which will be directed by Robert Vignola, will be one of the series of eight Ethel Clayton pictures to be produced for release during the coming year starting September 1.

Theda Bara to Portray Artist’s Model.

Theda Bara as an artist’s model will be the central theme of the next drama which the William Fox vampire will film, according to an announcement by the Fox Film Corporation.

Miss Bara, who has just completed filming “The Message of the Lilies,” is now taking a short rest before plunging into work on her new production. The latest drama bears the temporary title of “Little She-Devil,” but this, it is understood, is going to be changed.

The project, which is being considered of as being considerably different from anything Miss Bara has yet attempted, will afford plenty of opportunity for the William Fox star. J. Gordon Edwards will direct the picture. This will make the twenty-eighth production which Mr. Edwards has directed for William Fox.

“Winning Grandma” Set for August.

Child lovers will find great delight in “Winning Grandma,” the new photoplay in which Baby Marie Osborne appears and which will be released by Pathé in August. The comedy action is fast and furious and little Smiling Sammy, the colored lad who has been a big laugher provocateur in recent Baby Marie pictures, is there with bells on.

Artist Says Bert Lytell
Is Ideal American Type

BERT LYTELL is the ideal type of American manhood, in the opinion of Hans Leip, artist and sculptor and gold medal winner at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco. Mr. Leipboer made the acquaintance of Mr. Lytell at Metro’s west coast studios in Hollywood and was so enthusiastic over Mr. Lytell’s qualifications as a model that he asked and was granted permission to make the head and bust of the screen idol of clay.

“Mr. Lytell embodies all that is characteristic of the young American,” said Mr. Leipboer. “He has a splendid head, with a strong jaw; well-places eyes; a firm mouth and a general air of determination, poise and virility.”

At the Panama-Pacific Exposition Mr. Lytell won a gold medal for supervising the art work in the Netherlands Building, to which he also contributed two mural paintings. He intends to complete the clay bust of Mr. Lytell, and then have it cast in bronze, to be sent to Holland for exhibition in one of the national art galleries as representative of the ideal young American.

“A Wife’s Conscience” Now Ready for Showing

Bessie Barriscale has completed her seventh play under the Para Rita banner. It is entitled “A Wife’s Conscience” and is a play of pathos which in which the problem appears at once and the subsequent suspense is maintained at a high pitch throughout. Then, at a point where it seems that the heroine cannot possibly be extricated from the difficulties, she is found loosing the sympathy of the audience, there comes a startling denouement which reverses the situation and makes the whole conception of “A Wife’s Conscience” the crux and title of the story, a very noble woman indeed.

Miss Barriscale has those connected with the filming of this production were especially pleased with the story. It combines the emotional situations of the actresses’ former plays, with a humanness and compelling sympathy of the sort usually found in plays more exclusively of this variety.

The original story, written by William Parker, has been adapted for the screen by Julian Louis Lamothe. The production was filmed at the Brunton Studios in Los Angeles. The picture is directed by Howard Hickman. The technical and artistic details were under the personal supervision of Miss Barriscale.

Miss Barriscale was supported by Edward Coxen as the lead, with Mary Jane Irving, baby star, and Charles Gunn, leading man.

“Britain’s Bulwarks” Winding Up.

Pathé will release the twelfth and last episode of the series “Britain’s Bulwarks,” “Britain’s Bulwarks,” July 28. The title is “The Canadians at Vimy Ridge” and is said to be the best of the series and showing to be by far the best of the series.

It most certainly is it of the widest appeal right now that renewed activity on the West front is centering on this historic battle, one of the historic battles of the Canadians, at death in the first year of the war.

“Ne’er Do Well” Gets Business.

That the motion picture version of Rex Beach’s fantastic novel “Ne’er Do Well” has lost little of its hold with the public and the exhibitors is indicated by the large number of orders for the new edition of the photoplay feature, says General Film Company this week. A large number of General exchanges are reporting a brisk business on the resale of the Selig picture, long runs predominating in the bookings received to date.
Success Series Schedule Complete For Half Year

The complete schedule of the first six months’ releases of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation’s Success Series of approximately 80 features has been announced. It includes twenty-six features, or one for each week of the period from September 1 to February 29. The utmost care in the selection of subjects as well as the stars to be featured and dramatized, and the inclusion of the调度 presents the widest diversity possible. Each month offers one special subject, and, with the exception of Mary Pickford, whose “Caprice” is scheduled for November 3 and who will be seen in “The Dawn of Tomorrow” on December 29, no star will be featured in the series in two successive monts. In addition to the six special productions, four of the reissues will feature Mary Pickford, Margaret Livingston, Clark Gable, and William Farnum in one each. As a fitting lead-off feature, “The Eagle’s Mate” of Mary Pickford’s most popular plays, has been selected for September 1 release. James Kirkwood directed this production, which shows Mary in the role of a gently reared girl of the hills who is thrown in with moonlight and becomes the center of the rival affections of mountaineers. Work on February 29 and retitling of these films, gathered from the exchanges of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is progressing rapidly at the laboratories, a special department having been created for the purpose under the supervision of Frank Meyer, assisted by Hector Streyczmanns. When the labs of this staff of experts are finished, it is promised that these reissues will be even more satisfactory to exhibitors and patrons whose heads they were originally placed on the market.

Roy Stewart Writes a Western

The next Triangle Western subject will be a play written by Roy Stewart, the popular cowboy player. Stewart and Director Cliff Smith are now working on the interior scenes of this play, which is temporarily titled “The Fighting Gringo.” On July 1, they went with their company, thirty-three in all, to the O’Neill ranch near San Juan Capistrano, for the summer round-up, where they will secure the exterior scenes. Steve Rounds is handling the camera.

Marion Davies in Washington Starts Second Select

W ORK on the second picture Marion Davies is making for Select has started in Washington, to which city Miss Davies has been accompanied by the members of the company, and Julius Steger, under whose supervision the picture will be made, assisted by H. E. Streyyczmanns. The vehicle is a down-to-the-minute story of romance, intrigue, and international intrigue. The action takes place in the present year, and the settings are laid entirely in American cities, Newport, and Washington being the locations of most of the scenes. “The Burden of Proof” is the title which has been given this story, which has been prepared by S. M. Weller. The play is not a war drama in any sense, but nevertheless there is a background of war in the picture—must needs be the case with every drama dealing with national American life today. Indeed, there are glimpses of the National Capital, with flags flying and marching columns of men in khaki. Miss Davies’ role is that of a bride who, through peculiar stress of circumstances, finds herself in the center of a maelstrom of international intrigue. The big moment of the play comes when, seemingly convicted by the accusing figure of circumstantial evidence, the bride faces her husband and tests his faith in her. Mr. Steger will be assisted by John G. Adolph. Andre R. Barlart will do the camera work. Miss Davies’ leading man will be John Mckyle. One of the most prominent characters in the picture will be played by L. Rogers Lytton, well remembered for the role which he created in “The Battle Cry of Peace.” Mr. Lytton will portray another one of these characters, such as are often termed “Rogers Lytton roles.”

“Miss Innocence” a Strong Fox Special Feature Issue

A PLAY of political treachery, intrigue, false accusations, innocence, Broadway life and convent cloisters is the description given in a statement from the Fox Film Corporation of “Miss Innocence,” which, with June Caprice as the star, will be the latest Fox special feature.

Jobyna Howland Plays With Norma Talmadge

JOBYNA HOWLAND, the original “Gibson Girl” and exotic actress, who scored during the past season in “Nancy Lee,” faced the camera for the first time last week at the Normal Talmadge studio. She has been cast by Director Sidney A. Franklin for an important part in Miss Talmadge’s new picture, “What Might Have Been.” Miss Howland has a regular vampire role, and is called upon to exercise all her feminine arts to entrap a wealthy banker whom she wishes to lure away from his wife. Although this is her first motion picture appearance, Miss Howland has been a prominent figure on the speaking stage for years. She has alternated in musical comedy and the legitimate, and has played important roles in such widely different plays as “Rupert of Hentzau,” with James K. Hackett, and “The Passing Show of 1917,” a London theater hit. As assistant for the famous “Gibson Girl” drawings which were a sensation some years ago, Miss Howland first came into prominence. She admits that acting before the camera at the Normal Talmadge studios is the first position she has ever done since she was a model for Charles Dana Gibson.

June Caprice in “Miss Innocence” release. The play is said to be the strongest which June Caprice has yet enacted. Miss Caprice is surrounded by a capable cast, other players in the production being Marie Shotwell, Robert Walker, Frank Beamish, Carlson Macey and Mrs. Carlson.

Universal Well Ahead of Production Dates on Serials

SUCH satisfactory progress has been made upon the production work of two of Universal's forthcoming serials that long before the dates set for their release both will have been entirely completed and distributed among that company's exchanges.

The serials are "The Brass Bullet" and "The Lure of the Circus," the former featuring Juanita Hansen and Jack Mulhall, while the second will be the vehicle in which Eddie Polo will display his athletic prowess.

"The Brass Bullet" will be the first of Universal's 1911-1912 serial thrillers and is scheduled to be shown at the first run theaters commencing with August 10. The story will be told in eighteen two-reel weekly episodes and, according to its producers, is beyond all question the best and most unusual story of the to-be-continued type yet turned out by that organization.

The cast engaged for this serial includes, besides the principal players, such sterling performers as Charles Hill Mailes, Helen Wright, Charles Force, Hal Cooley, Joseph Girard and Ashton DeArcht. Although there are sixteen episodes of "The Brass Bullet," but five have been completed and titled so far. The names of these chapters are: Episode No. 1, "A Flying Start"; Episode 2, "The Muffled Man"; Episode 3, "Locked in the Tower"; Episode 4, "Smoked Out"; Episode 5, "The Mock Bride."

As the "Lure of the Circus" indicates, the Eddie Polo story will be a circus serial. As a matter of fact, this Universal player was formerly one of the most famous of circus acrobats and it was because of his work with a big tanbark aggregation that he attracted the attention of Universal officials.

Although no definite release date for "The Lure of the Circus" has yet been set, it will follow close upon the heels of "The Brass Bullet"—probably within a few weeks after the first episode of the latter serial has been issued.

Dog in Essanay's Feature Doubles Just Like Humans

The doubling of an actor in a scene is an old story to film folk, but it was left for Essanay to double with a dog. This is done in the George K. Spoor feature, "Young America," now being produced at the Essanay studios in Chicago.

It required infinite patience on the part of Director Berthel as well as the dog's master, Charles Frohman Everett, who plays the lead in the picture, to accomplish the result. It was wellnigh impossible to keep the dog in the same position long enough to register accurately, although the canine has been trained with infinite care by its young master.

After nearly a score of retakes the scene was finally completed, and it is believed to be the first scene ever presented in which a dog doubles for itself. The picture is taken from the Cohan and Harris production written by Fred Ballard, and which had a great stage success recently. It will be seven reels in length.

Pathe Summer Program Avoids the Heavy Stuff

PATHE announces that the plan for summer programs will be happily devoid of "heavy stuff." The big features to be released in July and August are for the most part light comedies, although there are two serious plays in the list.

"The Girl from Bohemia" will be released on August 25 and it is a rather notable Pathe play for the reason that it may mean the working of Irene Castle's retirement from the screen.

There will be another feature play released on the program for the week of Sept. 1, but for the week of September 8 the fall season will be inducted with a big special, "The Woman Eternal," starring Elaine Hammerstein.

No Vacation for Harold Lloyd

Harold Lloyd's comedies will continue without interruption this summer, it is announced by Pathe. Robin studios do not expect to take a vacation, but will keep the respective noses of Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard to the studio grindstone.

Two New Faces in Paramount Issue

Two faces new to Paramount will be seen in the next Scene: Sessue Hayakawa, "The City of Dim Faces," written by Frances Marion and directed by George Melford; and William S. Hart, well known to screen patrons, and Doris Pown, a young woman who has been starred by other companies in popular productions.

San Franciscans Greet Clara Kimball Young

Clara Kimball Young, in accordance with the schedule of activities following the completion of "The Savages," at the Lasky studio, Hollywood, appeared on July 2 at the California theater, San Francisco. The conclusion was an added impetus to stimulating recruiting activities and also the first of Miss Young's appearances in her tour of the western coast on her return trip to New York. Miss Young's reception was one of the most enthusiastic welcomed ever accorded a player in the city.

In honor of her appearance at the theater, the parking street in which fifty automobiles carried many naval officials and prominent citizens. The parade was held in the presence of over one hundred instruments. The crowd which gathered in front of the theater seeking admittance after the doors had been closed on a capacity house was so great that the traffic police had difficulty in restoring order.

Miss Young's next appearance will be in Portland, Ore., and following that she will visit T. A. Seckman, and S. W. H. Rudolph, Miss Young's personal publicity representative, accompanied by Miss Alexander, her manager, have gone ahead to supervise all arrangements for her appearance at the various theaters.

Mix's Boys Do a Shooting Bit

American hatred for the Kaiser was given an exhibition the other day at the William Fox studios in Hollywood, Cal., during the filming of "Kultur," a big film which is being done by Fox director, Edward J. Le Saint, has just finished, with Gladys Bradley in the lead. All the scenes took place in the council chamber of the German Emperor, and in the center of the room was the Kaiser himself, on the desk.

After all the scenes in which this set was needed had been completed a bunch of cowboys from the Mix company, who happened by, walked across the stage and emptied every chamber of their six-shooters into the face of the All Highest. The painting was riddled by bullets.

In "Kultur" Miss Brockwell appears in the role of the Counta von Abenberg, and reports from the West Coast state that the picture is one of the most powerful ever to be yet produced. The story deals partially with the secret intrigues of Germany in forcing Austria to begin the world conflict by attacking Serbia.

J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton were the directors and the scenario was done by Mr. Alexander.

Big Demand for "Hypocrites."

The announcement that General Film Company would take over the distribution of the George Loane Tucker feature, "The Hypocrites," has been followed by a flood of bookings, General reports. From indications at hand, it is expected this feature production, which is declared to be among the best work done by Mr. Tucker, will score a success, especially in the larger cities, where the advertising value of the name of the producer is fully appreciated by the trade. Bookings in such cities as New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, San Francisco, Detroit and Washington are unusually good.

Preparations have been made by General Film to place an intensive sales campaign in the back of the production, which officials of the company believe is due the photoplay because of its great artistic merit and the entertainment qualities. Elizabeth Risdon, the star, is already a big drawing card, and in this production, which is based on the famous stage play of the same name by Sir Henry Arthur Jones, is expected to score the hit of her career.

Probably with the idea of duplicating the hit registered at the Rivoli in Broadway, New York, where it had its premiere, "More Trouble," the Pathé Play in which Frank Keenan stars, has been booked at a top price by the management of the Rivoli in San Francisco. Other big bookings are reported by Pathé branch managers in all large cities.

Pathé's publicity department has issued a campaign book de luxe for the use of exhibitors, and in this volume are reproduced the splendid notices afforded the picture by the critics in New York. An elaborate layout of display advertising suggestions has also been issued, with the result that in twelve cities exhibitors booking "More Trouble" have largely increased their usual space for this showing.

Baby Marie in "Cupid by Proxy" Starts July 21

Cupid by Proxy," in which Baby Marie Osborn is starred, heads the Pathé program No. 208, released July 21. "Cupid by Proxy" is an elemental comedy with a strong romantic flavor. It concerns two families who live side by side. The comic comes to one of them with its social aspirations which threaten to disrupt a romance. Baby Marie has a delightfully ingenuous role and of course there is a happy ending. The picture will have a wide appeal to the army of admirers of the little star.

The final and concluding chapter of Pathé's serial "The House of Hate" is released on this program. It is called "Following Old Glory." The Hooded Terror is not only further identified, but a just retribution overtakes him and the members of his gang. The episode ends somewhere in France, where Pearl as an ambulance driver and Antonio Moreno, the hero in khaki, are united.

There is a big comedy knockout on the program in "Kicking the Germ Out" with Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard. Harold Lloyd is a warrior in the trenches and his rough treatment of the Huns will be sure of a laugh. How he manages to reach Berlin in time to save the beautiful Red Cross nurse in the person of Bebe Daniels and how he acts up rough with the Kaiser and the rest of the Huns is told in a swift moving and entirely inoffensive way.

Part 11 of "Britain's Bulwarks" is titled "The Canadians on the Western Front." There are several exciting scenes presented with marching troops, prisoners and front line activities of the brave Canadians in this installment.

The Allies Official War Review will contain up-to-the-minute battle pictures from the American, British, French and Italian fronts.

"East Indians of Trinidad" is the title of the Post Travel Series, one reeler, on this program, and in the Hearst-Pathé News No. 60 and No. 61 late war films and topical news subjects will be included as usual.

Ebeny to Use Mixed Casts.

Luther J. Pollard, general manager of the Ebony Film Corporation, of Chicago, whose comedies are enacted by an all-colored cast released regularly on the General Film program, announces that the next series of Ebony comedies will be a departure from the usual custom of producing one-instrumental as the first comic, will be enacted by a mixed cast of white and negro comedians, the negro humor still predominating.

Three of the liveliest and best laugh-festas produced by this company have just been completed at the Windy City studio and ready to be shipped to the General Film Company in New York. The first subject is "When You Hit, Hit Hard." This was prepared for the screen by Bob Horner, scenario editor, from a story by William H. Rice. Beside this, Director Charles David wrote and produced the two other subjects, "Champion by the Flower-Pot Route" and "Unfinished Finish," which features Sam Robinson, Elmer Brown, Yvonne Junior, Samuel Jacks, and a large supporting cast. Plans for an advertising campaign on a larger scale is well under way.

Irene Castle in "The First Law."

"The First Law" will be released by Pathé as the big feature of the program for Sunday, July 21. Irene Castle is starred and Antonio Moreno featured in this tense, shocker, based on the novel of the popular novel by Gilson Willets.
Hodkinson Calls for Twenty Representatives

O NE of the most significant moves in the business is claimed by the Wr. Wr., Hodkinson Corporation in its call for twenty salesmen to join its forces and not only sell Hodkinson services but also push the Hodkinson gospel of "responsibility to the exhibitor and a fair deal in every way."

"This is just an old ad," said Mr. Hodkinson in commenting on the announcement which appears in the advertisements appearing in the trade papers this week. "The wording and you will see that we are not simply engaging men. We are in fact recruiting a picked army for an offensive which we are contemplating.

"Every big reform movement encounters obstacles. The bigger and more sincere the endeavor the harder the task is why we want men with moral courage in addition to other qualifications—cannot be stamped by present conditions no matter how menacing.

"This is the reason we must have men with foresight, men who can see what we stand for—who can appreciate why we are different than any other organization in the field.

"We do not expect the ordinary average film man to see this distinction, and this is why our appeal is only to the biggest of the business who are in fact looking for the very opportunity which I was looking for ten years ago."

"And when I entered this business and which I did not find.

"The men who join us will be those who can see that our principles are right, and that the recognition of this industry is correct and inevitable, and knowing this they are eager to join us in those full ride on the crest of the wave that is steadily gathering in size and strength.

"When we call these men salesmen representatives that is only a partial description so they will be our connecting link with the exhibitor. They will only sell our product on a fair and square business basis, but they will also, out of a sense of responsibility to the exhibitors, assist him to their fullest capacity in making a success of the product they sell him.

"We have a snapshot of each of these men, and are willing and anxious to remunerate them in accordance. We do not want failures, chronic change-outs, or transients, but we do want clean hearted, clear headed, far-sighted men.

Universal to Reissue "Scandal" as "Scandal Mongers"

F ROM Universal comes the announcement that arrangements have been completed to issue a revised version of Lois Weber's sensational production, "Scandal." Under the new title of "Scandal Mongers," this subject, which excited such wide comment and which was the forerunner of features similar in theme, is to be the new release.

Released in its original form in 1915, "Scandal Mongers" represented the screen's first attack on the histrionic elements in the news media, while providing entertainment. How well it succeeded is evidenced by the success it scored and by the booking demand that resulted.

The picture was notable for another reason. It was the first screen pictures which Lois Weber was to produce for Universal, and at the relations which exist between studio and film company. Universal have continued with but a brief period uninterrupted since the release of this subject.

"Scandal's" popularity that caused Miss Weber to favor stories which contained this theme and discovered that such pictures present a powerful appeal to the mind while also appealing to the heart caused her to special to upon pictures of this type. "The Price of a Good Time," "Idle Wives" and "Even As You and...

In "Wedlock" Louise Glaum Has Story That's Different

LOUISE GLAUM's latest production, "Wedlock," is the third Para Play in which she has appeared. The picture was directed by Wallace Worsley. It is an original story from the pen of Denison Clift, who has contributed many successful stories to the silent drama, and in this play he has furnished Miss Glaum with an entirely different kind of role from anything in which she has heretofore appeared.

Before Miss Glaum joined Para it was popularly known as "The Preacher's Vampire," but under the new management it is appearing in roles where this element does not appear. On the other hand, she is appearing in roles which, through strong, emotional acting, she is enabled to gain the sympathy of her audience. The decision was a wise one and the dramatic and emotional ability which she displays in "Wedlock" is a revelation to her old admirers. The very fabric and strength of the story of "Wedlock" rests upon the woman's nobility of character. Few stories have been written which show this element so strongly for a woman star, and in this one it is emphasized by the ingenious contrast brought in by the author.

It is the opinion of dramatic critics that Miss Glaum shows a play strong emotional parts, giving scope for her wide range of histrionic powers. Hitherto, these "strong" parts have been in the nature of sex problems, or in some way connected with the crosser side of human nature. In "Wedlock," the strength is there in abundance, but it is the strength of the character's great nobility and fine spirit.

Universal Issues Campaign Book.

Full of valuable and practical ideas on various ways of merchandising "The Brass Bullet," Universal's forthcoming serial featuring Jack Mulhall and Juanita Hansen, is the campaign book just issued on this subject by that company.

Claiming the distinction of having issued the first exhibitor help book on serials, Universal has strained to make them of the utmost possible use to showmen. Its latest campaign book is no exception to the rule and exhibitors booking "The Brass Bullet" will find it a mine of information which should aid them greatly in putting the serial over.

Fifty Newspapers Print Post Travels.

More than fifty newspapers throughout the United States are now cooperating with Pathe and the Post Film Company in the exhibition of the Post Travel Series. The numbers to be released this summer are No. 6, "East Indians of Trinidad;" No. 7, "East Indians of British Guiana;" No. 8, "Venezuela;" No. 9, "La Guayra to Caracas." There are fifty subjects in all to be released.

Pathé's Toto Comedies for August.

One-reels released by Pathé for Rolin, with Toto starred, will be as follows this summer: July 23, "Beach Nuts;" August 11, "Do Husbands Deceive?;" August 25, "Nipped in the Bud."
Arrow Has Ambitious Program for Next Four Weeks

Announces Seven New Features in Addition to Several One and Two Reel Reissues. Also to Issue a Monthly Bulletin for State Right Exchanges.

During the next four weeks the Arrow Film Corporation will offer several single and two-reel reissues, together with seven new productions varying in length from five to seven reels. Of this number thirty single reel and ten two-reel Warren Kerrigan subjects and four Allison-Lockwood subjects, each in five reels, have already been announced.

In connection with the enlarging of activities a monthly bulletin will be issued which will contain advertising matter in connection with each production, advertising and exploitation taken care of by J. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, reports from local men, and other items of interest to state rights buyers. This bulletin will be mailed gratis to state rights exchange men.

J. E. Shallenberger also announces he has made a change in the method of terri-torial division so as to call for a minimum number of prints on each attraction in the belief that exchanges should be protected in the same way they invest in a production, and if the demand compels the use of additional prints the exchanges can be guided accordingly.

Gaumont Shows Buyers First Half of Serial

The twenty-reel Gaumont serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," is now ready, and during the past week the first five episodes were shown to a number of independent buyers who are said to have been most enthusiastic in their praise. Exhibitors have been writing and telegraphing the Gaumont Company at Flushing for several weeks, requesting terms. This unique serial, which will be released only through independent exchanges, is said to be full of pep, life, and lustre. The characters are all red-blooded, the situations tense, and the action fast, all of which make the serial one which is sure to be a drawing card. The serial is ready for the first half of the series, and will be completed by the first of August.

Export Official Aids in Selecting Serial Title

In the controversy as to the most appropriate title for the sixteen episode serial now being filmed by Western Photo Play, Mr. J. R. McElligott, the expert on titles, has devised a system of selecting the export rights on this production.

Mr. McElligott believes that the selection of serial title has its importance, and in the foreign markets, such as Calcutta, Tokio, and Johannesburg, success often depends to a great extent of the psychology of the title, as a wrong title might arouse the antipathy of natives or officials. He is therefore collaborating heartily with Miss Baird in her search for an appropriate world-wide title, and in some instances has sent cablegrams to foreign motion picture centers along the same lines as the messages sent to exhibitors in this country.

Brady’s “Stolen Orders” Moves to Lyric Theater

The William A. Brady spy picture, “Stolen Orders,” after a successful four weeks’ run at the Park theater, New York, has been moved to the heart of the theatrical district, and opened for an indefinite run at the Lyric theater.

With its demonstration of the manner in which secret agents operate, showing that people in all walks of life are often apparently innocently made a part of a dangerous plot, the presentation of many unique and thrilling episodes, together with the fact that it is interpreted by a cast of several hundred people, including four stars, it is said to be proving an even greater box office magnet in its new home.

In addition to the New York engagement this production will shortly be seen in other theaters, among them Poli’s theater, Washington, where it will open for a week’s engagement commencing July 7.

“Your Fighting Navy” Now Ready for Buyers

The Educational Films Corporation announces that prints of its patriotic naval picture, “Your Fighting Navy” at Wyoming National Bank, are available for State Right buyers. Since its completion, several months have been spent in the making of the picture, including filming, editing, and titling, making a forceful picture. Special care has been given to the selection of the various key sequences, to the subtle handling of the plot, and to the selection of the cuts and the united effort of the producer.

“Mexico Today,” George D. Wright’s series of one-reelers descriptive of conditions in the Southern republic, is receiving many new bookings on account of the interest in Mexican affairs. The series has been edited by President Skinner of the Educational Films Corporation.
